'Frisco's Destitute.

Work and Play.

She who works, then stops to play,
Will live to work full many a day,
But she who never plays at all
Her days for work will prove but small.

Medicines Adulterated.

Ottawa, June 1.—Hon. Wm. Templeman presided at the special committee on patent medicines yesterday. Dr. Dube, professor at Laval, was examined. He said that about 75 per cent. of standard drugs were adulterated. This was owing to the keen competition in the business. The doctor was opposed to the sale of patent medicines. He thought the Government should have all patent medicines analyzed so that it would be known what they contained.

Disgrace and Death.

London, June 1.—"I will never see you again in daylight," said Levi Fletcher, a Byron farmer, to his wife. This followed his confession of unfaithfulness, but for which his wife had forgiven him. Yesterday morning at 5 o'clock he went out to the barn, and when he did not return for some time, his wife sought him, only to find him dead, with his neck cut on both sides. He was 32 and well-to-do.

Under Advisement.

Toronto, June 1.—The Railway Commissioners have taken the Board of Trade complaints of discrimination by the railways against Toronto under advisement. This was done at the conclusion of the evidence and arguments by Peleg Howland for the Board of Trade, Hon. A. G. Blair, K. C., for the C. P. R., and F. H. Cryster, K. C., for the Grand Trunk.

A Bomb For King and Queen

Exploded Between Hindmost Horses and Front Wheels of the Royal Carriage.

Sixteen Persons, Most Of Them Being of the Personal and Military Escort of the Royal Pair, and Other Spectators Were Killed—The Miscreant Arrested—The Wedding Ceremony, Earlier in the Day, Was Attended By Royal Pomp.

Madrid, June 1.—The public rejoicings over the marriage of King Alfonso and Princess Victoria had a terribly dramatic sequel at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, as a bomb thrown from an upper window exploded with deadly effect near the coach occupied by the King and Queen. Providentially, King Alfonso and Queen Victoria escaped by an electric wire deflecting the bomb, but at least 16 persons, most of them being of the personal and military escort, and others, spectators, were killed. Many others were injured.

An official statement indicates a possibility that two bombs were thrown, one exploding in the air by striking a telegraph wire, and the other falling so close to the royal carriage that a groom at the head of the wheel horses was killed, as also were the wheel horses.

The Killed.

Captain Barrios, commanding part of the King's escort, Lieutenant Reysient, Lieutenant Prendergast, six soldiers, the Marquise of Celosa and her daughter, Don Antonio Calvo and his niece, aged 6 years, Jose Sola, 70 years of age, Luis Fonseca.

One royal groom, who was leading a horse drawing the coach carrying the King and Queen.

Several of those killed were standing on the balcony of the house from which the bomb was thrown. The explosion occurred just as the royal couple were about to enter the palace, shaking the buildings in the vicinity, stunning a large number of people, and throwing the cortege into inextricable confusion.

King and Queen Safe.

The royal coach was brought to a sudden stop by the shock, officers and soldiers of the escort falling to the ground about the equerry and horses that had been killed. The screams of the terrified multitude mingled with the groans of the dying.

It was immediately seen that the royal coach was intact, except as it had been damaged by flying splinters. King Alfonso immediately alighted and assisted Queen Victoria out of the carriage. They then entered another coach and were driven swiftly to the palace.

In the meantime the scene of the tragedy presented a horrible spectacle, with dead men and horses lying about, literally torn to pieces. Intense excitement prevailed.

Miscreant Captured.

The place from which the bomb was thrown is a boarding house. The chamber from which the missle was hurled was taken May 22 by a man from Barcelona, giving the name of Manual. When the police surrounded the house the man attempted to flee but was captured. Another man escaped over the roofs of houses.

One of the injured proved to be a son-in-law of Premier Moret's private secretary.

Concealed in Bouquet.

An official statement says: The bomb which was concealed in a bouquet, was of polished steel half a centimeter thick. It was thrown from a third floor window. The house is opposite the Church of the Sacrament and the captain-general's residence.

The royal procession had come to a temporary halt with the royal carriage exactly opposite the house when the bomb was thrown.

The missle fell to the right of the royal carriage, between the hindmost pair of horses and the front pair of wheels.

Courageous But in Tears.

The Duke of Cornacheueles immediately pushed open the carriage and helped out the King and then the Queen, who showed signs of the greatest emotion. Both, however, behaved with the utmost courage. They entered another carriage and the procession was resumed. On their arrival at the royal palace, it was noticed that the King and Queen both were in tears. They were quickly surrounded by foreign princes, each anxious to show sympathy and offer congratulations on the miraculous escape.

The indignation of the people over the outrage was great.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.
ENA IS QUEEN OF SPAIN.

Magnificent Wedding—Brilliant Spectacle in Streets of Madrid—Crowd Cheered and Showered Flowers.

Madrid, June 1.—The marriage of King Alfonso to Princess Ena Victoria was celebrated yesterday.

The city awoke yesterday under a cloudless sky with dazzling sunshine adding its glories to the bewildering maze of color in which the streets were enveloped. At 8 o'clock crowds densely packed the main thoroughfares and the troops took up their positions, stopping all traffic, and the whole city took on an air of feverish expectancy. The esplanade fronting the royal palace was occupied by regiments of the Royal Guards. All along the route of the cortege hurried preparations were going on. Troops lined both sides of the streets in solid ranks for miles. The scene from the Puerto Del Sol to the Pardo Palace was one of striking brilliancy. All the buildings were resplendent with the yellow and red colors of Spain. The population of Madrid had turned out in a body and was augmented to twice its usual size by visitors from the country and neighboring towns.

The Bride's Arrival.

Princess Victoria came from the Pardo Palace to Madrid early in the morning, accompanied by her mother, Princess Henry of Battenberg, and her ladies of honor, and escorted by a regiment of the Royal Guards. The bride's party was installed in the Ministry of Marine, which had been sumptuously prepared for her. There the princess put on her wedding dress and

The Disfranchisement Proposal.

The Montreal Gazette does not view with approval the proposition that men who fail to vote at a parliamentary election shall be disfranchised for a term of years. There are, the Gazette says "three ways of looking on the right to vote. It may be a duty, a privilege or a right. If it is a duty, it is ridiculous to punish failure to discharge it on one occasion by making it impossible for the delinquent to discharge it on another. If it is a privilege it is not the concern of any other man whether the holder exercises it or not. If it is a right it is not lightly to be taken away by those who have only power to justify their act. If it is a compound of duty, privilege and right, it is still something the man to whom it pertains should be master over. Then there is no good purpose to be served by disfranchising anybody of presumed intelligence and respectability. The men who are habitually active in connection with elections are to be commended, particularly when they are moved by public spirit. Neither they nor any for them have the right, however, to create their kind into a close corporation and to exclude another class from its proper influence in shaping the laws and destinies of the country all of whose burdens are equally shared. If there was any such right, it is one that should never be used. It has to be admitted that there is much in politics that does not tend to create enthusiastic interest in public life. Even leading men are inclined to impute evil motives and suggest improper reasons for the actions of their opponents. There are others again who by the natural inclination of their minds are kept from actively exerting themselves in public affairs. Then, again, there are those who as long as things are going along fairly well are satisfied that the Government of the day shall continue to administer the country's business. They may not vote for the party in office, but they do not vote against it. It is among the classes of men thus described that the power of deciding election contests lies, whenever they choose to put it forth. It is to them that effective appeal can be made when a great wrong is to be punished or a useful principle is to be established. They are the hope of the opposition, especially. The opposition party that would deliberately seek to eliminate them as a factor in a political contest would be doing a mad thing. The Government represents at least a past majority of those who have gone or been driven to the polls. Any law that is in operation would tend to restrict to those who have previously voted the right to vote again would also tend to maintain the conditions which created the Government of the day. That would be foolishness from the minority's point of view, and would not be wisdom from the country's. It would work to take away an unprejudiced element from the Court of Appeal, before which the party in power has periodically to appear. In no broad way is this disfranchisement proposal to be approved of. It is begotten of a narrowness of view that it regrettable to note, and that would be dangerous if incorporated into the law.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Good evening. Have you seen a June bride yet?

* * *

There should be no shortage of dandelion wine this year.

* * *

The new crusher, we are told, is a "jaw" crusher, just as if there wasn't enough jaw connected with the corporation already.

* * *

People who claim to know, and have counted 'em up, say there will be no less than thirty weddings in this city this month.

* * *

Dear me! The sky pilots may have to work overtime.

* * *

Cheer up and don't get nervous. Perhaps those fireworks this a. m. were in honor of Alfonso and Ena's wedding.

* * *

Fifteen more days and you can catch bass, providing, of course, you can find 'em.

* * *

Most of us, however, will keep right on, this summer, catching the gamey sunfish and perch, ranging in weight all the way from two to six ounces.

* * *

However, when Mr. Hurley looks at them through a magnifying glass he'll be able to tell the Ottawa Government about the "wonderful" catches that are made in the Bay of Quinte.

* * *

The facts presented by Mr. A. Kelly Evans and others at the Fish and Game Protective Association meeting last night should make every well-balanced man stop and think. This matter of fish and game protection is not a matter of sentiment—it is a matter of extreme self-interest to every resident of Canada. Read the report of the meeting, in another column, and then ask yourself if it is not "up to you" to aid the work which the O F. and G. Protective Association are doing? This, it must be remembered, is a matter which requires co-operation, and everybody can do something.

* * *

A Pennsylvania doctor went to Florida in search of health and got a bride. Perhaps the next time he goes out for his health he'll get a divorce.

* * *

Most married men will be glad that, when their nuptials came off, they were not quite so strenuous as King Alfonso's appear to have been to-day.

* * *

Hon. Mr. Fielding has delivered ten budgets, and the hide-bound Grits are firmly convinced they class with the Ten Commandments.

* * *

Sunday next, June 3, will be the fortieth anniversary of the day when gallant Belleville boys started for Prescott to meet the Fenians, had the latter carried out their intention of crossing the St. Lawrence at that point. The Intelligencer will to-morrow publish a sketch of the stirring times in Belleville forty years ago, together with the names of the officers and men who went to the front on that memorable and historic occasion. Veterans and their relatives should not fail to get a copy of this number and send one to relatives in other places.

* * *

A man charged with bigamy in Cleveland pleaded insanity. Reasonable enough, as a sassy Buffalo editor says.

* * *

A New York waiter has inherited $200,000. Will any patron dare to remember him now with a paltry quarter or half?

* * *

The son of a Pittsburg millionaire has just married his mother's French maid. Were there no chorus girls in town?

* * *

A Brooklyn judge has sentenced a burglar to 40 years in prison. This should hold him for a while.

* * *

A New York man is charged with stealing a typewriter. It's a wonder she didn't scream.

* * *

A Minneapolis preacher discoursed on "What to do with Gold" and never once counseled his hearers to get bills for it.

* * *

A Buffalo man is contesting his wife's will because she left him only an automobile. She should have left him some gasolene, also.

* * *

Somebody writes to the Peterboro Review and asks the following pertinent and, perhaps (to some people) rather awkward question:

Sir, — I would like to ask. Is it stealing to take a fish out of season? If so, is not the one who cooks the fish guilty of receiving stolen goods? And if grace is asked at table, is it strictly in accordance with the spirit of things, right, honest and of good report.

Yours, etc.,

ANGLER.

* * *

Kingston Whig; Belleville wants gas extensions and is debating what it should do. There is only one course—issue debentures and raise capital account or rob the current account. Kingston's experience over again.

* * *

Belleville bridegrooms will be just as well pleased that the fashion, of getting bombs on one's wedding day, set by King Alfonso yesterday is not likely to spread in Canada.

TOO MUCH TO EXPECT.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

Each man in Cap. Bernier's ship was expected to eat 15 pounds 5 ounces of solid food each day, to say nothing of the chocolate, sweets, honey, oysters, champagne, port tinned fruits, pickles and rum. That was too much to expect of ordinary men.

* * *

No true man or woman can help feeling sorry for that poor young couple over in Spain who had such an awful experience yesterday. Good Queen Victoria's granddaughter has gotten her baptism of fire. A queer creed, indeed, must be that of those wild beasts, the anarchists. It is to be hoped there may, as a result of this outrage, soon be a few less of them in the world.

Medals Presented At the Institute.

OFFICIAL EXAMINER GAVE ADDRESS TO PUPILS YESTERDAY —A HAPPY SURPRISE TO THREE PUPILS.

Is it not Holmes who said that fame usually comes to those who think of something else? At all events, of this we are sure that where there is enthusiasm progress will have its way. The reflection comes to our pen from a most pleasing function which gave the Institute, yesterday, an air of "fete." Dr. Spankie, of Kingston, who had been conducting examinations this week, concluded his duties by an address to the assembled school. Before he began, however, half a dozen little maids, all dressed in white, recited two short pieces, their cherub faces and tiny gestures expressing more than ever words could have done. Some of the larger girls also gave a recitation with much expression and grace. Then Dr. Spankie, the official examiner, who is a man of broad sympathies, yet of keen views on matters and men, rose and spoke delightfully, drawing with abundance from the law of kindness, the advice he gave the scholars, both in the moral and material order, must have found a deep, abiding place in their thoughts. The work of the session he unreservedly commended and urged upon those who were not to return to let their future life breathe something of the care and spirit with which they had here been trained. To all he counselled going out into the wild close to nature to have their strength renewed, so they might, in the fall, return with body and mind thrilling with added force. Mr. Mathison followed with words of characteristic apropos, thanking Dr. Spankie for what he had said, yet calling on all not to rest content with past efforts, but to aim at still greater goals. Then came a most happy surprise in the presentation of three gold and silver medals, one of which the gift of Hon. J. R. Stratton, to the three most meritorious pupils, who proved to be Miss Annetta Johnston, Miss Violet Gray and Master A. Lobsinger. These unexpected honors were very graciously acknowledged by the blushing recipients, whilst cheer after cheer went up from their schoolmates in emphatic approval. At the request of Dr. Spankie, all were granted a "conge," which to the infantile ever means a fairer world and joy supreme.

AN OLD SAYING.

Showing How Cause and Effect Are Never Far Removed.

It is an old saying "Where there's honey there's bees" — not less true is one which science has coined more recently, "Where there's Dandruff there's germs." —and—to push the inference still further we may truly say "Where there's Dandruff cured Newbro's Herpicide has been at work."

The reason of Herpicide's isolation as a genuine cure for Dandruff lies in the fact that it attacks and destroys the root of the whole trouble a parasitic germ which feeds upon the material which nourishes the hair follicle.

Other so-called remedies are not directed at this true cause of the disease.

Accept no substitute, there is none.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Phil Lott Was Popular With His Neighbors

PRESENTED WITH ADDRESS, PURSE AND OTHER ARTICLES OF VALUE ON EVE OF HIS DEPARTURE FOR THE WEST.

It was noted in these columns, a day or two ago, that Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Lott and family would shortly leave for the west. One evening recently a lot of Phil's neighbors and friends gathered at his house and presented him with the following address, together with the articles mentioned in it:

To Mr. and Mrs. Philip Lott and family,—

For some time it has been known in this vicinity, that you had decided to remove from our midst to take up your abode in Saskatchewan—the breezy plains of the west.

As you have always made your residence in this neighborhood, the people have become well known to and acquainted with you.

Since the departure of any citizen should elicit some token of good will, so the people of this community have, through this feeling, deemed it a duty to give to you something as an appreciation of good-will and esteem.

As a suitable evidence of these sentiments, your friends, neighbors and acquaintances, ask you to accept this biscuit jar, clock, and purse, which we earnestly hope will serve as an appropriate and permanent memento of the people of this neighborhood, the scene of your younger years.

The country to which you are removing abounds in abundant prospects, and we unite in heartily wishing you success and prosperity in the great west—the promised land of Canada.

Signed on behalf of your friends,
MRS. WM. POTTS.
MR. THOS. RUPERT.

Highest Bridge in the World

Colorado will possess, within a few months the highest bridge in the world over the deepest chasm in the Rocky Mountains. The bridge is being constructed over the far-famed Royal Gorge of the Arkansas River, and the Royal Gorge is the narrowest point in the also phenomonally famous scenic Grand Canon of the same stream—the great gate, as it were, through which the Arkansas River empties its enormous accretions of water, very soon after they have been gathered from the melting snows 150 miles above, in the vicinity of Leadville, on to the plain once known as "The Great American Desert." At the point in the Royal Gorge where the bridge is to be stretched, the abyssmal rent in the earth's crust is but fifty feet wide at the bottom and 230 feet wide at the top. The walls rise almost perpendicularly for a distance of 2,660 feet, and are granite, decomposed and iron-stained until the colorings blend into innumerable pleasing effects upon the senses. The bridge will be built of steel and glass.

Saved By a Barber.

Deseronto Tribune; A Deseronto tonsorial artist, James Cole, was walking in his garden in the cool of Sunday evening when his attention was attracted to a blaze. Vaulting the fence he sped to the scene, Councillor D. L. Brown's hen-house. Last year's Christmas tree had been thrown on the roof and a stray spark from some chimney did the rest. He climbed to the roof and grasping the tree firmly by the trunk, held it aloft in all its blazing beauty, and he probably saved the north end of Mill street from a conflagration which might have proven serious.

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

SPORTING NOTES.

Weather permitting, a baseball match will be played on the Hospital lot to-morrow afternoon. The teams will be representatives of Marsh & Henthorn's and the Lock Factory.

"Reddy" McMillan will play lacrosse with his native town, Cornwall, this summer.

Efforts are being made to boom baseball in this city at present, and there is a good prospect that, with proper financial support, a good nine could be placed in the field. The sinews of war are lacking. Who will assist?

A record fish story is told by one of Izaak Walton's followers in this city. A day or two ago a gentleman undertook to initiate three three young ladies into the mysteries of the art to which he is so devoted, and the party spent some two hours in a small boat near the Bay Bridge. The result demonstrated not only the ability of the instructor and cleverness of the young ladies, but also the obliging disposition of Bay of Quinte fish. The catch was over one hundred.

PLAN REFUGE FOR AGED ORANGEMEN

GRAND ORANGE LODGE ADOPTS PROPOSITION — DR. SPROULE, M.P., WAS ELECTED M. W. GRAND MASTER FOR FIFTH TIME.

Toronto, June 1.—At the concluding session of the Grand Orange Lodge of British America in Victoria Hall last night the proposition to found a home for aged Orangemen was adopted, and the Executive Committee was empowered to select a location. About $100,000 will be raised to endow this establishment, and it will be named the N. Clarke Wallace Memorial Home. In the election of officers Dr. T. S. Sproule, M.P., was for the fifth time elected Grand Master, the position being tendered him by acclamation. The recommendation of the Grand Master to form a Protestant federation for all Canada was endorsed by the Committee on Correspondence, and Dr. Sproule was authorized to nominate a committee, draft a constitution and make other necessary provisions for the league. It will embrace all the Protestant organizations in the country. The members unanimously decided to hold the next meeting of the Grand Lodge at Vancouver, B.C.

The feature of the day's session was the discussion in regard to the organization of the North West Territories and the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. W. Bro. Fred Dane, the County Master of Toronto, asked that an appropriation of $1,000 be again made for this purpose. Thirteen new lodges had been organized as a result of the grant last year, he said. The provincial lodges of Eastern Canada were able to look after their own organization, but in the West, owing to the vast distances to be traversed and the sparseness of settlers the Supreme Lodge should superintend the work there. The immigrants settling in those districts would make them another Quebec.

Grand Master Sproule said that he had laid down the rule to grant $25 to every lodge organized with 15 members. Most of the money had gone to Western lodges. The lodges in the East did not require so great pecuniary assistance, as they were being formed in a country which was more wealthy and longer settled.

The members voted the $1,000 asked for, and the money is to be expended under the supervision of the Grand Master.

The motion to increase the salary of the secretary from $500 to $800 was defeated, on the ground that no plan for increasing the funds had been adopted. The proposal to grant Hamilton $200 as a contribution to the new Orange Hall there was also rejected.

The Grand Master was instructed to secure special rates on the railways for the delegates attending the Grand Lodge at Vancouver, B.C., in 1907.

Bro. Robert Burns instructed the delegates regarding the coming session of the Triennial Council in July. Delegates will be present from the Grand Lodges of England, Ireland, Scotland, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

The following were elected officers: Most Worshiptul Grand Master, Dr. T. S. Sproule, M.P.; Deputy Grand Master, William Galbraith, Montreal; Grand Chaplain, Rev. William Walsh, Brampton; Grand Treasurer, W. J. Parkhill, Midland; Grand Secretary, W. M. Lockhart, Alliston; Grand Lecturer, James Harper, Hamilton; Grand Director of Ceremonies, Capt. T. G. A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

Men who face death to achieve fame not in the line of duty are to be pitied.

Some people are merely the table decorations at the feast of reason.

Put up a good front and you won't be talked about behind your back. they know it.

Bad men are apt to make themselves scarce. Good men are already scarce.

While it may be just and right that a man should be humiliated, no right feeling man will rejoice at it.

THINK BEFORE YOU SPEAK.

If you are tempted to reveal
A tale some one has told
About another, make it pass
Before you speak three gates of gold.
Three narrow gates—first, "Is it true?"
Then "Is it needful?" In your mind
Give truthful answer, and the next
Is last and narrowest, "Is it kind?"
And if to reach your lips at last
It passes through these gateways three,
Then you may tell the tale nor fear
What the result of speech may be.

THIS IS NOT COMIC OPERA.

But Feudal England in the Twentieth Century.

Mr. Alfred Couldrey of Dunton Green, near Sevenoaks, England, has recently had an extraordinary experience of the feudal system of land tenure, which still exists in that country. Last year he purchased a small estate of two and a half acres at Dunton Green for £1,700. It is situated in the Manor of Otford, the lord of which is Earl Amherst. The estate is held under what is known as "customary freehold," and the lord of the manor is entitled to a heriot on every change of tenancy. As the heriot he may seize the tenant's best live beast or in the absence of a beast he is entitled to the modest fine of 3s. 6d.

The "customary freeholder" from whom Mr. Couldrey bought the property, says Truth, possessed no beast, and consequently Earl Amherst only got the 3s. 6d.

A short time ago Mr. Couldrey sold half an acre of the land for £130. A few days later he received a visit from Earl Amherst's deputy steward, Mr. Knocker. A horse and trap was standing in the yard, and Mr. Couldrey was asked if the horse were his.

He replied in the affirmative, whereupon the deputy steward cut some hairs from the horse's mane, and, placing his hand on its shoulder, said: "This horse is now the property of Lord Amherst."

The deputy steward's action actually made Earl Amherst the owner of the horse. Mr. Couldrey was allowed to redeem it on payment of £11 11s.

If he had kept a motor car instead of a horse he would only have had to pay 3s. 6d. instead of £11 11s.

In a recent interesting book on "The Manor and Manorial Records," Mr. Nathaniel J. Hone mentions a case in 1827, in which a lord of the manor seized as a tenant's best beast a racehorse worth between £2,000 and £3,000.

In some manors not only a live beast, but any of the tenant's goods and chattels may be taken as a heriot, and it is related that Sir Robert Peel was at one time apprehensive that a valuable picture of his (a Rubens now in the National Gallery) would be seized as the customary heriot for which he was liable as the copyhold tenant of a certain manor. Sir Robert averted the danger by purchasing the lordship of the manor.

When Gold Boils.

Prof. Henri Moissan has been trying some interesting experiments in vaporising gold in the electric furnace. He finds that it boils at 2,400 degrees C. and that 100 to 150 grains can be evaporated in two or three minutes. By condensing the gold vapor on a cool surface either filiform masses or cubical crystals can be obtained. It is found that gold, like copper and iron, dissolves a certain amount of carbon when in the liquid state, but this separates out as graphite on cooling. Gold is found to be less volatile than copper. The properties of distilled gold are the same as those of hammered gold or the melted metal reduced to a fine powder. Prof. Moissan has found no indications of an allotropic modification of gold. When an alloy of copper and gold is distilled the vapor of copper comes over first, showing that there is no definite compound. In the case of alloys of gold and tin the latter metal burns in contact with the air. This tin oxide is found to be of a purple color, due to a deposit of fine gold on its surface.—London Globe.

Betrayed by a Fly.

A young lady friend of our acquaintance has recently received a shock. Among her extensive male acquaintance there is a blue-eyed youth. He goes much into society, and is a hot favorite among the nicer sex because of his eyes. Alack! one of them is glass; but there is no need, as he says, for everyone to know that, and, really, it seems so much the counterpart of the other that not one in a hundred would detect it. On this occasion he escorted the young lady in question to a refreshment room. As they were taking tea and coffee he looked unutterable things at her, when all of a sudden she gave vent to a startled exclamation. Her eyes fixed on his with a mysterious intentness and horror. A fly had settled in the centre of his glass eye, and remained there—he, of course, unconscious of its presence. The sight of that eye looking at her with a fly on it, and the owner making no attempt to brush it off, was too much for his companion. It overpowered her, and she shudders when she recalls the circumstance.—Answers.

An Impossibility.

Two Irishmen were moving some kegs of powder when one noticed that the other was smoking, and the following conversation ensued:

"Look here! Ain't ye got any better sense than to be smoking whilst we're handling these 'ere kegs of powder? Don't you know that there was an explosion yesterday, which blew up a dozen men?"

"Faith, but that cud never happen here."

"Why not?"

"Bekase there's only two of us on this job."

Misplaced Sympathy.

A French judge visiting England was riding in a London tram car when the conductor asked for his fare. The judge offered a sixpence and when he received fourpence change gave the conductor twopence, saying:

"Here, my man, get yourself a glass of beer."

A clergyman, sitting opposite, interposed:

"Excuse me, sir, but is it wise to encourage drinking? I have not touched a glass of beer for years."

"Poor man!" exclaimed the judge. "Take ze odder twopence."

Hang the paper ! says Mamma, her face alight with joy,
O hang the paper ! says papa in echo of mamma ;
Within the cry of each their lurks a very different note,
Mamma thus speaketh from the heart, Papa speaks from the throat.

Dear love, I know you love me well,
But is your love so true
That through all times and trials I'll be
The same dear one to you?
When clouds roll o'er our sunny sky,
And care sits on my brow,
Will you love me then as now,
Sweetheart,
Will you love me then as now?

When we cross the broad Atlantic, dear,
To spend our wedding tour
In doing Europe and its shows
(That ancient bridal lure)
When the fierce winds blow and the good ship's tossed,
And rolls from stern to prow,
And we wish we were dead in our anguish sore
Will you love me then as now,
Sweetheart,
Will you love me then as now?

When we go for a ride in my motor car,
And speed like a bird on wing,
Then all at once strike an unseen rock,
And the auto does a highland fling
While in vain I crawl beneath the wreck
That no motion will allow,
With home just fifteen miles away,
Will you love me then as now,
Sweetheart,
Will you love me then as now?

The Bishop of Carlisle, speaking on the dignity of labor, said they needed to teach that to a good many of the heathen at home, both poor and rich. "If I had my way," he proceeded, "I would make some of those fellows with twenty thousand a year know something about manual labor."

"Why" asks Prof. Coleman, of the Ontario Bureau of Mines, "should not Canada, the producer of half the nickel of the world, replace her ugly cents by clean, untarnished nickel coins, almost as handsome as silver, and much more durable? Canada is presently to have a mint, and it should begin its work by coining one-cent and five-cent pieces of pure nickel, making use of a distinctly Canadian metal."

Much has been lost—but we still had the bloodhounds—the bloodhounds that have pursued Eliza over the painted ice of many an Uncle Tom's Cabin show. The bloodhounds whose deep and awesome bay sounded in the thrilling crisis of many a novel. The bloodhounds were brought in from the United States to track the daring train robbers to their lair among the mountains of British Columbia. Whereupon the bloodhounds proceeded to get lost themselves. The authorities captured the train robbers. The bloodhounds are still among the missing, and may yet be recovered with the help of a fifteen-cent "want ad."

BIRD AND BEAST.

Battle Between a Hawk and a Big Black Dog Mink.

Silent as an owl in the black of night, the hawk glided low on whist wings across the little open space cleared by the fallen maple, paused an almost imperceptible instant above the unlistening squirrel, and then, wings closed, dropped upon him with unerring talons. But for some strange reason the harrier seemed powerless to bear away his kill; while his angry, frightened screams drowned out the dying squeak of the squirrel, he strove with great rattling wing strokes to get purchase on the air, but could not. Over and over again he struck downward with his beak, apparently at the squirrel, though of this, because of the blur of his whipping wings, I could not be sure. In a moment he half toppled forward, and then, like a huge broken winged partridge, he flopped about among the tangled coils of roots, uttering meanwhile shrill screech on screech that seemed fairly to lacerate his throat. In but little more than it takes to tell it a dozen kingbirds had gathered, and were buzzing round the struggling harrier like gadflies round a horse, adding their spiteful cries to his harsh din; now a crow appeared out of nowhere and searched deep in his throat for his hoarest cry; blue jays flashed across the clearing and back again in a frenzy of clamorous excitement; a swarm of chattering blackbirds rushed into the tree above me till its branches sagged and creaked like those of a laboring tree overweighted with fruit—all in an instant bedlam was let loose round that old wind wrecked maple.

Under cover of the uproar I crept nearer and saw that a big black dog mink, his bulldog jaws clamped on the upper leg of the harrier, was grimly fighting to pull him down from behind, while the harrier, with the speed of terror and hate, sought desperately to reach his assailant with his beak. It looked as if the mink must win, for the harrier was perceptibly weakening in his vain counter attack; but a sudden lift with the harrier's long wings half tore the mink from his hold and swung him for one brief moment within distance of that rending beak. Rip; a big red gash gaped open on the mink's writhing flank, and he let go and tumbled back among the roots. Up leaped the hawk, his pearly white breast streaked and blotched with blood from his wounded leg. Like magic the cries of all but the kingbirds were hushed, while, still screaming with rage and hurt, the hawk rose heavily skyward and marked his course athwart the wind for the shelter of the woods.—Harold S. Deming in Harper's Magazine.

The English Police.

In the conduct of the police department in an English city we find a striking comparison with our American notion of police work. In Manchester, as in London, the policeman is always the servant of the public. As in London, he carries neither club nor revolver. His duties are very nearly the same as those of a New York officer. It is in his method of doing his work that the striking difference lies. He is always quiet, always neat, always respectful, even deferential, in his treatment of the public. Such overbearing manners as we sometimes see in New York policemen would not be tolerated in Manchester—or in London, for that matter.—Success.

Origin of "Chauffeur."

There were chauffeurs long before automobiles. History tells us that about the year 1795 men strangely accoutered, their faces covered with soot and their eyes carefully disguised, entered by night farms and lonely habitations and committed all sorts of depredations. They garroted their victims, dragged them before a great fire, where they burned the soles of their feet and demanded information as to the whereabouts of their money and jewels; hence they were called "chauffeurs," a name which frightened so much our good grandmothers.

Eggs—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 25,618.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—American Markets Are Without Feature.

London, May 31.—Cattle are quoted at 11c to 12c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8¾c to 9¼c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 14c to 15c per lb.; lambs, 10c, dressed weight.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, May 31.—Receipts of live stock at the city market as reported by the railways since Tuesday were 87 car loads, composed of 961 cattle, 1,733 hogs, 718 sheep, 392 calves and two horses.

Exporters.

There were few, if any, prime, well-finished shipping cattle. About three or four loads would represent the receipts of exporters. Prices were firm, but not any higher and ranged from $4.75 to $5 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.60 to $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

The demand for butchers was good and prices were 10c higher for the general run of this class, and probably a little more for the best class of butchers' cows which were in good demand owing to the many outside buyers being on the market. Choice picked lots of butchers sold at $4.65 to $4.85; loads of good at $4.50 to $4.65; medium at $4.25 to $4.50; common at $4 to $4.20; cows at $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports a fair trade, but buyers are looking for lower quotations, in sympathy with fat cattle prices. The main demand is for steers, 800 to 1000 lbs. each, which sell at $3.75 to $4 per cwt. Mr. Murby bought and sold 200 feeders and stockers this week at following quotations: short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., at $4.40 to $4.70; good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.20; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.75 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.20; common stockers at $2.75 to $3 per cwt.

Milch Cows.

There was a large number of milch cows and springers. Trade was brisk owing to buyers from outside points being on the market. Prices were firm, ranging all the way from $28 up to $62 each. Drovers would need to be careful in buying cows as, should there be a large number brought forward, with no outside buyers present, it might be that they would lose some money.

Veal Calves.

Four hundred veal calves were offered. Considering the large number, prices held fairly firm at $3.50 to $6 per cwt. Extra prime new milk-fed calves are worth $6.50 to $7 per cwt., but they are scarce.

Sheep and Lambs.

Deliveries of spring lambs were large, the quality of many of them being not good, to say the least, the result being that prices were much lower, in fact sheep of all kinds were lower in price. Export ewes, $4.25 to $5 per cwt.; bucks, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; spring lambs, $3 to $5.50 each.

Hogs.

Receipts of hogs were fairly large, over 1750 on the market. Mr. Harris quotes the market firm at $7.30 for selects and $7.05 for lights and fats; sows, $4 to $5 per cwt.; stags, $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, May 31.—Cattle—Receipts, 100 head; fairly active and steady; prime steers, $5.35 to $5.75; shipping, $4.90 to $5.40; butchers', $4.50 to $5.25.

Veals—Receipts, 250 head; active and 25c lower; $4.50 to $6.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 4300 head; fairly active and about steady; heavy and mixed, $6.75; Yorkers, $6.70 to $6.75; pigs, $6.60 to $6.70; roughs, $5.75 to $5.90; stags, $4.25 to $4.75; dairies, $6.50 to $6.70.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 9400 head; sheep active and steady; lambs slow, 10c to 15c lower; lambs, $5.50 to $7.10, a few $7.15; yearlings, $6 to $6.50; wethers, $6 to $6.25; ewes, $5.50 to $5.75; sheep, mixed, $3 to $6.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, May 31.—Beeves—Receipts, 919, mainly consigned direct; nothing doing of any importance; feeling steady.

Calves—Receipts, 85; quiet but steady; common to choice veals, $4.50 to $6.87½; no buttermilks.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 1182; sheep steady; lambs and yearlings firm, on light supply; good sheep, $5.50; fair southern lambs, $8.50; yearlings, $6 to $7.37½; culls, $5.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1886; feeling firm; no sales reported.

Jury Disagrees re. Train Robbers.

Kamloops, B. C., June 1.—After being out seven hours the jury in the case of the men accused of holding up the Imperial Limited, failed to agree, and they were discharged. It is unlikely the retrial of the train robbers will take place till fall, but Dunn will be immediately tried on indictment of "shooting with intent to kill." The difference in the published description of the men and the description and sizes of the men as given by the trainmen, evidently caused confusion in the minds of the jury.

Robbed In the Postoffice.

Detroit, June 1.—James McLean, a young man from Granton, Ont., reported to the police that while entering the long corridor of the main postoffice to mail a letter home, he was approached by two men who pushed him into a corner, and while one held him the other quickly abstracted his purse, containing $12, from his pocket, and ran away.

The Fate of a Crown . .

...BY...
SCHUYLER STAUNTON

Copyright, 1905, by The Reilly & Britton Co.

My first thought was to marvel at his size, for he was considerably above six feet in height and finely proportioned, so that his presence fairly dominated us and made the furnishings of the room in which he stood seem small and insignificant.

As I entered, he stood with his back to the fireplace confronting Dom Miguel, whose face wore a sad and tired expression. I immediately turned to withdraw, but a gesture from the stranger arrested me.

"Robert," said Dom Miguel, "I present you to General Manuel Deodoro da Fonseca."

I bowed profoundly. General Fonseca was not only a commander of the Emperor's royal army, but Chief Marshal of the forces of the Revolutionary party. I had never seen the great man before, as his duties required his constant presence at the capital; but no figure loomed larger than his in the affairs of the conspiracy.

Seldom have I met a keener or more disconcerting glance than that which shot from his full black eyes as I stood before him. It seemed to search out my every thought, and I had the sensation of being before a judge who would show no mercy to one who strove to dissemble in his presence.

But the glance was brief, withal. In a moment he had seized my hand and gripped it painfully. Then he turned to Dom Miguel.

"Let me hear the rest of your story," said he.

"There is nothing more, General. Izabel has learned my secret, it is true; but she is my daughter. I will vouch for her faith."

"Then will not I!" returned Fonseca, in his deep, vibrant tones. "Never have I believed the tale of her estrangement from that scoundrel, Leon de Mar. Men are seldom traitors, for they dare not face the consequences. Women have no fear of man or devil. They are daughters of Delilah—each and every one."

He turned suddenly to me.

"Will you also vouch for Senhora Izabel de Mar?" he asked.

"No," I answered.

"And quite right, sir," he returned, with a grim smile. "Never trust a woman in politics. But how about Francisco Paola? Do you vouch for him?"

I hesitated, startled by the question.

"Answer me!" he commanded.

"I cannot see that I am required to vouch for any one, General," said I, nettled by his manner. "I am here to serve the Cause, not to judge the loyalty of its leaders."

"Ugh!" said he, contemptuously; and I turned my back upon him, facing Dom Miguel, over whose features a fleeting smile passed.

Fonseca stalked up and down the apartment, his sword clanking beneath his cloak, and his spurs clicking like castanets. Then he planted his huge figure before the chief.

"Watch them both," said he brusquely; "your daughter and your friend. They are aware of our most important secrets."

De Pintra's face reddened.

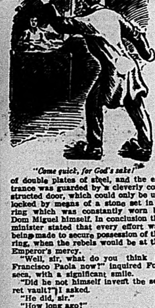
"Francisco is true as steel!" he retorted, firmly. "Not one of us—including yourself, General—has done more to serve the Cause. I have learned to depend upon his discretion as I would upon my own—or yours."

The general frowned and drew a folded paper from his breast pocket.

"Read that," said he, tossing it into Dom Miguel's hand. "It is a copy of the report made by Paola to the Emperor this morning."

De Pintra glanced at the paper and then gave it to me, at the same time dropping his head in his hands.

I read the report. It stated that the Minister of Police had discovered the existence of a secret vault constructed beneath the mansion of Miguel de Pintra, the rebel chief. This vault, the police thought, contained important records of the conspiracy. It was built of double plates of steel, and the entrance was guarded by a cleverly constructed door, which could only be unlocked by means of a stone set in a ring which was constantly worn by Dom Miguel himself. In conclusion the minister stated that every effort was being made to secure possession of the ring, when the rebels would be at the Emperor's mercy.



"Come quick, for God's sake!"

"Well, sir, what do you think of Francisco Paola now?" inquired Fonseca, with a significant smile.

"Did he not himself invent the secret vault?" I asked.

"He did, sir."

"How long ago?"

"A matter of two years. Is it not so, Dom Miguel?"

The chief bowed.

"And until now Paola has kept this secret?" I continued.

"Until now, yes!" said the general. "Until the vault was stored with all our funds and the complete records of the revolution."

"Then it seems clear to me that Paola, as Minister of Police, has been driven to make this report in order to serve the Cause."

Dom Miguel looked up at me quickly, and the huge general snorted and stabbed me with his terrible eyes.

"What do you mean?" demanded Fonseca.

"This report proves, I fear, that our suspicions of Madam Izabel are well founded," I explained, not daring to look at Dom Miguel while I accused his daughter. "Paola has doubtless discovered that this information regarding the vault and its mysterious key has either been forwarded to the Emperor or is on the way to him. Therefore he has forestalled Madam Izabel's report, in order that he may prove his department vigilant in serving the government, and so protect his high office. Can you not see that Paola's claim that he is working to secure the ring is but a ruse to gain time for us? Really, he knows that he could obtain it by arresting Dom Miguel. But this report will prevent the Emperor putting his man Valcour upon the case, which he would probably have done had he received his first information from Izabel de Mar."

For a moment there was silence. Then the general's brow unbent and he said with cheerfulness:

"This explanation is entirely reasonable. It would not do for Paola to get himself deposed, or even suspected, at this juncture. A new Minister of Police would redouble our danger."

"How did you obtain this copy of the report?" asked de Pintra.

"From one of our spies."

"I have no doubt," said I, "that Paola was instrumental in sending it to you. It is a warning, gentlemen. We must not delay in acting upon it, and removing our treasure and our records to a safer place."

"And where is that?" asked Fonseca.

I looked at the chief. He sat thoughtfully considering the matter.

"There is no need of immediate haste," said he presently, and nothing can be done to-night, in any event. To-morrow we will pack everything in chests and carry them to Senhor Bastro, who has a safe hiding-place. Meantime, General, you may leave me your men to serve as escort. How many are there?"

"Three. They are now guarding the usual approaches to this house."

"Let them ride with you to the station at Cruz, and send them back to me in the morning. I will also summon some of our nearby patriots. By noon to-morrow everything will be ready for the transfer."

"Very good!" ejaculated the general. "We cannot abandon too soon the vault we constructed with so much care. Where is your daughter?"

"In her apartments."

"Before you leave to-morrow, lock her up and put a guard at her door. We must not let her suspect the removal of the records.

"It shall be done," answered de Pintra, with a sigh. "It may be," he continued, hesitatingly, "that my confidence in Izabel has been misplaced."

The general did not reply. He folded his cloak about him, glanced at the clock, and strode from the room without a word of farewell.

When he had gone Dom Miguel turned to me.

"Well?" said he.

"I do not like Fonseca," I answered.

"As a man he is at times rather disagreeable," admitted the chief. "But as a general he possesses rare ability, and his high station renders him the most valuable leader the Cause can boast. Moreover, Fonseca has risked everything in our enterprise, and may be implicitly trusted. When at last we strike our great blow for freedom, much will depend upon Manuel da Fonseca. And now, Robert, let us retire, for an hour before daybreak we must be at work."

It was then eleven o'clock. I bade the chief good night and retired to my little room next the study. Dom Miguel slept in a similar apartment opening from the opposite side of the study.

The exciting interview with Fonseca had left me nervous and wakeful, and it was some time before I sank into a restless slumber.

A hand upon my shoulder aroused me.

It was Dom Miguel.

"Come quick, for God's sake!" he cried, in trembling tones. "She has stolen my ring!"

CHAPTER VIII.

Scarcely awake, I sprang from my couch in time to see de Pintra's form disappear through the doorway. A moment later I was in the study, which was beginning to lighten with the dawn of a new day.

The trap in the floor was open, and the chief threw himself into the aperture and quickly descended. At once I followed, feeling my way down the iron staircase and along the passage. Reaching the domed chamber a strange sight met our view. Both traps had been raised, the second one standing upright upon its hinged edge, and from the interior of the vault shone a dim light.

While we hesitated the light grew stronger, and soon Madam Izabel came slowly from the vault with a small lamp in one hand and a great bundle of papers in the other. As she reached the chamber Dom Miguel sprang from out the shadow and wrenched the papers from her grasp.

"So, madam!" he cried, "you have betrayed yourself in seeking to betray us. Shame! Shame that a daughter of mine should be guilty of so vile an act!" As he spoke he struck her so sharply across the face with the bundle of papers that she reeled backward and almost dropped the lamp.

"Look to her, Robert," he said, and leaped into the vault to restore the papers to their place.

Then, while I stood stupidly by, not thinking of any further danger, Madam Izabel sprang to the trap and with one quick movement dashed down the heavy plate of steel. I saw her place the ring in its cavity and heard the shooting of the bolts; and then, suddenly regaining my senses, I rushed forward and seized her arm.

"The ring!" I gasped, in horror; "give me the ring! He will suffocate in that dungeon in a few minutes."

I can see yet her cold, serpent-like eyes as they glared venomously into my own. The next instant she dashed the lamp into my face. It shivered against the wall, and as I staggered backward the burning oil streamed down my pajamas and turned me into a living pillar of fire.

Screaming with pain, I tore the burning cloth from my body and stamped it into ashes with my bare feet. Then, smarting from the sting of many burns, I looked about me and found myself in darkness and alone.

Instantly the danger that menaced Dom Miguel flashed upon me anew, and I stumbled up the iron stairs until I reached the study, where I set the alarm bell going so fiercely that its deep tones resounded throughout the whole house.

In my chamber I hastily pulled my clothing over my smarting flesh, and as the astonished servants came pouring into the study, I shouted to them:

"Find Senhora de Mar immediately and bring her to me—by force if necessary. She has murdered Dom Miguel!"

Over the heads of the stupidly staring group I saw a white, startled face, and Lesba's great eyes met my own with a quick look of comprehension. Then she disappeared, and I turned again to the wondering servants.

"Make haste!" I cried. "Can you not understand? Every moment is precious."

But the frightened creatures gazed upon each other silently, and I thrust them aside and ran through the house in frantic search for the murderess. The rooms were all vacant, and when I reached the entrance hall a groom stopped me.

"Senhora de Mar left the house five minutes ago, sir. She was mounted upon our swiftest horse, and knows every inch of the country. It would be useless to pursue her."

"Halt!" called a stern voice.

While I glared at the fellow a soft hand touched my elbow.

"Come!" said Lesba. "Your horse is waiting—I have saddled him myself. Make for the station at Cruz, for Izabel will seek to board the train for Rio."

She had led me through the door across the broad piazza; and as, half-dazed, I mounted the horse, she added, "Tell me, can I do anything in your absence?"

"Nothing!" I cried, with a sob; "Dom Miguel is locked up in the vault, and I must find the key—the key!"

Away dashed the horse, and over my shoulder I saw her still standing on the steps of the piazza staring after me.

The station at Cruz! I must reach it as soon as possible—before Izabel de Mar should escape. Almost crazed at the thought of my impotency and shuddering at the knowledge that de Pintra was slowly dying in his tomb while I was powerless to assist him, I lashed the good steed until it fairly flew over the uneven road.

"Halt!" cried a stern voice.

The way had led me beneath some overhanging trees, and as I pulled the horse back upon his haunches I caught the gleam of a revolver held by a mounted man whose form was enveloped in a long cloak.

Then came a peal of light laughter.

"Why, 'tis our Americano!" said the horseman, gayly; "whither away, my gallant cavalier?"

To my delight I recognized Paola's voice.

"Dom Miguel is imprisoned in the vault!" I almost screamed in my agitation; "and Madam Izabel has stolen the key."

"Indeed!" he answered. "And where is Senhora Izabel?"

"She has fled to Rio."

"And left her dear father to die? How unfilial!" he retorted, laughing again. "Do you know, Senhor Harcliffe, it somehow reminds me of a story my nurse used to read from the 'Arabian Nights,' how a fond daughter planned to—"

"For God's sake, sir, the man is dying!" I cried, maddened at his indifference.

He drew out a leathern case and calmly selected a cigarette.

"And Madam Izabel has the key," he repeated, striking a match. "By the way, senhor, where are you bound?"

"To overtake the murderess before she can board the train at Cruz."

"Very good. How long has Dom Miguel been imprisoned in the vault?"

"Twenty minutes, a half-hour, perhaps."

"Ah! He may live in that foul and confined atmosphere for two hours; possibly three. But no longer. I know, for I planned the vault myself. And the station at Cruz is a good two hours' ride from this spot. I know, for I have just traveled it."

I dropped my head, overwhelmed by despair as the truth was thus brutally thrust upon me. For Dom Miguel there was no hope.

"But the records, sir! We must save them, even if our chief is lost. Should Madam Izabel deliver the key to her husband or to the Emperor every leader of the Cause may perish upon the gallows."

"Well thought of, on my word," commented the strange man, again laughing softly. "I wonder how it feels to have a rope around one's neck and to kick the empty air?" He blew a cloud of smoke from his mouth and watched it float away. "But you are quite right, Senhor Harcliffe. The lady must be found and made to give up the ring."

He uttered a low whistle, and two men rode out from the shadow of the trees and joined us.

"Ride with Senhor Harcliffe to the station at Cruz. Take there the train for Rio. Present the American to Mazanovitch, who is to obey his instructions."

The men bowed silently.

"But you, senhor," I said, eagerly, "can you not yourself assist us in this search?"

"I never work," was the reply, drawled in his mincing manner. "But the men I have given you will do all that can be done to assist you. For myself, I think I shall ride on to de Pintra's and kiss my sister good morning. Perhaps she will give me a bite of breakfast, who knows?"

Such heartlessness amazed me. Indeed, the man was past my comprehension.

"And General Fonseca?" said I, hesitating whether or no to put myself under Paola's command, now that the chief was gone.

"Let Fonseca go to the devil. He would cry 'I told you so!' and refuse to aid you, even though his own neck is in jeopardy." He looked at his watch. "If you delay longer you will miss the train at Cruz. Good morning, senhor. How sad that you cannot breakfast with us!"

Touching his hat with a gesture of mock courtesy he rode slowly on, and the next moment, all irresolution vanishing, I put spurs to my horse and bounded away, the two men following at my heels.

Presently I became tortured with thoughts of Dom Miguel, stifling in his tomb of steel. And under my breath I cursed the heartless sang froid of Francisco Paola, who refused to be serious even when his friend was dying.

"The cold-blooded scoundrel!" I muttered, as I galloped on; "the cad! the trifling coxcomb! Can nothing rouse him from his self-complaisant idiocy?"

"I imagine you are apostrophizing my master, senhor," said one of the men riding beside me.

Something in his voice caused me to turn and scrutinize his face.

"Ah!" I exclaimed, "you are Sergeant Marco."

"The same, senhor. And I shall not arrest you for the death of our dear lieutenant." A low chuckling laugh accompanied the grim pleasantry. "But if you were applying those sweet names to Senhor Paola, I assure you that you wrong him. For three years I have been his servant, and this I have learned: in an emergency no man can think more clearly or act more swiftly than his Majesty's Minister of Police."

"I have been with him four years," announced the other man, in a hoarse voice, "and I agree with you that he is cold and heartless. Yet I never question the wisdom of his acts."

"Why did he not come with us himself?" I demanded, angrily. "Why should he linger to eat a breakfast and kiss his sister good morning, when his friend and chief is dying, and his Cause is in imminent danger?"

Marco laughed, and the other shrugged his shoulders, disdaining a reply.

For a time we rode on in unbroken silence, but coming to a rough bit of road that obliged us to walk the horses, the sergeant said:

"Perhaps it would be well for you to explain to us what has happened. My friend Figgot, here, is a bit of a detective, and if we are to assist you we must know in what way our services are required."

"We are both patriots, senhor," said the other, briefly.

So I told them the story of Madam Izabel's treachery and her theft of the ring, after locking her father within the vault. At their request I explained minutely the construction of the steel doors and described the cutting of the emerald that alone could release the powerful bolts. They heard all without comment, and how much of my story was new to them I had no knowledge. But of one thing I felt certain: these fellows were loyal to the Cause and clever enough to be chosen by Paola as his especial companions; therefore they were just the assistants I needed in this emergency.

It was a weary ride, and the roads became worse as we progressed toward Cruz. The sun had risen and now spread a marvelous radiance over the tropical landscape. I noted the beauty of the morning even while smarting from the burns upon my breast and arms, and heart-sick at the awful fate of my beloved leader—even now perishing amid the records of the great conspiracy he had guided so successfully. Was all over yet, I wondered? Paola had said that he might live in his prison for two or three hours. And the limit of time had nearly passed. Poor Dom Miguel!

My horse stepped into a hole, stumbled, and threw me headlong to the ground.

For a few minutes I was unconscious; then I found myself sitting up and supported by Sergeant Marco, while the other man dashed water in my face.

"It is a dangerous delay," grumbled Marco seeing me recovering.

Slowly I rose to my feet. No bones were broken, but I was sadly bruised.

"I can ride, now," I said.

They lifted me upon one of their horses and together mounted the other. My own steed had broken his leg. A bullet ended his suffering.

Another half-hour and we sighted the little station at Cruz. Perhaps I should have explained before that from Cuyaba to Cruz the railway made a long sweep around the base of the hills. The station nearest to de Pintra's estate was Cuyaba; but by riding straight to Cruz one saved nearly an hour's railway journey, and the train for Rio could often be made in this way when it was impossible to reach Cuyaba in time to intercept it. And as the station at Cruz was more isolated than that at Cuyaba, this route was greatly preferred by the revolutionists visiting de Pintra.

My object in riding to Cruz upon this occasion was twofold. Had Madam Izabel in her flight made for Cuyaba to catch the train, I should be able to board the same train at Cruz, and force her to give up the ring. And if she rode to Cruz she must await there the coming of the train we also hoped to meet. In either event I planned, as soon as the ring was in my possession, to hasten back to the mansion, open the vault and remove the body of our chief; after which it would be my duty to convey the records and treasure to the safe-keeping of Senhor Bastro.

I had no expectation of finding Dom Miguel still alive. With everything in our favor the trip would require five hours, and long before that time the prisoner's fate would have overtaken him. But the chief's dying wish would be to save the records, and that I intended to do if it were possible.

However, the delays caused by meeting with Paola and my subsequent unlucky fall had been fatal to my plans. We dashed up to the Cruz station in time to see the train for Rio disappearing in the distance, and to complete my disappointment we found standing beside the platform a horse yet panting and covered with foam.

Quickly dismounting, I approached the horse to examine it. The station master came from his little house and bowed with native politeness.

"The horse? Ah, yes; it was from the stables of Dom Miguel. Senhora de Mar had arrived upon the animal just in time to take the express for Rio. The gentleman also wanted the train? How sad to have missed it! But there would be another at eleven o'clock, although not so fast a train."

For a time I stood in a sort of stupor, my mind refusing to grasp the full horror of the situation. Until then, perhaps, a lingering hope of saving Dom Miguel had possessed me. But with the ring on its way to Rio and the Emperor, and I condemned to inaction at a deserted way-station, it is no wonder that despair overwhelmed me.

When I slowly recovered my faculties I found that my men and the station master had disappeared. I found them in the little house writing telegrams, which the official was busily ticking over the wires.

Glancing at one or two of the messages I found them unintelligible.

"It is the secret cypher," whispered Figgot. "We shall put Madam Izabel in the care of Mazanovitch himself. Ah, how he will cling to the dear lady! She is clever—ah, yes! exceedingly clever is Senhora de Mar. But has Mazanovitch his match in all Brazil?"

"I do not know the gentleman," I returned.

"No? Perhaps not. But you know the Minister of Police, and Mazanovitch is the soul of Francisco Paola."

"But what are we to do?" I asked, impatiently.

"Why, now that our friends in Rio are informed of the situation, we have transferred to them, for a time, all our worries. It only remains for us to await the eleven o'clock train."

I nodded, staring at him through a sort of haze. I was dimly conscious that my burns were paining me terribly and that my right side seemed pierced by a thousand red-hot needles. Then the daylight faded away, the room grew black, and I sank upon the floor unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.

When I recovered I was lying upon a cot in the station-master's private room. Sergeant Marco had ridden to a neighboring farmhouse and procured bandages and some olive oil and Figgot, who proudly informed me he had once been a surgeon, had neatly dressed and bandaged my burns.

These now bothered me less than the lameness resulting from my fall; but I drank a glass of wine and then lay quietly upon the cot until the arrival of the train, when my companions aroused me and assisted me aboard.

I made the journey comfortably enough, and felt greatly refreshed after partaking of a substantial luncheon brought from an eating-house by the thoughtful Figgot.

On our arrival at Rio we were met by a little, thin-faced man who thrust us all three into a cab and himself joined us as we began to rattle along the labyrinth of streets. He was plainly dressed in black, quiet and unobtrusive in manner, and had iron-gray hair and beard, both closely cropped. I saw at once he was not a Brazilian, and made up my mind he was the man called Mazanovitch by Paola and my companions. If so, he was the person now in charge of our quest for the ring, and with this idea I examined his face with interest.

This was not difficult, for the man sat opposite me with lowered eye-lids and a look of perfect repose upon his thin features. He might have been fifty or sixty years of age; but there was no guide in determining this except his gray hairs, for his face bore no lines of any sort, and his complexion, although of pallid hue, was not unhealthy in appearance.

It surprised me that neither he nor my companions asked any questions. Perhaps the telegrams had explained all that was necessary. Anyway, an absolute silence reigned in the carriage during our brief drive.

When we came to a stop the little man opened the door. We all alighted and followed him into a gloomy stone building. Through several passages we walked, and then our conductor led us into a small chamber, bare except for a half-dozen iron cots that stood in a row against the wall. A guard was at the doorway, but admitted us with a low bow after one glance at the man in black.

Leading us to the nearest cot, Mazanovitch threw back a sheet and then stood aside while we crowded around it. To my horror I saw the form of Madam Izabel lying dead before us.

Her white dress was discolored at the breast with clots of dark blood.

"Stabbed to the heart," said the guard, calmly. "It was thus they brought her from the train that arrived this afternoon from Matto Grosso. The assassin is unknown."

Mazanovitch thrust me aside, leaned over the cot, and drew the woman's left hand from beneath the sheet.

The little finger had been completely severed.

Leading us to the nearest cot, Mazanovitch threw back a sheet.

Very gently he replaced the hand, drew the sheet over the beautiful face, and turned away.

Filled with amazement at the Nemesis that had so soon overtaken this fierce and terrible woman, I was about to follow our guide when I found myself confronting a personage who stood barring my way with folded arms and a smile of grim satisfaction upon his delicate features.

It was Valcour—the man who had called himself de Guarde on board the Castina—the Emepror's spy.

"Ah, my dear Senhor Harcliffe! Do we indeed meet again?" he cried, tauntingly. "And are you still keeping a faithful record in that sweet diary of yours? It is fine reading, that diary—perhaps you have it with you now?"

"Let me pass," said I, impatiently.

"Not yet, my dear friend," he answered, laughing. "You are going to be my guest, you know. Will it not please you to enjoy my society once more? To be sure. And I—I shall not wish to part with you again soon."

"What do you mean?" I demanded.

"Only that I arrest you, Robert Harcliffe, in the name of the Emperor!"

"On what charge?" I asked.

"Murder, for one," returned the smiling Valcour. "Afterward you may answer for conspiracy."

"Pardon me, Senhor Valcour," said the little man, in a soft voice. "The gentleman is already under arrest—in the Emperor's name."

Valcour turned upon him fiercely, but his eyes fell as he encountered the other's passive, unemotional countenance.

"Is it so, Captain Mazanovitch? Then I will take the prisoner off your hands."

The little man spread out his palms with an apologetic, deprecating gesture. His eyes seemed closed—or nearly so. He seemed to see nothing; he looked at neither Valcour nor myself. But there was something about the still, white face, with its frame of iron-gray, that compelled a certain respect, and even deference.

"It is greatly to be regretted," he said, gently; "and it grieves me to be obliged to disappoint you, Senhor Valcour. But since this man is a prisoner of the police—a state prisoner of some importance, I believe—it is impossible to deliver him into your hands."

Without answer Valcour stood motionless before us, only his mobile face and his white lips showing the conflict of emotions that oppressed him. And then I saw a curious thing happen. The eyelids of Mazanovitch for an instant unclosed, and in that instant so tender a glance escaped them that Valcour trembled slightly, and touched with a gentle, loving gesture the elder man's arm.

It all happened in a flash, and the next moment I could not have sworn that my eyes had not deceived me, for Valcour turned away with a sullen frown upon his brow, and the Captain seized my arm and marched me to the door, Figgot and Marco following close behind.

BY THE "MONKEY" DRILL

By Michael James

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

"But there isn't room for all seven of us in the wagon box," said Clement when Rex Burgess had invited the party to "pile in."

"Oh, Gormley can ride on the front seat with the driver," Burgess had replied lightly enough, though Gormley felt the undercurrent of malice in his voice, "up near the horses. These gallant cavalrymen like to be about horses, you know."

A January thaw had left the clay roads liquid, but a hard freeze following had reduced them to smooth iron, and the rumble of the wagon on the hard surface echoed far through the breathless, glittering cold of the moonlight.

It was the night of the Grangers' party at Merrifield town hall, five miles from Slocum, and a week before Burgess had invited a half dozen young people of Slocum to attend, riding over in his sleigh. The thaw had necessitated the change from sleigh to wagon.

"I wish I hadn't come, I wish I hadn't come," beat incessantly in Gormley's brain to the steady clop-clop of the horses' feet. "I had no business to do it. Burgess is a boor. He never forgets his money nor remembers his manners. What got into me, I wonder?" and much more of the same sort of self deception, for Gormley knew perfectly why he was braving the nipping cold and Burgess' thrusts. Nothing but sudden death could have kept him away. Sylvia Gerrish was there. But the joy of being near her was dashed by the thought that Burgess was nearer still—beside her, in fact. To secure that coveted place their host had boldly ordered his rival to the front seat.

Any man with red blood in his veins could scarcely blame Burgess for his maneuvering. The girl was a bewitching little figure, muffled in furs, a coquettish red tam-o'-shanter setting off her piquant face and mischievous eyes. Burgess had never seen her look prettier, and he glowed with satisfaction at his neat disposal, for the drive at least, of his rival.

Meanwhile the sweet tempered Gormley, by nature almost too submissive, was near to being roused. He was lashing himself in bitterness of spirit. It had always been so. Fate had made him the football of Rex Burgess, even in schooldays. Burgess was big and brave and handsome, while he was slight and pale faced. The boys had nicknamed Gormley "Molly" because he had once fainted at the sight of blood. Burgess' father was the wealthiest man in Slocum, and every cent of the money would one day belong to Rex, for he was the only child.

Regardless of the merry chatter and the snatches of song from the others, Gormley plunged deeper into his melancholy reflections. He, puny clerk in a dry goods store, to aspire to Sylvia Gerrish's love against one so favored of gods and men as Burgess!

His cheeks burned, too, when he thought of the other's contemptuous reference to "cavalrymen." Frankly, he admitted, it was ridiculous that he, "Molly" Gormley, should have martial aspirations. Yet when the state military board had offered Slocum the equipment for a troop of cavalry for the national guard Gormley had been unanimously chosen captain. And he was the man for the place. He could ride. It had always been the sport in which he excelled. He knew the "monkey" drill of the United States cavalry as he knew the alphabet.

They talk of Cossacks and Bedouin Arabs and Indians and the way these savages handle a horse, but the man who follows the yellow guidon is a little the best horseman of them all. And Captain "Molly" Gormley, Troop A, First cavalry, state troops, rode like a regular whether in the saddle, barebacked over the hurdles or standing, each foot planted firmly on the back of a galloping horse. Besides the first qualification of a cavalryman he had the other requisite for an officer, the gift of command, and even West Point can't touch that. So despite the fact that his body quailed at the sight of blood Gormley's spirit sang with the notes of the bugle when Troop A, two long straight lines of men and horses moving beautifully in unison, passed in review at camp.

The thought of his creation—he had made Troop A the pride of the national guard in the two years it had been organized—gradually lightened the gloom which had overspread Gormley's spirits. He reflected with considerable comfort that Burgess could not ride well. The big fellow did not understand horses and feared them. The bully in him crept out, too, on horseback. He thought it merely discipline to jerk the head of his mount cruelly and without reason. Burgess was not a member of Troop A. Maybe this fling at "cavalrymen" had been due to envy.

Even the possibility that Burgess envied him was balm to Gormley's sore heart. And if he could only plan it so as to sit by Sylvia on the homeward journey now his cup of joy would be full. It was a mighty bound from the depths of despair almost to the pinnacle of bliss in one short half hour, but Gormley was young, and youth has hope for a heritage.

Insensibly the young man was attracted by the beauty of the night. The burnished moon glistened on millions of tiny floating frost crystals until they sparkled like diamond dust. To the westward the black roadway unrolled before them like a velvet ribbon. Beaver creek crossed beneath it a hundred yards away. From the lowland bordering the creek the road had been graded to a height of fifty feet, and the embankment was narrow, steep and dangerous. A railing on each side hedged in the roadway.

Tonight nothing was visible below that railing. A mist, white and soft as cotton wool, rose from the swampy low ground and rolled in noiseless billows to the height of the road. The advance of the clattering wagon and its occupants into this heaving white silence seemed almost uncanny. It was as a sea which might rise and engulf them.

The others were similarly impressed, it would seem, for the talk was somewhat quieter. The team after three miles of brisk movement was getting warmed up and danced spiritedly. The driver took a fresh grip of the reins, for careful work was needed, especially at night, in crossing Beaver creek flats. He pulled strongly to bring the horses to a walk, then lunged backward suddenly. The right rein had broken near his hand.

What followed for the first paralyzed moment was like a scene from a horrid dream to Gormley. There was a confusion of shouts and shrieks from the wagon box behind. The horses were crowded to the left of the road by the pull of the one sound rein, to which the driver still clung stupidly. They plunged into the railing; it cracked, then gave way beneath their weight. The nigh horse was partially off the road, scrambling desperately with its hind foot on the treacherous side of the embankment. And still the relentless rein, dragging at the frenzied animals' bits, impelled them over the edge of the road.

In a flash Gormley saw the only course that would save them, the girl he loved and the others. There was no time to get down and reach the bits. He might save himself by jumping, but Sylvia, wedged in the box, would be rolling over and over to piteous disfigurement or death. "Drop it!" he shouted fiercely at the driver, and the latter instinctively loosened his grasp on the line.

Gormley scrambled over the footboard and on to the tongue of the wagon. He threw himself astride the off horse. A well directed lunge with his right hand secured the broken rein, and the same movement wrenched the animal's head sharply to the right. Leaning far out, he seized the other struggling animal by the bits with his left hand and pulled with all his strength. The hoofs of the frantic horse struck fire from the embankment edge. For an instant the whole outfit trembled toward destruction, but the pull to the right never slackened, the nigh horse secured a foothold at last, and the danger was over.

"How did you ever think so quickly?" asked Bob Parker when the excitement had died down a little and the rein was being mended.

"It wasn't thought at all; just instinct," replied Gormley. "You see, the trick of riding one horse bareback and guiding another is part of the cavalry 'monkey' drill. I learned it years ago when I was a boy."

Burgess holds Clement in bitter hatred since that night, for it was Clement who insisted on changing seats with Gormley, and that brought Gormley into a place beside Miss Gerrish. The engagement was announced next day, all as a result of the ride home after the dance.

The betrothal kiss, given when the waning moon was smothered by a cloud, was doubly sweet to Gormley, for Burgess was scarce a yard away.

The Art of Mosaic.

The slab upon which the mosaic is made is generally of travertine or tiburtine stones connected together by iron clamps. Upon the surface of this a mastic or cementing paste is gradually spread as the progress of the work requires it, which forms the adhesive ground or bed upon which the mosaic is laid. The mastic is composed of fine lime from burnt marble and finely powdered travertine stone mixed to the consistence of a paste with linseed oil. Into this paste are fixed the "smalts" of which the mosaic picture is formed. They are a mixed species of opaque vitrified glass, partaking of the nature of stone and glass and composed of a variety of minerals and materials, colored for the most part with different metallic oxides. Of these no fewer than 1,700 different shades are in use. They are manufactured in Rome in the form of long, slender rods, like wires of various degrees of thickness, and are cut into pieces of the requisite sizes, from the smallest pin point to an inch. When the picture is completely finished and the cement thoroughly dried it is highly polished.—Chambers' Journal.

Had No Terrors.

A young minister settled over a small country parish was instructed by his parishioners to procure a piano for their use. He did so, telling the dealer to charge the bill for rental to the secretary of the parish. When the bill amounted to $25, the society being unable to pay it as well as the salary of the pastor, the music dealer dunned the minister for the money, telling him that he assumed the responsibility. The latter replied that he never assumed the responsibility of another, having all he could do to pay his own bills, whereupon the dealer threatened to sue him.

A short time after our friend received a letter from a New York collection agency, to which as well as several following he paid no attention, until the following short but definite letter came:

Dear Sir—Unless you remit at once we shall publish you all over the country as a delinquent debtor.

To which he replied:

Gentlemen—Ever since I entered the ministry I have been struggling for the title of D. D. Go ahead.

TA! TA! TO FAIRY STORY

COLD SCIENCE HAS DESTROYED KING SOLOMON'S MINES.

The Ruins of Zimbabwe—The Oldest Material Found About Them Is of the Middle Ages, and There Is Nothing to Show That the Arabs Ever Had Anything to Do With Them.

Dr. Randall Maciver has blown up King Solomon's Mines and left another of our cherished illusions a shapeless heap of ruins. The London Times thus describes the effect produced by his work on mediaeval Rhodesia, published a few weeks ago: Antiquarian mares' nests have been all too many; but perhaps none has assumed such portentous dimensions as that found among the Rhodesian ruins. These structures, described on hearsay by more than one Portuguese chronicler of the later middle ages, were not seen by European eyes till about forty years ago, when Mauch visited the Makalanga; and no great account was taken of them before the British annexation of the territory north of the Limpopo. Then, all at once, we began to hear of gold workings which no Kaffir could make, of mighty walls which no Kaffir could build, and of sources of Solomon's wealth discovered in South Africa. Mr. Rider Haggard's well-known romance had much to do with the wide attention that the ruins excited in this country; and there is no doubt that those responsible for the development of Rhodesia were not unwilling that the glamour of a Biblical past should be shed over the new territory. Has it not been told by a witty fabulist how the financial fortunes of a certain company were enhanced when a learned German, "with admirable economy of proof," identified its malarious concession with the Sheol of the Old Testament?

Rhodes and His Hobby.

Be that as it may, Mr. Cecil Rhodes was prepared, nevertheless, to put the question to the test of scientific examination; and, largely at his instance, the late Mr. Theodore Bent was sent out to Rhodesia in 1891. It was an unfortunate choice. Mr. Bent was an intrepid explorer, of great resource, who was always accompanied by a wife not inferior to him in those qualities; but he had had no archaeological training in youth, and, though he had traveled among classical monuments, had not made their study his business, and had largely left the publication of them to others; nor had he ever done a piece of scientific excavation. He went, he saw, he dug; and, predisposed to accept the "Solomon" theory, and encouraged to lean toward the side of the marvellous, he came back to report the ruins to be of fabulous antiquity and monumental grandeur; he brought home certain carved and other objects as pieces de conviction; he found evidence, not only of stupendous gold workings, but of a nature-worship, with phallic and stellar ritual; and he concluded that the builders of the great Zimbabwe were Sabaean Arabians, who might well have been subjects of the Sheban Queen.

Must Think Imperially.

His book "The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland" settled the question for most people at home, and for all South Africans; and if a certain well-known story be true, the man who dared thereafter to doubt that Solomon got his gold from Zimbabwe was told he had no imperial instinct! It was in vain that a few archaeologists and ethnologists protested. They saw no positive evidence of either high civilization or high antiquity. The Rhodesian architecture seemed to them mere stone-piling, and the carvings, mostly in the softest of stones, not better than the work of many existing races low down in the scale of humanity. Above all, they saw no evidence of early Arabs—not a letter of their script, or a trace of their fabrics. The proofs of stellar orientation they took leave to doubt; and their attitude was to be justified ere long by a resurvey. Many objects found—indeed, all about which certainty was possible—were of Kaffir origin. Could not the ruins themselves be native African? They were told they did not know the Kaffir.

Not a Real Antique.

The Times tells how at last Maciver, trained in Prof. Petrie's school of research, went out to examine the ruins in 1905. He cut sections and drove trenches. These are the facts he established in about three months' work: (1) That the essential thing on most of the Rhodesian sites is the hut, built on a platform, more or less circular. Several such platforms fill the interior of the so-called "Elliptical Temple" at Zimbabwe. (2) These platforms are constructed of layers of cement all of one period, and stand either on virgin earth or, in one case, on a thin stratum of disturbed debris. (3) The "Kaffir" objects found on the surface of the platforms are found also below them, and nothing else is found either above or below of necessarily earlier date. (4) A few important objects are also found, the date of which is not doubtful, such as Arab glass, Persian faience and Nankin china; and these occur with the "Kaffir" objects both above and below the platforms. No one of these objects can be earlier than the eleventh century A. D., and most should be dated from two to four centuries later. (5) No Arab objects of any kind occur. (6) The architecture, at its best, is that of an uncivilized people and purely local in character.

Only Kaffir Kraals.

Incidentally Mr. Maciver made it clear that the great walls are those of royal kraals, built round kopjes to protect huts within. They are never true ellipses any more than of any other true form, but were probably intended to be roughly circular, so far as the nature of the ground would allow. Their present shape, their imperfect joints, their slight variations in style, are the result only of local lack of skill and precision. The whole of the ruins without exception is of native construction, and not older than medieval. These main points Mr. Maciver seems to us to have made absolutely sure. There may be slight differences in date between one building and one site and another, and slight differences in style may be due to construction by different tribes or native dynasties.

The object and use of some of the structures remain doubtful, e.g., of the conical towers in the "Ellipse," or of the "Western Temple" on the Acropolis, at Zimbabwe. Many may reasonably doubt if Mr. Maciver's explanation of all the ruins he saw is adequate—if, for instance, his "outworks" at the Nickerk site were not after all mere retaining walls of cultivation terraces. But these are minor questions not affecting the main facts, that beyond all question Arabs have had nothing to do with the Rhodesian structures, and that whoever built the earliest of them did not belong to any period more remote than the middle ages.

Out Goes Queen of Sheba.

Exeunt Solomon and the Sheban Queen. Enter the Monomotapa. Is it conceivable that places like the modern Makalanga could have raised such huge and extensive structures? No less an authority than Mr. Selous has said lately in public that he sees no reason against it. Given greater power than the chiefs have nowadays and the command of much larger numbers of tribesmen and slaves, the construction of Zimbabwes, he thought, was well within "Kaffir" capacity. We see no difficulty either; and where objects found are without exception such as native African races make or use, must conclude that buildings also are of native construction. If so, the Rhodesian sites, as Mr. Maciver truly says, acquire an altogether new, and we would add, a more real, interest. They become documents of the first order for filling up one of the greatest gaps in our knowledge of mankind, that is to say, for the past history of the negro races.

LOST IN LONDON.

Thousands of Children Kidnapped Every Year by Beggars.

The number of little children missing from London homes must be appalling. In the year 1904 the number of lost persons restored to homes was 18,662, most of them being little children who had been kidnapped for begging purposes.

A sensational proof of the fact that thousands of children are lost in London was supplied recently. A 3-year-old boy, well dressed, wearing a white fur coat, was found by a policeman and taken to the workhouse, where he became ill and died of acute meningitis, due to an injury to the forehead as the result of a blow or a fall.

A description was circulated, but the child was not claimed, and, after the inquest, the unknown little body was buried by the workhouse authorities.

Since the finding of the child was made public the City Road police station has been besieged by inquirers. Distracted parents, relatives, and friends have come to see the photograph taken after the death of the child, who was, they feared, their own missing boy. In fact, thousands of people have been there to see the photograph, but the child still is unknown.

The question arises, Where is this lost legion of children? That a thousand or even a hundred little ones can be spirited away from their homes and all of them lost absolutely is incomprehensible and to parents a terrifying state of affairs.

Lord Lytton's Model Town.

It is stated to be the intention of Lord Lytton shortly to divide a considerable section of his Knebworth estate, and to submit it to sale by auction in freehold building plots suitable for the erection of houses of varying values. Knebworth House, the family mansion of the Lyttons, is now in the occupation of Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal. The greater part of the original mansion, the home of the Right Hon. Edward Bulwer-Lytton, and of the second baron, Viceroy of India, which was built in 1563, has disappeared, the present house dating from 1811. The deer park alone consists of 200 acres, and the gardens are reputed to be among the most beautiful in the country. Lord Lytton has decided that on 60 plots cottages may be erected, providing they are of not less than £150 value in labor and material. A smaller proportion of the plots is retained for houses or shops, costing £250 each, and another section is to be occupied by dwellings costing not less than £400 each to build. The houses will be grouped in their varying classes, and manufacturing premises are only to be erected subject to the approval of the vendor. The main London road runs through Knebworth Village, and the property is close to Knebworth Station, on the Great Northern Railway, from which the journey to London occupies only 40 minutes by the best trains.

Twice as Big as Niagara.

The Zambesi River, carrying a huge volume of water, two miles in width, as it reaches the western borders of Rhodesia precipitates itself into a cavernous gorge, and thus traverses the northern plains of the country.

This great drop in the river has produced "the most beautiful gem of the earth's scenery," the Victoria Falls. Almost twice as broad as Niagara, and two and a half times as high, an immense mass of water rolls over its edge to precipitate itself in magnificent splendor four hundred sheer feet into the narrow canyon below.

Undeterred, the Rhodesian engineers have, without detracting from the natural beauty of the surroundings, thrown across the canyon a splendid 650-foot cantilever bridge and thus opened the way to Tanganyika, to Uganda, to Cairo.—Sir Percy Girouard.

Origin of Dolly.

The word "dolly" is used constantly, and yet few know the quaint story of its origin. In the time of William the Norman, Robert d'Oyley was one of his followers, and valuable lands at Hook Norton, in Oxfordshire, were granted him upon a curious condition. Each year at the feast of St. Michael he was to "make tender of a linen tablecloth worth 3 English shillings." As they went to royalty, the ladies of the d'Oyley family took great pride in embroidering the "quitrent cloths," as they were termed, and in consequence an art needlework collection of great beauty was accumulated by these annual tributes. They did service for state occasions in William the Norman's household and, very naturally, were called the "d'Oyley linen."

SWEET SINGER AT REST.

Tribute to Memory of Mrs. Jemima Luke, Hymn Writer.

Mrs. Jemima Luke, author of one of the most famous hymns in our language, "I think, when I read the sweet story of old," died at Newport, Isle of Wight, on Friday, at the age of 92. This venerable lady was born at Islington in 1813. Her maiden name was Jemima Thompson. Her father was one of the pioneers of the Bible Society, and assisted also in the formation of the Sunday School Union, with which he remained in full association till his death. He was interested in the various missionary societies, then in their infancy, and in 1827 he attached himself to the London Missionary Society, and attended its committee meetings regularly. In her interesting autobiography, "Early Years of My Life," Mrs. Luke told that her father helped to support the first floating chapel for sailors, and that he also was a founder of the Home Missionary Association, which is now merged in the Church Aid Society. "His capital never exceeded £60,000, but he and my mother lived simply and he always had his £100 in readiness to further any noble object."

In girlhood Jemima Thompson attended Hanover Chapel, Peckham, under the ministry of Dr. Collyer. She tells that even in childhood it was her ambition to become a poet, and she composed some verses every night before going to sleep, and wrote them out in the morning. She had great literary advantages, for not only was there an excellent library in her home, but Mr. Thompson used to bring back a package of magazines on the first of every month. Among these, Mrs. Luke tells us, was the Youth's Magazine to which Jane Taylor, under the signature "Q.Q.", regularly contributed. The Juvenile Friend was a less pretentious publication, which the little girl fancied might possibly insert such verses as hers, and there, in due time, her first poem appeared. Scarcely less gratifying than the sight of her work in print was the notice to correspondents in which she read, "We shall be pleased to hear again from 'A Little Girl of Thirteen,' and she may rest assured that with us modesty and talent will always find appreciation." What more welcome encouragement could there be for a child author? No wonder that Mrs. Luke, long years afterwards, sought out the shop in St. Paul's Churchyard whence the magazine had issued, and was disappointed to find that the name of the publisher had disappeared from the door.

For ten years Mrs. Luke worshipped under the ministry of the Rev. James Stratten, of Paddington Chapel, and in his church she heard men such as Dr. Liefchild, Thomas Binney and George Clayton.

On June 28, 1838, Mrs. Luke saw Queen Victoria crowned in Westminster Abbey. To the end of her life she loved to recall this dazzling scene, and especially the moment in which the girl Sovereign held out her hand to help the aged Lord Rolle. Mrs. Luke and her friend were obliged to be in the abbey between four and five o'clock in the morning to secure their seats, several hours earlier than was necessary in the case of King Edward's Coronation.

Mrs. Luke's Famous Hymn.

"The Child's Desire," as Mrs. Luke entitled her hymn, was written in a stagecoach between Taunton and Wellington. In the small town of Wellington there was an association in aid of the Society for Female Education in the East. One spring morning Miss Thompson, as she was then, went in a two-horse coach to see how the society was prospering. It was an hour's ride. There was no other inside passenger. She took a letter from her pocket, and on the back of the envelope wrote two verses of the little hymn now so well known. The composition originally consisted of two verses only, but in response to a request from her father to make it a missionary hymn, the third verse was added. "The hymn was published in The Sunday School Teachers' Magazine, to which Mr. Thompson sent it. But for his intervention it would in all probability never have been preserved."

Soon after the hymn appeared, Mrs. Luke received a letter requesting her to undertake the editorship of a missionary magazine. The work proved congenial, and the magazine prospered. Among the contributors were Robert Moffat and Dr. Livingstone. The title of the magazine was The Missionary Repository. Though it has long disappeared, it has served as a model of later missionary magazines for children.

In 1843, Jemima Thompson married the Rev. Samuel Luke, a Congregational minister, whom she survived for thirty-three years. "My loneliness," she wrote, "has been cheered by the affectionate attentions of a dear and only son, with his wife and two grandchildren."

Passive Resistance.

To the end Mrs. Luke retained the mental vigor of former days, and followed public events with lively interest. Her opposition to the Education Act was so strong and conscientious that she refused to pay the rate, and was summoned, among the Isle of Wight resisters, in September, 1904. In an exquisitely written autograph letter, addressed to the editor of The Morning Leader, and dated Sept. 21, 1904, Mrs. Luke gave her reasons as follows: "I have refused to pay the education rate because the act will place large numbers of our children under Ritualistic teaching, and so prepare them for the more advanced doctrines of the Church of Rome." Mrs. Luke was a regular worshipper at the Congregational chapel at Newport, to which she was wheeled every Sunday in a bath chair.

It was great pleasure to her when her hymn was sung in many Free Churches and Sunday schools on Sunday, Sept. 25, 1904. In thousands of places of worship the singing of these lines helped on the vast movement of conscientious protest against the Education Acts.—British Weekly, Feb. 8, 1906.

CRIME IN FIGURES.

Statistics For England and Wales For the Year 1904—Enormous Total of Persons Tried.

A bluebook was issued recently, says Lloyd's Weekly, by the Home Office giving the criminal statistics of England and Wales for the year 1904. It shows that the total number of persons tried for various offences during the 12 months was 807,139, as compared with 802,696 in the previous 12 months, the convictions being 665,379 against 660,300. The persons imprisoned numbered 199,153, as compared with 189,727 in 1903, and the number of convicts in prison on March 31 was 20,099. The figures, it is stated, are not all of equal value as criteria of the state of crime, but they all indicate an increase of criminality. The total number of persons for trial for indictable offences were 59,960, or 177.59 per 100,000 population, being an increase of 1,516, or nearly three per cent.

There has been a continuous growth of crime since 1899, when the number of persons tried was 50,494, or 156.37 per 100,000 of the population. For many years prior to that year, however, there was a steady decline, with occasional interruptions, in the number of persons tried, and in 1899 the total was less than in any previous year since 1875. During the quinquennial period 1860-4 the annual average was 280 per 100,000 population, compared with 182 in the last quinquennial period. The increase in 1904 was wholly in offences against property. The only offence against the person which showed a marked tendency in increase is bigamy, for which the figure was 138, the quinquennial averages for 1895-9 and 1900-4 being 104 and 112 respectively.

It is satisfactory to observe that those classes of offences usually committed by habitual criminals have ceased to increase at the same rapid rate as formerly. Cornwall is still one of the counties with the least crime. Glamorgan and Monmouth are still the worst counties, but the position of London has slightly improved. The worst counties for drunkenness are Northumberland, Glamorgan, Durham, and London, the best position as regards the offence being taken by a large group of rural counties. Minor offences of dishonesty and serious frauds and breaches of trust had increased, and offences of the vagrancy class are growing rapidly.

During the year 9,918 persons were convicted in Courts of Assize and Quarter Sessions, of whom 28 were sentenced to death, 970 to penal servitude, 7,899 to imprisonment, and 91 to detention in an inebriate reformatory; 55 persons were found guilty but insane; 1,896 were acquitted, and in 28 cases a jury found the accused to be insane and unfit to plead, while 16 persons were ordered to be whipped or flogged. The total number of persons dealt with by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction was 794,981, of whom 655,461 were convicted, 84,160 being sentenced to imprisonment.

During the year 36,269 coroners' inquests were held. In 2,357 cases open verdicts were returned, and, deducting one case of justifiable homicide and 16 executions of persons condemned to death, 4,888 deaths were ascribed to criminal violence or culpable neglect. Of these 3,327 were cases of suicide, a decrease of 153 as compared with the previous year. The continuous increase in suicides, frequently referred to in previous volumes of the criminal statistics, has thus received a check. Verdicts of wilful murder were returned in 191 cases, and of manslaughter in 126. The number of criminal lunatics received into asylums during 1904 was 235, and at the end of the year the total number of criminal lunatics under detention was 904, of whom no fewer than 407 had committed murder. Out of 28 sentences of death, 11 were commuted to penal servitude for life, and three free pardons were granted.

Big Liners Being Built.

Two new ocean liners, which are being built with the $10,000,000 lent by the Government, are fast nearing completion, and will be launched in June or July of this year. They will be named the Mauritania and Lusitania, and will be the largest ships the world has ever seen.

Each vessel will have a gross tonnage of 33,200, while they will be sixty feet longer than any other liners afloat. They are eight-eight feet in beam, and in this respect are the first to surpass the Great Eastern, which was eighty-three feet in breadth.

Each will have accommodation for 3,000 passengers and will carry a crew of 800. They will be propelled by turbine engines capable of developing 80,000 horse-power, and are expected to travel at a minimum speed of twenty-four knots an hour. Marine engineers predict the vessels will be the steadiest ships on the ocean. They are to be fitted in a manner equal to the most gorgeous of modern hotels. The decorations will consist of reproductions of the greatest works of art, while the system of lifts between the various decks will provide for the rapid transit of passengers from one part of the ship to another.

The first-class dining saloon will be unprecedented in marine architecture. It will be a massive, gorgeous apartment 125 feet long by 80 feet wide, and will comfortably accommodate 500 persons at one meal. It will be lighted by a great dome extending up through the two decks above and crowned with a roof of cathedral glass.

More than one engineering record has been broken in the construction of the ships. The stern frames and brackets are the largest ever known, the former alone weighing forty-seven tons and requiring no fewer than sixty-nine tons of molten metal in the making.

The rudder weighs seventy-nine tons, and each link in the 2,000 cables is twenty-two and one-fourth inches long and weighs 100 pounds. Each link was tested and withstood a strain of 270 tons.

Miss Ellen Terry's Jest.

Ellen Terry's sense of fun is indomitable. She was once asked by a lady hairdresser for a testimonial for some hair wash. Ellen Terry consented, and the hairdresser's surprise may be imagined when she received a large portrait of the actress as Marguerite in "Faust." Of course, in this part she wears a wig with beautiful long plaits. Beneath the photo was written: "Ellen Terry, after on application of Miss ——'s hair wash."—Rapid Review.

The Gardener.

It is at once the joy and the despair of a gardener that his work is never done. His materials are growing, changing, ever varying things. This is an endless delight to a man who lives with his garden and watches his plans grow up. When he makes a garden for another it is a different matter. Then, after spending his best thought and skill, the garden must be turned over into the hands of the Philistine, who may, doubtless will, spoil his color effects, make gaudy what before was rich, introduce tawdry display where before was a sensitive delicacy. These are the things that try men's souls and will continue to try them until the owners of large places acquire some degree of sympathy with and understanding of art.—Century.

Child's View of Art.

A lover of rare old china had a collection that was the envy of her visitors. One day a little girl came with her mother for a call, and, being seated in the living room, wonderingly eyed the array of antique dishes. The hostess was much pleased at the child's evident admiration of her treasures and said, "Well, my dear, what do you think of my china?" The child looked up, and pity was in her eyes as she asked, "Hasn't you dot any pantry?"

Not Matched.

"Mustache cups?" said the salesman. "Yes, sir. Here's a pretty design. Cup and saucer $1.98."

"But," said Mr. Nurich, "that ain't the saucer that goes with it."

"Oh, yes."

"Not much it ain't. There ain't no mustache guard on it."

Unnecessary.

"Monsieur," said the duelist's second, "all is ready. Let me shake your hand."

"Voila!" exclaimed the duelist, with chattering teeth. "Can you not see eet ees shake too much as eet ees?"

Illuminating Addresses On Fish and Game Protection.

The public meeting held in the City Hall last evening, under the auspices of the Hastings County Branch of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association, was well attended, there being fully 200 present. The addresses given by Messrs. A. Kelly Evans and Oliver Adams, of Toronto, in reference to the protection of fish and game, were timely and very much to the point.

MR RITCHIE IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Ritchie, President of the Hastings County Branch of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association, occupied the chair. In opening the proceedings he said we have a rich heritage in this County and district in the matter of fisheries, which is not appreciated as it should be. Time was when tons of whitefish could be taken from the Bay of Quinte, but to-day it was depleted. What was the reason of this? It was because fisheries had not been properly protected by our legislators. The law had been criminally neglected in this respect. The fishermen should fall in with the course that is now being pursued by the Association and assist in protecting our fish, as it would prove of benefit to them. There had been too much illegal fishing in the past. If we can preserve our fish and have good fishing it would mean great value to even this section of the Province. The public are not awakened to the value of our fisheries. Many of the overseers who are appointed to protect our fisheries "stand in" with those who break the law in regard to illegal fishing, and this was a matter which should be looked into.

MR. A. KELLY EVANS.

Mr. A. Kelly Evans, of Toronto, was the first speaker, and in his opening remarks explained the propaganda of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association. It was an Association democratic in its construction, inviting all to become members, whether they be clerks or merchant princes. It was an educative association, though it is felt that it is impossible to suddenly educate our people in this matter. The question of the better protection of game and fish was one of great importance. In getting close to nature we are getting close to something that will teach us valuable lessons. The speaker then, at some length spoke in reference to the catches of whitefish in Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte some years ago. At Yellington 30 years ago a seine was often hauled which contained from 5000 to 10,000 fish. To-day these fish were almost exterminated. In Lakes Huron, Erie and Superior a similar state of things existed, and if something was not done we would soon not have any of these fish. Little by little the fishermen had by demands secured a smaller mesh, and the fishing period was extended until it was now dangerous to the spawning season. A petition, he understood, was at present being circulated for net fishing in the Bay of Quinte. He hoped it would not prove successful. The Department should prevent net fishing here. The fish that had been caught here and elsewhere went where? To the United States, and we were not even getting a proper return for what we supply. The speaker spoke at some length of the State of Maine, which in 1867 was about depleted of fish and game. The Government at that time placed in force stringent game laws and to-day the lakes were teeming with fish and there was an abundance of game which yielded millions annually to the state. Ontario had an area 10 times as large as Maine, and what an immense amount of money could be brought here if our fish and game were properly protected. The speaker waxed eloquent in depicting the Bay of Quinte and its picturesque scenery. If good fishing was prevalent in the bay it would mean much to this city. The fishery overseers' reports, as presented to the Government and printed, were in the main altogether too optimistic. He urged the citizens of Belleville to band together, back the local member up and be determined to have these abuses of illegal fishing stopped. Assist in turning what is a loss into value and a profit. If there was good bass fishing in the Bay of Quinte, as there used to be, it would mean much for the beautiful city of Belleville, as Americans in large numbers would come here during the holiday season. See to it, the speaker concluded, that your fish here are protected as they should be.

MR. OLIVER ADAMS.

Mr Oliver Adams, in his opening address, referred to the Association, and urged all to assist in the work by joining. The speaker's remarks were principally in reference to insectivorous birds and their uses. In the Southern States the quail is protected because it has been found that this species of bird is a great benefit to the farmer, by eating noxious weeds, bugs, caterpillars, etc. What we want to-day is better protection for birds and fish. In regard to the latter it is legal fishing, and in consequence in lakes and streams where a few years ago there was excellent fishing, today there is virtually none. As law abiding citizens it was our duty to see that the game laws are properly enforced.

JUDGE FRALECK.

Judge Fraleck was called upon and said that as the farmer allows part of his farm to remain inactive so as to improve his farm, so our fish should be allowed to remain some years without being taken with nets, so as to allow them to increase. The fishermen had, in many instances, violated the law. The game was also being illegally slaughtered, even in this County. In closing the Judge said we had in the fish and game a heritage which we should all assist in protecting, and not be slaughterers. We should not allow our fish and game to be depleted either by Canadian or Yankee poachers.

A MINISTER'S VIEWS.

Rev. A. M. Hubly was called upon, and stated that he was thankful for the information that had been imparted. The laws of the land in their entirety should be respected and kept, and this applied to those with regard to fish and game as well as to all others. There is in our fish and game, if properly preserved, immense value to the country. There had been, the Rev. gentleman said, violation of the law in the part of the country from which he recently came, the lower provinces. He had known men to have been appointed overseers for the protection of game and fish who were political heelers, and were ready themselves to violate the law, and often did. He instanced one overseer who would, on the Sabbath, in the close season, take his gun and rod and go to fish and hunt. If such a man would not respect the Sabbath would he respect the law in regard to other matters? He thought not. The Rev. gentleman in concluding his remarks said it was necessary to see that the proper men were appointed to carry out the fish and game laws.

MUST HAVE GOOD OVERSEERS.

Mr. Ritchie was certain that good would grow out of the meeting. It was imperative that our rulers see that the fish and game laws were observed, and not appoint overseers who are simply tools in the hands of the politicians. On behalf of those present he thanked Messrs. Evans and Adams for their coming to the city and delivering the addresses which were of much value.

Queer Stories About Tweed Baby's Body.

BUT CORONER'S JURY FOUND THERE WAS NOTHING IN THEM —AN OPEN VERDICT RENDERED.

Tweed News: The adjourned inquest into the finding of an infant's body in the Moira River a couple of months ago was held in the town hall on Monday afternoon, Dr. Harner, of Madoc, coroner, presiding. Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, county crown attorney, conducted the case and Mr. Murray, of Toronto, provincial detective, was present to watch the case. Owing to the circulation of a story connecting Miss Lizzie Generoux with the case a large number of witnesses were examined but no evidence was produced to throw the faintest suspicion on the young lady.

Mrs. Joseph A. Generoux, who resides about four miles from Bridgewater, was the first witness. She had heard from Mrs. Gilbert Generoux that Lizzie Generoux had a baby before Christmas and that there was a baby in a trunk at the latter's home. Mrs. Louis Duyes had told this story to Mrs. Gilbert Generoux. Witness had been at Lizzie Generoux's several times but had never seen anything to indicate that there was any truth in the story.

Lottie Rodgers, the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. Wesley Rodgers, of Tweed, and Mrs. James Woodcock were called and told of finding the body in the river.

Lizzie Generoux was the next witness. She said that she was working in Madoc last summer and went to her home about the first of November, remaining there until New Year's when she went out to her uncle's at Maynooth. She positively denied ever being confined and that there was a baby in a trunk at their home. She gave her evidence in a straightforward manner and her frankness was convincing to the jury that she had no connection with the case in question.

Mrs. Nettie Eager, of Actinolite, was called but her evidence threw no light on the case.

Joseph Generoux and wife, father and step-mother of Lizzie Generoux also positively denied the story that had been circulated. The father was much worked up over the matter and had tried to ascertain the origin of the story but had found it a difficult task. Jos. A. Generoux was also sworn. He had heard the story from his wife but had been at Lizzie Generoux's and had never seen anything to substantiate it. This concluded the evidence and after retiring for a short time the jury brought in their finding, that the body of an infant had been found in the Moira River, but by what means it came to its death it was impossible to state.

The coroner's jury consisted of Wm. White, foreman; Miles Trumpour, Wesley Rodgers, J. F. Davis, John Pratt, D. Leslie, Stephen Cross, James Findley, Jas. Clare, E. R. Huyck, David Morton, G. C. Martin and Henry Irvine.

At Sign of the Scales.

WAGES CASE.

John Swan charged A. E. Phillips with refusing to pay him $17.35 alleged due for wages. Swan, it appears, worked for Phillips for some time as a farm laborer and left. The defendant's contention was that he did not owe Swan any such amount. After the evidence had been submitted, judgment was reserved for a week. Mr. Carnew appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. O'Flynn for the defendant.

Picton Landmark Will Be Removed.

Gazette: One of the old landmarks of the town will soon give place to the onward march of improvement —the old Church property. This structure was built by the late Adam Hubbs, who during the early history of Picton carried on the business of a tanner, as well as being the owner of a general store. The property was originally a part of the Abram Barker farm. Mr. Hubbs built about the year 1826, and resided in a small frame house, and as he prospered in business, added to it until the present structure was the result. In 1826 he occupies the house and it has been continually occupied by members of the family until the present time. The site having been purchased for the new Carnegie library, the old structure is to be removed, and upon its location will be reared an imposing structure at a cost of ten thousand dollars, which no doubt will be an ornament to the town.

Vital Statistics.

The vital statistics of the city for the month of May, as per register of the City Clerk, show there were 14 births, 3 marriages and 17 deaths. Of the latter 6 occurred outside of the city limits, but interment took place here.

King Alfonso Had A Narrow Escape

BOMB THROWER HAS BEEN ARRESTED — GEN. WEYLER SERIOUSLY WOUNDED.

London, June 1.—(Special.)—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Madrid to-day says the bomb thrower has been arrested, is confined in the Medio Dia police station and has confessed and supplied details of the outrage.

Another despatch from Madrid says King Alfonso had an even more miraculous escape than is generally known. A fragment of the bomb struck his breast, but the force was broken by the chain of the Portuguese order of Santiago, which he was wearing. The chain was broken but it stopped a piece of steel which might otherwise have pierced the King's breast.

Queen Victoria is irreconcilable, declaring that she is responsible for so many persons being killed.

Gen Weyler was seriously wounded by the bomb explosion. Five of the wounded are dying.

Villainous Act Of Vandalism.

A villainous act of vandalism was perpetrated on Victoria avenue on Wednesday night. No one who has seen them but has admired Dr. Tracy's splendid beds of tulips, which adorn his garden. There were some 200 bulbs, and the Doctor and Mrs. Tracy were justly proud of them. On Wednesday night last the bed was destroyed by some persons, presumably boys. It is to be hoped the perpetrators may be found out and punished. A horse-whipping would be about the correct thing.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

THE BELLEVILLE LADIES' VAUDEVILLE.

Only a fair-sized audience gathered at the opera house last night to witness the performance given by the Belleville Lady Minstrels. Those who stayed away missed a treat, for the show was quite unique and enjoyable, and showed that a vast amount of careful training had been given by Mr. Harry McIninch and his assistants. It came pretty near being an Adamless Eden—there was only one man in the cast, and he was dressed in ladies' attire. An orchestra of eight pieces was present, and rendered some tuneful music. The costumes were tasteful and some of them very pretty, the girls (when they were not in grotesque attire) looking just as sweet as a bunch of lilac on a May morning. The audience was out to get the worth of its money, and was very generous with its applause, the consequence being that pretty nearly everything on the programme was encored and repeated. The curtain went up on the first scene, a country school room on a Friday afternoon. The pupils were waiting for the teacher, and were having barrels of fun among themselves. Four "dunces" were the endmen, blacked up and dressed in a way that Solomon in all his glory or the Queen of Sheba, either, never dreamed of. The teacher, Mr. Bob. Sills, acted as interlocutor. He was very good. The dunces, with sugar loaf hats on, and smiles that nearly split their countenances in two, cracked jokes and sang coon songs. Their songs were, respectively, "Good-by, Mr. Greenback," by Miss Mabel McIninch; "On Your Way, Babe," by Miss Madge Blute; "Moving Day," by Miss Frankie Mackie, and "I'm Getting Sleepy," by Miss B. Eustace. The girls all sang in a chic way which delighted the audience. The balladists were Miss Tossie Mackie, who sang "My Jane, Jane, Jane;" Miss H. Bell, "Katie Dear;" and Miss S. Eustace, "Under the Harvest Moon." The teacher tore off a few ... one was very good. Miss Madge Blute, in a monologue and song, was vociferously applauded; Miss Ollie Steward, as "Mammy Jackson," with her ten pickannanies, gave a highly pleasing number, "Old Man Moon," a coon lullaby. Miss Annie Mair was warmly applauded in her song, "If a Boy Like You Loved a Girl Like Me." Miss Mabel McIninch and Miss Frankie Mackie and chorus, in a sketch, "So Long, Mary," made a hit. It was a very catchy number. Two little ladies, Misses L. Malyea and G. Hodge sang a pretty duet, "I'll Do Anything in the World for You," in splendid style. Then came a fancy song and dance by ten young ladies, namely; Boys, Misses J. Cunnington, F. Mackie, G. Mackie, B. McDonnell and M. McIninch; Girls, Misses H. Bell, M. Green, K. McDonnell, M. Blute and J. McDiarmid. The costumes and acting were fine, and the girls sang well and made a decidedly pretty picture. Next came one of the prettiest numbers of the evening, Miss G. Mackie in the "Daisy Song," introducing ten little girls dressed as daisies. Ten large daisies were in the background, and through them ten attractive young ladies poked their countenances and joined in the chorus. It was fine. A duet by Misses M. McIninch and Frankie Mackie, "A Little China Maid," was nicely sung, and deserved all the applause it received. The performance closed with the "Moon Song," a touch of comic opera, the costumes and chorus being simply "swell," as the boys would say. The soloists were Misses A. Mair, F. Mackie and H. Bell, who did full justice to their songs. Taken altogether, the performance was very pleasing and successful. Following are the names of all those who appeared on the programme;

Misses Annie Mair, Lena Martin, Marguerite Weir, Bessie Eustace, Frankie Mackie, Gyneth Mackie, Janie Cunnington, Mabel McIninch, Lizzie Cummins, Dorothy Cummins, Georgina Hodge, Loyola Malyea, Marguerite Burgoyne, Orril Jackson, Theophlice Mackie, L. Weese, Katie MacDonnell, Jessie McDiarmid, Stella Eustace, Gertie Alford, Hilda Bell, Madge Blute, Ollie Steward, Greta Green, Bella MacDonnell and Ella Boyd.

Manager McIninch desires to return his sincere thanks to the performers and orchestra who last night so kindly gave their services.

ASCENDANT RADICALS

Make Revolutionary Speeches in Russian Douma.

Abolish the Death Penalty the Fruitful Theme Caused by the Continuance of Executions — Peasant Leader and Orthodox Priest the Wildest Talkers —Resolution at Last Submitted to the Members of the House.

St. Petersburg, June 1.—Indignation over the execution of the eight revolutionists at Riga on the heels of the interpellation of the Government on the subject adopted by the Lower House of Parliament created a storm with the opening of the session yesterday.

After the reading of a message of congratulation from the President of the Argentine Parliament, couched in extremely cordial terms, which was received with much applause, the group of Radical Constitutional Democrats, supported by the workmen group, urged the necessity of immediately framing a law to abolish the death penalty, in view of the Government's refusal to cease executions.

Speeches Revolutionary.

The majority of the speeches were extremely revolutionary in tone and the moderate and Constitutional Democratic leaders had hard work in stemming the tide of radicalism which threatened to carry the House off its feet.

M. Alladin, the peasant leader, urged the necessity for the instant adoption of a law abolishing the death penalty and proclaiming general amnesty, as a supreme act of Parliament without regard to the action of the upper House or the Government, or else proclaim to the country that Parliament is impotent, all its powers having been usurped by the "owners of the Cossacks and machine guns."

Father Poyarnski, an orthodox priest of Voronezh, was second only to M. Alladin in violence of language. He declared that if the death penalty was not immediately abolished it would be the duty of Parliament to resolve to cease its attempt to legislate, disband and go home.

M. Naboukoff, leader of the Constitutional Democrats, Prof. Kusmin Karavieff, of the Tver delegation and other moderates, pleaded with the House not to take such a defiant step. While legislating in a legal fashion, and not forcing a rupture before the authority of Parliament had been established in the country.

In the end a compromise resolution was passed, practically with unanimity, instructing the committee on the inviolability of any person to present a bill within five days providing for the abolition of the death penalty, the bill to be considered urgent and the president of the House to fix a day for its consideration, not later than June 9.

Bribed to Murder Vice-Consul.

Tiflis, Transcaucasia, June 1.—The viceroy has received news that the assassins of William H. Stuart, the American vice-consul, at Batoum, who was killed on May 20, have been apprehended and have confessed that they were bribed to commit the crime, giving the name of the instigators, who also have been arrested. No details of the conspiracy are available.

She Didn't Sleep Well.

A woman who lives in an inland town, while going to a convention in a distant city, spent one night of the journey on board a steamboat. It was the first time she had ever traveled by water. She reached her journey's end extremely fatigued. To a friend who remarked it she replied:

"Yes, I'm tired to death. I don't know that I care to travel by water again. I read the card in my stateroom about how to put the life preserver on, and I thought I understood it, but I guess I didn't. Somehow I couldn't go to sleep with the thing on."

A Judge's Advice.

Recently a retired English judge was asked what was the most prominent conviction that remained with him after his long judicial experience, and he is said to have replied, "That every means should be tried for the settlement of a dispute before it be taken to the law courts."

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

BOMB IN BOUQUET FOR KING AND QUEEN

Queen Christina greeted the bride, after which the ladies breakfasted together in the Blue Salon of the Ministry.

Wedding Procession.

The wedding cortege started from the Royal Palace at 9.20 a. m. amid the ringing of church bells, the firing of artillery salutes and the clamorous enthusiasm of the crowds massed along the route.

Following the Spanish grandees and princes were the visiting princes, including the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Royal Bride and Bridegroom.

As the King's coach appeared it was greeted by a great roar, while the multitude wildly waved handkerchiefs, fans and parasols. His Majesty could plainly be seen smiling and bowing to the popular greetings.

ALFONSO XIII., KING OF SPAIN.

Immediately following the royal coach came the bride's party, forming another glittering array of gala coaches, bearing the lords and ladies in waiting and the princes and princesses of the House of Battenberg, and finally came the famed mahogany coach with the radiant bride, Princess Victoria, attended by her mother and Queen Marie Christina.

Flowers Showered on Bride.

The appearance of the princess who was about to become their Queen aroused the people to the highest pitch of emotion. Men and women cheered along the route showered flowers on the princess and let loose hundreds of pigeons carrying long bright streamers. The bride looked most charming and graciously acknowledged the continued ovations.

Ceremony at the Church.

On reaching the Chamber of Deputies the cortege came in sight of the Church of St. Jeronimo el Real, which was magnificently adorned for the ceremony. Over the entrance was suspended an immense canopy of red and yellow velvet, embroidered with Spanish escutcheons and supported on gold-tipped lances. Awaiting the bridal party stood lines of halberdiers and palace guards.

At 11 a. m. the bridal party entered the church.

The Crucial Moment.

As the royal couple entered the assemblage arose and 200 choristers intoned a processional march. The King looked calm and happy and slightly pale, as usual. Across the breast of the field marshal's uniform was the blue and white sash of the Order of Charles III., and on his breast sparkled the orders of the Garter and of the Golden Fleece.

The bride entered with her mother, brother and Queen Christinia, the silvered embroidery of her wedding dress being reflected by the myriad of lights until she seemed to be robed in jewels. Her veil, slightly drawn aside, revealed her clear, fine features, with cheeks full of of youthful color.

They Stand Together.

The King advanced to meet the bride and they stood together as the marriage service began. The ceremony was performed with all the impressiveness of the Roman ritual, Cardinal Sancha, Archbishop of Toledo, robed in crimson silk, officiating, assisted by a special nuncio of the Pope, and the highest dignitaries of the church, with scores of acolytes and incense burners. The ceremony, which lasted nearly an hour, terminated with the nuncia pronouncing the Pope's benediction of the newly-married couple, and the chanting of the Te Deum.

As the King and Princess Victoria were pronounced man and wife, the news was signalled to the waiting crowds, and all Madrid broke into frahtic demonstrations of joy, while cannon boomed and church bells chimed.

"Long Live Queen Victoria."

Entering the royal coach at 12.30 p.m., the King and Queen of Spain returned to the palace amid scenes of the wildest enthusiasm, the throngs shouting "Long live Queen Victoria."

COLLIDE IN ST. CLAIR

Canadian Steamer Erin Was Cut in Two.

Two Women and a Watchman Were Drowned—Steamer Cowle, Which Ran Down the Erin in St. Clair River, Kept Right On and Offered No Assistance — Fishermen's Heroic Work Saves Several Lives.

Detroit, Mich., June 1.—The steamer Erin, up-bound and towing the schooner Danforth, was run into and cut in two by the steamer Cowle in the St. Clair River, just below St. Clair early yesterday, and several members of the Erin's crew were drowned.

The dead are:—

Mrs. Mary Reed, Spanish River, Ont.

Watchman, shipped from Detroit; home Amherstburg, Ont.

Woman cook, Mrs. Hubert, Cleveland.

Cowle Kept Right On.

The Erin sank in twenty feet of water. Amos Chester, Fred Chester and Charles McLeod, fishermen on the Canadian side, being close at hand, save six people. Had they not gone to assist, all would have been drowned. The Cowle, it is said, kept right on her course, offering no assistance to the ill-fated craft.

The Erin is owned by Thomas Conlon, of Thorold, Ont., and the Cowle by the United States Transportation Co. of Cleveland. The collision occurred during a fog. The Cowle is a modern freighter, and it not thought to have been much damaged, while the Erin was a wooden vessel of the old type.

Six Were Rescued.

Six members of the Erin crew and the 13-year-old son of Mrs. Reed, who was on the steamer, were saved. Capt. Sullivan and the boy were picked up by the yawl of the Danforth, while fishermen saved Mate George Patterson, of Port Dalhousie, Ont., James Dagden and Grove Shock, of Windsor, Ont., and Thomas Lyon and George Fanshaw, of Gloversville, N. Y.

The rescued men were taken to the plant of the Great Lakes Engineering Co. at St. Clair.

The Erin was carrying 800 tons of coal from St. Catharines to Algoma Mills. Officers of the schooner Danforth charged that the Cowle did not stop and assist in the rescue of the Erin crew.

Saved by Wreckage.

Chief Engineer Patrick Quinn, Port Dalhousie; Fireman "Bang" Hill, St. Catharines, and the first mate, were reported drowned, but they later came ashore safely at Courtright, having clung to drifting wreckage.

His jaw suffers from a fractured jaw, his nose broken, both eyes closed up from the swelling and a compound fracture of the right arm. He is in the hospital here.

STRATHCONA'S APPROVAL.

Was, Swears W. T. R. Preston, Necessary to the Completion of N. A. T. Co.'s Agreement—Jury Monday.

Ottawa, June 1.—Back on the stand in the Public Accounts' Committee yesterday morning, W. T. R. Preston was called upon to explain more vouchers. Samuel Barker produced one of Somerville's Government advertising accounts, dated May, 1904, for £2,701. It had not been certified to by Preston, but the latter explained that he had probably certified to a duplicate. Another cheque for £250 had passed through the Lloyd's Bank Law Courts.

Mr. Barker asked how it came about that Leopold, recommended to John Ennis in February as "a very responsible fellow," was cashing £600 cheques for the department in June. Preston could not say.

Preston was unable to say why Somerville got £2,451 12s in four cheques, two at one time, instead of all together in one, and why there were four receipts instead of one.

A letter written to Lord Strathcona on the 15th of last April, in which Preston declared that he did not know who were in the North Atlantic Trading Co., brought Mr. Barker back to the personnel. Preston said that the letter was perfectly candid. He had had a suspicion as to the individuals, but not knowledge.

Another of Mr. Barker's efforts was directed toward showing from a letter written by Preston that the North Atlantic Trading Co. people were not afraid of prosecution.

"There was a pledge of secrecy all the time."

Lord Strathcona's Part.

Mr. Barker then asked if it would be fair to say that Lord Strathcona organized the company.

"We could not have formed the agreement without Lord Strathcona's assistance," said Preston, "nor concluded it without his approval."

"Can you point to one word in writing to show that the people were afraid of him?"

"Not in writing."

Mr. Barker wanted the letter under which Preston had been allowed to look at the names of the trading company.

"Will you produce it?"

"I will not."

"Did you show the names to any member of the Government?"

"I decline to answer."

Preston said that in showing the names he had gone outside of his authority.

Mr. Barker asked again for the names, and got the usual reply, notwithstanding a favorable ruling from the chairman. He then moved that the question, ruling and answer, be reported to the House.

"I second the motion," said the Finance Minister.

Alfred F. Jury will be called for the committee's Monday meeting.

THE GROCERS' GUILD.

Crown Attorney at Hamilton Hands Out Sensational Evidence.

Hamilton, June 1.—The case against the Wholesale Grocers' Guild, on the charge of conspiracy, was continued yesterday morning in the Police Court before Magistrate Jelfs and the Crown Attorney obtained evidence against the alleged combine of a highly sensational character.

Letters were submitted which showed that the guild had what it called an equalized sugar freight rate, that the rates of the railways, from whom the refiners got the difference in the form of rebates. Whether the guild got anything out of the rebate has not been shown yet.

It was shown that two grocers, Andrew McBean of Kingston and John Curtis of Port Hope, could not buy tobacco, sugar, syrup, starch or salt from the manufacturers or guild except at the retail rates.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, June 1.—Three speeches were made in the debate on the land policy of the Government in the House yesterday, the speakers being Mr. Lake (Qu'Appelle), Hon. Clifford Sifton and Hon. Geo. E. Foster. Mr. Turiff (East Assiniboia) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Fitzpatrick's Retirement.

Ottawa, June 1.—(From Globe Special)—Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick of the Supreme Court on Saturday, and will enter upon his judicial duties on Monday. Mr. Aylesworth will become Minister of Justice, and Mr. Lemieux may enter the Cabinet as Postmaster-General.

Lloyd Struck Off the Rolls.

Toronto, June 1.—Yesterday, there was entered in the records at Osgoode Hall the order signed by the Senior Registrar of the Supreme Court of Judicature, for Ontario, by which the name of Thomas Hiram Lloyd, solicitor, of Newmarket, now undergoing a term of imprisonment for embezzlement, was struck off the rolls.

Englishman Was Arrested.

Known As a Companion of the Spanish Bomb-Thrower.

Morales, Missing Suspect in Attempt to Assassinate the King and Queen of Spain, Had Plenty of Money and Laid His Plans Thoroughly—Ministry Considering Stringent Measures For Suppressing Anarchism.

Madrid, June 2.—The magnitude of the attempt on the lives of King Alfonso and Queen Victoria increases. The number killed is now given as 20 and the wounded at 60. During the night thirty arrests were made. Among the seriously injured is Gen. Weyler.

The Ministry has decided to continue the fetes for the purpose of allaying public apprehension. Queen Victoria is irreconcilable, declaring that she is responsible for so many persons being killed.

King Alfonso had even a more miraculous escape than is generally known. A fragment of the bomb struck his breast, but the force was broken by the chain of the Portuguese Order of Santiago, which he was wearing. The chain was broken, but it stopped a piece of steel which might have pierced the King's breast.

Through Madrid on Automobile.

King Alfonso and his bride before luncheon yesterday rode through the streets of Madrid in an automobile without an escort. They were loudly acclaimed by the people.

By direction of the Ministry no flowers were received at the palace yesterday, owing to the danger of missiles being concealed in bouquets.

The searches made by the police disclosed the fact that the author of the outrage was Manuel Morales, a man of luxury and wealth. He left many valuables and fine clothes behind him in his hurried flight. He bought a bouquet of flowers before the attempt and concealed the bomb within it. This bouquet was thrown amid the strewing of the flowers which fell upon the coach as a greeting to their Majesties. The would-be assassin rented an overlooking balcony at a fabulous price.

An Englishman a Suspect.

An individual arrested yesterday closely corresponds with the description of the author of Thursday's explosion. He is said to be an Englishman, and gives the name of Robert Hamilton. He is about 50 years old and was pointed out in the streets to the Spanish police by English detectives who came here to attend the wedding festivities. His arrest cause great excitement among the people and the soldiers had to assist the police in taking the man to the station. He is of good appearance and somewhat resembles the man the police are looking for.

The suspect says he went to a bull fight Thursday afternoon, but he does not explain how he passed his time Thursday morning.

Will Answer British Questions.

He refuses to give the Spanish police any further information, but adds that he is willing to answer any question the British consul may put to him. The prisoner speaks English, Spanish and Italian. When searched at the police station, a knife and fork and seventy-five pesettas were found in the man's possession.

A member of the civil guard yesterday afternoon recognized Hamilton, the English suspect, as a companion to Manuel Morales, on the balcony from which the bomb was thrown at the royal carriage. The two men were also seen together at Barcelona.

To Suppress Anarchists.

The Ministry is considering stringent measures for the suppression of anarchism, and probably bills will be presented in the Cortes to stamp out the movement. Arrests are being made of all known anarchists.

It is asserted that letters were received in Government quarters last night asserting that this would not be the last attempt, as the band of conspirators had declared its intention to keep up the effort.

Thomas Cote Nearly Drowned.

Ottawa, June 2.—Thomas Cote, secretary of the International Waterways Commission, had a narrow escape from drowning Thursday evening in the canal. Mr. Cote and a few friends, among them his sister, were in a skiff when the swells from a gasoline yacht caused an upset. Mr. Cote saved his sister and another lady and was going down the third time when he was rescued.

Asphyxiated.

Hamilton, June 2.—Robert Walker, 323 York street, was asphyxiated Thursday night by gas that escaped from a small gas stove. It is thought that while retiring Mr. Walker accidentally tipped the stove, turning on the tap.

Revolution is Progressing.

Mexico City, Mex., June 2.—The Guatemalan revolution is progressing. Ocos is not recaptured yet, but the revolutionists in Northern Guatemala have received reinforcements and more arms.

Never Too Late to Learn.

London, June 2.—(C. A. P.)—For judging Ayrshire cattle in Scotland, John Howie has issued a scale of points drawn from suggestions of Ayrshire breeders in Canada and the United States.

A Boy's Offence.

Brockville, June 2.—For committing an assault upon his cousin, aged four years, Grant Halady of Elgin, was yesterday sentenced to one month in jail by Judge McDonald. The prisoner is 15 years old.

Josephine Terranova Not Guilty.

New York, June 2.—Josephine Terranova was found last night not guilty of the charge of murdering her aunt, Mrs. Concetta Reggio.

Fractured His Skull.

Hamilton, June 2.—Robert Neil, a deck hand on the Modjeska, fell from a plank at the beach last evening and fractured his skull.

Woman Is Given a High Honor.

New York, June 2.—A special to The Herald from Cambridge, Mass., says: Mrs. Wilhelmina Paton Fleming, who has achieved fame through her discovery of stars in connection with her

To insure the physical fitness of emigrants for residence in the Dominion the applicants are medically examined. Thirty-one adults and six children who passed the required examination embarked at Glasgow recently. Each adult emigrant received two new complete outfits of clothing, a steerage ticket and $5 or $6 pocket money. It is calculated that the cost to the taxpayers will slightly exceed $40 for each adult person sent abroad, not including the outfits of clothing, which, it is believed, will be largely provided by contributions of apparel and money. The first party of emigrants have been guaranteed work for twelve months on diary farms in Ontario. Four are married men, over 20 and under 40 years of age. With one or two exceptions the single men are between the ages of 20 and 30.

The development of the Leith emigration scheme is watched with much interest and not without misgiving by the people of Edinburgh and other communities in Scotland. The extent to which it can be carried seems measurable only by the very elastic term "unemployed."

Brothers and Sisters.

It has been proved again and again that a boy without a sister is much to be pitied, that a girl without a brother is to be condoled with; and why? Because the mutual society improves both. The boy teaches the girl to be wider-minded, less petty and narrow, more manly physically; but, above all, to understand something of the opposite sex. Again, the boy is a hundredfold nicer for having a sister. He confides his little scrapes to her, and she, with her gentle inborn goodness, helps him and advises him to avoid the pitfall again.—

The ribbed roof, of emerald green tiles—specially imported from Italy in about sixty great crates—rises from projecting eaves of cream-white terra cotta. The stately chimneys are of white terra cotta, with spaces of blue tiles.

The effect of the masses of rich color, cooled by the pillars and arches and cornice of cream-white terra cotta, is one of splendid harmony, and the whole house crystallizes into a picture of perfectly balanced parts and the most beautiful hues.

The "front" of the house is like the road face, save that at each extremity projections, something of the "bow-window" type, but running up from ground to cornice, have been skilfully added. There is the same wealth of color and masterly design.

The sides are further dignified with arched, recessed porticos, of great height, the main entrance being at one side, and a garden entrance at the other.

The centre of the interior is a large and lofty hall, the walls of which are now in course of being faced with peacock-blue tiles, of deep tints. The lofty roof is domed, and through arched spaces below the dome one sees a gallery on three sides of the hall, giving access to the upper rooms.

Most of the rooms in the house are of comparatively modest dimensions, but the library, overlooking the garden, is a royal apartment.

"Yes," he said, "I wish to adopt a girl."

"A little girl?"

"No, a girl old enough to have energy and perseverance and one who has had enough experience with the piano to make her think she knows how to play it. And if she thinks she can sing, why, so much the better. I tell you, I am going to get even with the people in the next flat even if I have to adopt two musical prodigies."

An Extraordinary Woman.

Dr. Abernethy, the famous Scotch surgeon, was a man of few words, but once he met his match in a woman. She called at his office in Edinburgh one day and showed a hand badly inflamed and swollen, when the following dialogue, opened by the doctor, took place:

"Burns?"

"Bruise."

"Poultice."

The next day the woman called again, and the dialogue was as follows:

"Better?"

"Worse."

"More poultice."

Two days later the woman made another call, and this conversation occurred:

"Better?"

"Well. Fee?"

"Nothing," exclaimed the doctor. "Most sensible woman I ever met."

Medical Inspection Of School Children.

The medical inspection of school children attending schools is rapidly coming to the front in the larger cities, where, in most instances the results have been found very beneficial. There is naturally some prejudice to be overcome, but where the system has been tried the vast majority of parents heartily welcome the school doctor's advice and help, and not only merely facilitate the periodical examinations, but carry out faithfully the directions given.

Germany gets credit for inaugurating and perfecting the system, and it has been tried there for the last seventeen years.

Leipzig took the lead in 1889, and there are now about 600 inspectors at work in various German cities. A study of them was recently made by Mr. W. H. Dawson, for the World's Work an English magazine, and his observations furnish an interesting estimate of the working and benefits of inspection after a somewhat extended trial.

Wiesbaden is said to be the best example of the system and the methods of its workings. A thorough medical examination is made of each child and the medical certificate recognises three degrees of physical and three of mental fitness. In accordance with the results of the examination each child is given a course of study suitable to it, or, if necessary, is ordered to remain away from school altogether until health improves. Twice a year the height and weight and sometimes the chest measurement, of each pupil are taken by the teacher, and a thorough examination is made in the third, fifth and eighth school year.

Probably the most valuable feature of the medical inspection is the discovery of weakness, which, if allowed to run, would have developed serious results. In Berlin, at the introduction of the system in 1902, 12.3 per cent. of the children applying for admission were put back for the time as unfitted. The reasons given were physical weakness, recent serious illness, delicate constitution, insufficient development and tuberculosis. Last year nearly 3000 out of 34,562 were put back in the same way, and 7,000 were placed under special supervision. The chief causes were general weakness and defective sight. An important statement in the school doctor's report is that most children in the early stages of tuberculosis attend school without either parent or teacher having any suspicion of the disease. By detecting this dread disease in its early stages, it is believed that many lives are saved to the State, and the spread of the "plague" is materially curtailed.

Waste of Money in the Yukon.

As an instance of the reckless extravagance of the Dominion Government its administration of the Yukon's district is a shining example.

The Interior Department looks after gold mines and collects royalties and dues of all sorts. It cost last year $476,000 for that department alone in the Yukon, which was $68,000 more than it collected. This department maintains the ridiculous number of seventy officials to look after the 8,000 people. These officers having salaries and living allowances of nearly $200,000. There is a chief commissioner at $6000 a year, and another $6000 living allowance, besides which $10,610 was expended last year on the maintenance and furnishing of the house in which he lives. There is a gold commissioner at $5,000 and $1,100 living allowance, an assistant at $4,000 and the same allowance, a registrar at $4,000 and $1,500 allowance, a controller at $3,000 plus $1,300, a land agent at $2,400 plus $1,100, and so on. The customs department costs twenty per cent of all it collects, and employs thirty officers or one for every 250 people in the country. It costs more to-day to police the Yukon than it did with a disorderly population four times as large. No less than $6[illegible] head goes for polic[illegible] Dominion sides another [illegible] medically examined, 000 [illegible] adults and six children wh[illegible] the required examination embarked at Glasgow recently. Each adult emigrant received two new complete outfits of clothing, a steerage ticket and $5 or $6 pocket money. It is calculated that the cost to the taxpayers will slightly exceed $40 for each adult person sent abroad, not including the outfits of clothing, which, it is believed, will be largely provided by contributions of apparel and money. The first party of emigrants have been guaranteed work for twelve months on diary farms in Ontario. Four are married men, over 30 and under 40 years of age. "Con." immediately pricked up his ears and got interested. Hearing the noise of footsteps coming downstairs, he stepped to one side to see the march past of his supposed fellow Celts. SHUN SOUP, SAYS OSLER.

FAMOUS PHYSICIAN SAYS IT IS POSITIVELY DANGEROUS.

"Dr. Osler certainly set the country by the ears when he advocated chloroform for those who had passed the fortieth milestone, but I heard him make another statement that might be considered fully as startling," said a New York merchant at luncheon the other day. "Several years ago my wife was a wreck from nervous dyspepsia. Several prominent physicians here had treated her without success and finally I was advised to take her to Baltimore to see Dr. Osler.

"He inquired carefully about her habits and particularly her diet. We described it without going into details, but this did not satisfy the great physician.

"'Tell me what you have for dinner, describing the nature of the courses, their number and so on,' he insisted.

"'Well, usually we start with some good, nourishing soup,' I began.

"'Stop right there,' interrupted Dr. Osler. 'Soup must go. There is a popular fallacy that soup is nourishing. That is a mistake. It is one of the most harmful things one can eat. It is worse than lobster. Of course, there are times when a simple beef or mutton broth is not to be condemned. But as a rule soup is positively dangerous. It dilutes the gastric juices and it ferments too rapidly to permit it to be easily digested. It is the greatest cause of dyspepsia and nervous disorders. Vegetable soup should be thrown into the garbage pail, where it belongs, instead of being poured into a delicate stomach. Half the nervous wrecks among society folk who live well are caused by eating soup.'

"Dr. Osler gave some other advice, which was followed by my wife in addition to giving up soup. Soup is never served at our table and has not been for four years. My wife is well and strong to-day, and she can eat anything on the menu except soup."

FARMS FOR SALE.

It is about 1,000 years ago since the fork made its appearance in Europe. In 90 A. D. a son of the doge Pietro Orsolo had wedded in Venice the Brizantine Princess Argila, who produced at the wedding breakfast a silver fork and gold spoon. Then the high Venetion families followed suit, and these martyrs to fashion pricked their lips with the new instrument. The fork prospered, however, and spread over Italy. In 1370 it had traveled as far as France, and in 1608 a traveler brought it direct to England.

LEITH'S AID TO EMIGRANTS.

Scottish Town First to Adopt Scheme Under the New Law.

Municipal aid is now being furnished to emigrants from Leith, Scotland, and the result is being watched with great interest. The unemployed workman act of 1905 authorizes the appointment of distress committees by the local authorities of cities and towns and provides that "the central body may, if they think fit, in any case of an unemployed person referred to them by the distress committee, assist that person by aiding the emigration or removal to another area of that person and any of his dependents, or by providing or contributing toward the provision of temporary work." Any expenses incurred which shall not be met by voluntary contributions are to be paid out of the rates or taxes.

Leith is the first municipality in Scotland, if not in the United Kingdom, to adopt an emigration scheme. There are about four hundred unemployed workmen in that city, and it is proposed by the distress committee to send to Canada as many as are physically fit for farm work and are willing to emigrate. A limited number of married men, with their wives and children, will be included in the list.

To insure the physical fitness of emigrants for residence in the Dominion the applicants are medically examined. Thirty-one adults and six children who passed the required examination embarked at Glasgow recently. Each adult emigrant received two new complete outfits of clothing, a steerage ticket and $5 or $6 pocket money. It is calculated that the cost to the taxpayers will slightly exceed $40 for each adult person sent abroad, not including the outfits of clothing, which, it is believed, will be largely provided by contributions of apparel and money. The first party of emigrants have been guaranteed work for twelve months on diary farms in Ontario. Four are married men, over 30 and under 40 years of age. With one or two exceptions the single men are between the ages of 20 and 30.

The development of the Leith emigration scheme is watched with much interest and not without misgiving by the people of Edinburgh and other communities in Scotland. The extent to which it can be carried seems measurable only by the very elastic term "unemployed."

Brothers and Sisters.

It has been proved again and again that a boy without a sister is much to be pitied, that a girl without a brother is to be condoled with; and why? Because the mutual society improves both. The boy teaches the girl to be wider-minded, less petty and narrow, more manly physically; but, above all, to understand something of the opposite sex. Again, the boy is a hundredfold nicer for having a sister. He confides his little scrapes to her, and she, with her gentle inborn goodness, helps him and advises him to avoid the pitfall again.—

OF MANY COLORS.

Elegant Palace of Peacock Hues and Stately Design Is Being Erected For Wealthy Merchant In London.

A house for Mr. E. R. Debenham of the well known drapery firm of Debenham & Freebody, is being built in the west end that makes every other house in London look insignificant and colorless and cheap.

It is nothing less than an Italian palace—on a moderate scale as regards size—and when it is finished it promises to eclipse any house on this side of the Atlantic or the other in stateliness of design, richness of color, and exquisite beauty of proportion and internal decorativeness.

It is planted, like any ordinary London box of bricks and mortar, in Addison road, half-way between Kensington High road and Shepherd's Bush.

It is a square building, with its "face" to the road, but each face is as rich as the others in design and material.

The square face towards the road is made up of four bays, or slightly recessed spaces, running up nearly to the cornice, and round-arched at the top. They are divided by pillars of cream-white terra cotta, from which the arches, of the same material, spring. The four spaces, save for the long, severely cut windows, are made of highly glazed green bricks, of a rich sea color.

Above the arches and below the cornice there runs a kind of deep plain frieze of sapphire—also of glazed brick; while the smaller band between the cornice and the roof is a blue of the most gorgeous peacock hue. The ribbed roof, of emerald green tiles specially imported from Italy in about sixty great crates—rises from projecting eaves of cream-white terra cotta. The stately chimneys are of white terra cotta, with spaces of blue tiles.

The effect of the masses of rich color, cooled by the pillars and arches and cornice of cream-white terra cotta, is one of splendid harmony, and the whole house crystallizes into a picture of perfectly balanced parts and the most beautiful hues.

The "front" of the house is like the road face, save that at each extremity projections, something of the "bow-window" type, but running up from ground to cornice, have been skilfully added. There is the same wealth of color and masterly design.

The sides are further dignified with arched, recessed porticos, of great height, the main entrance being at one side, and a garden entrance at the other.

The centre of the interior is a large and lofty hall, the walls of which are now in course of being faced with peacock-blue tiles, of deep tints. The lofty roof is domed, and through arched spaces below the dome one sees a gallery on three sides of the hall, giving access to the upper rooms.

Most of the rooms in the house are of comparatively modest dimensions, but the library, overlooking the garden, is a royal apartment.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

HALF MILLION FOR COBBLER.

Through Family Compromise on Australia Fortune Comes to Light.

Forty-eight hours ago G. S. Moule was merely a Devonport shoemaker; to-day he is the owner of at least £100,000, remarks The London Express.

The change in his circumstances was announced in the briefest of cablegrams to his solicitors. It ran: "Melbourne, April 19. Osmand judgment. Moule's claim successful."

Five years ago Mr. W. H. Seville Osmand, a member of the Victorian Legislature, died intestate. He was the son of a naval doctor, who was at Trafalgar, and afterwards set up in practice at Plympton.

Mr. Osmand emigrated to Australia on the death of his parents, made money when gold was discovered in Victoria, and invested his money in sheep runs. Fortune smiled on him and he married.

His wife died, and the childless widower felt yearnings for his native place. More than once he sailed from Australia to Devon in his yacht, and when he died in Victoria, in March, 1901, his body was, at his request, brought to England, and buried at Plympton.

Mr. Osmand had made enquiries about his relatives during his visits to his native place, but he had adopted no heir, and he left directions that his property—it was estimated at about £200,000—should be apportioned under the rules of intestacy.

The onus of discovering the next of kin was thrown on the executors. Two families named Booty and Baker established their relationship on the female side, and then Mrs. Moule was discovered.

She was the daughter of an elder brother of Mr. Osmand, whose legitimacy was contested by the other claimants.

A commission sat at Plympton in October, 1904, to investigate the claims, and a private arrangement was made between the various sets of claimants. Consequently only formal evidence was tendered, but the Australian courts ordered the commission to sit again for the cross-examination of witnesses.

The second enquiry was held at Plympton last July, and produced other claimants from New York.

The result was laid before the Victorian Supreme Court, which has now decided in favor of the Moule family, who will acquire the entire fortune and settle the claims of the Baker and Booty families in the terms of the compromise arrived at in 1904.

Mrs. Moule, through whom the family derives the inheritance, died two years ago.

Her husband is 64 years of age, and wealth has come too late for him to change the habits of a life-time.

One of his children is a chief petty officer in the navy, whose pension is due in three years, and who means to earn it in spite of the inheritance; another is in the coast-guard service, and is stationed at Fowey; a third is a constable in the Metropolitan Police, and the only daughter is married to a naval seaman stationed at Devonport.

Force of Vibration.

The wonderful force of vibration is recognized in all its power by few architects and builders. It would amuse them if they were told that the most solidly built of their walls would be injured by the continuous scraping of a bow across the violin. Of course, it would take years of playing to loosen masonry and render iron brittle, but there are facts on record which show that such a result has occurred. On a first-class battleship a man may feel the vibrations of a violin though he may not be able to hear the music.

A good illustration of the power of vibration can be found in the Greenwich Observatory. It stands on the top of a hill on whose slopes hundreds of children play on fine evening. Their favorite play is to join hands at the top and dash headlong to the bottom, where they fall in a heap. This starts the vibration of the hill to such an extent that the scientists of the observatory are unable to carry on their observations, which depend upon the motionless state of a tray of mercury. The solid hill is in such a state of tremor that the vibrations continue till long past midnight, when the children who have caused it have been asleep for hours.

A still more wonderful illustration of vibration is in the human throat. Sixty vibrations per second is the least number by means of which a sound can be produced. This is a sound never used in speaking, but is found in men's voices in an extremely low register. The highest sound produced by the human voice—that is E in altissimo—is caused by 1,024 vibrations per second. This, too, is exceptional, being only obtainable in the highly cultivated female or boy voices.

It is simply the vocal chords which vibrate, not the throat. In the lower notes the whole length and thickness of the vocal chords are used, the thin edges being employed for the highest ones. Thus in speaking for a minute or two there is sufficient vibration engendered in the throat, were its walls of a solid nature instead of soft and flexible, to shatter and destroy it. Every minute we speak the vocal chords vibrate from 20,000 to 40,000 times.

A Body of Talkers.

It is the rule in the Australian Parliament that the speeches of every member must be reported verbatim. As a result of this perpetual note-taking the printed record for the session concluded at Christmas ran to twenty-six volumes of 7,052 pages, or about 6,000,000 words. One of the leading Australian dailies describes them as dreary pages and ponderous tomes—"an unceasing stream of unnecessary repetition and wearisome speech. Talkativeness is veritably the curse of the Commonwealth Parliament.

Preparing to Get Even.

"Yes," he said, "I wish to adopt a girl."

"A little girl?"

"No, a girl old enough to have energy and perseverance and one who has had enough experience with the piano to make her think she knows how to play it. And if she thinks she can sing, why, so much the better. I tell you, I am going to get even with the people in the next flat even if I have to adopt two musical prodigies."

An Extraordinary Woman.

Dr. Abernethy, the famous Scotch surgeon, was a man of few words, but once he met his match in a woman. She called at his office in Edinburgh one day and showed a hand badly inflamed and swollen, when the following dialogue, opened by the doctor, took place:

"Burns?"

"Bruise."

"Poultice."

The next day the woman called again, and the dialogue was as follows:

"Better?"

"Worse."

"More poultice."

Two days later the woman made another call, and this conversation occurred:

"Better?"

"Well. Fee?"

"Nothing," exclaimed the doctor. "Most sensible woman I ever met."

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Liszt

FRANZ LISZT, born 1811, died 1886, was the first of those great pianists of the 19th century, which, after himself, produced such brilliant stars as Rubinstein and Paderewski. Though he was an eminent composer and conductor, he will be remembered as the first representative of the modern style of piano playing and the greatest yet in his art.

Like Mozart and Beethoven, he was early placed under a teacher, so that by the time he was nine years old he played wonderfully the most difficult music, even extemporizing correctly upon airs suggested by his audiences. Soon after his 25th year he made concert tours over Europe and was for many years the idol of the musical world. About 1850 he wholly gave up concert performances for conducting. Finally in 1868 he devoted himself to teaching and composition. As piano pieces for display of brilliant technic his "Hungarian Rhapsodies," especially No. 2, are unequalled by any other composer.

It was Liszt who first showed the world the marvellous possibilities of the modern piano. If it had not been for his improvements in fingering and other matters, the brilliant technic, expressive shading, orchestral effects in piano playing would have been impossible. It was his work that stimulated manufacturers to vie with one another until it was possible to give to the world so finished an instrument as which in every regard, mechanical and tonal, is The Perfect Concert Piano.

The Cost of a Furnace really begins after you buy it and pay for it. It comes in the amount of fuel you feed to it and in repairs. The best furnace is actually the cheapest.

Sectional View of Buck's Leader Furnace

Buck's "Leader" Furnace is built to give cheap heat, lots of it, and to last a lifetime.

Its firepot is in sections—it will never wear out.

Its proportions of firepot and radiating surface are exact, every heat unit in the fuel being extracted and used.

Its radiator is of solid steel and every joint in it is absolutely air and gas-tight.

It can burn wood as successfully as coal, the feed-door being very large.

It requires no expert to run it and will stand rough usage.

Its massive construction and scientific principles make it the most durable, powerful and economical heater ever built.

An absolute guarantee goes with every

TIMELY TOPICS.

AN OLD-FASHIONED BOY.

I wonder if the graylings,
  Are biting like they did,
I wonder if the trout are Hiding from some kid,
Like they used to sulk and hide from
  A kid I used to know;
A rarum tarum scarum
  Happy kid of long ago,

I wonder if another kid
  Has found the ellum tree,
The good old slippery ellum
  And has peeled it same as me;
I wonder if another kid
  Has found the sassafras
And has dug and peeled and dried it,
  For a bashful little lass.

I wonder if another kid
  As full of rowdy dow
Is perched upon a gate post
  Making willow whistles now?
I wonder if he's making,
  Like a kid of long ago
A whistle bigger than he
  Can muster breath to blow.

I wonder if he begs a bite
  Of red-cheeked apple, too,
And hogs a mouthful bigger
  A lot than he can chew;
I wonder if he's longing
  For the time when he will grow
To be a man, like that glad kid
  I knew so long ago.

I'd love to meet that little kid
  In careless, ragged clothes—
God bless him, every bit of him,
  From tousled crown to toes!
And catch the tune he whistles
  Down the paths of long ago,
That rarum, tarum scarum,
  Happy kid of long ago!

As compared with the English, the American people lack the power of concentration and of holding their attention on one movement until it has been carried to its end. The Englishman has the capacity of getting angry and storing up righteous anger as a motive power until the abuse against which he protests has been removed. The American gets angry, and in a day or two either forgets or jokes about the offence which aroused his indignation.

At a Methodist district meeting in Winnipeg this week a resolution was adopted asking the general conference to so modify the itinerant pastorate law as to permit the pastor to remain with a congregation as long as his relations with his people are satisfactory, to both. It also declared that in view of great services rendered in all departments of the church work by women they should be rendered eligible to election as officers to serve on quarterly boards or in conference.

The City Court of Utica, N.Y., was filled with wild wailing the other afternoon when Judge O'Connor took a flat legal file, made of hardwood, and, in the good old-fashioned way, spanked seven small boys who had stolen rubber boots. The boys yelled piteously as the judge applied his interpretation of what was good for them. They were allowed to go at the end of the treatment. "Every one of you will get a worse spanking than that if you are brought in here again," the judge warned them. The mothers of the boys were witnesses of the spanking and all of them applauded, except one, who prayed audibly while the boys made the court-room resound with yells.

Bishop Peck of the Methodist Episcopal church was a large man, weighing between three hundred and fifty and four hundred pounds. While on a tour and stopping at the residence of a presiding elder, the good bishop turned over in his bed, and the entire furniture collapsed, dropping him to the floor with a tremendous thud. The presiding elder rushed upstairs, calling, "What is the matter, bishop Is there anything I can do for you?" "Nothing is the matter," the bishop answered; "but if I don't answer the call for breakfast tell your wife to look for me in the cellar."—New York Tribune.

SHE WANTED TIME FOR THOUGHT.

Captain Hobson said; "The most perfect exhibition of coolness ever made came from a friend of mine—an old man now, but still a bachelor.

"This gentleman loved a beautiful widow in the summer of '96. He courted her with ardor through the months of July and August, and in September he proposed.

"It was a cool evening, the evening of the proposal, and my friend and the widow sat indoors, the light lowered, the dusk faintly illuminated by a fire of birch logs.

"'So,' my friend ended, 'I love you, and I ask your hand in marriage.' He rose. 'Will you,' he said, 'be mine?'

"The widow gazed at the flame thoughtfully. Then in a low, appealing voice she said;

"'Don't make me answer immediately. Give me a little time for thought.'

"'Very good,' said my friend. 'How long do you want?'"

"'A half hour,' murmured the widow.

"'A half hour be it,' said my friend, taking up his hat. 'And in the meanwhile, he added, 'I'll just go down to Smith's and get a shave."

THE KING DIDN'T QUAKE.

When Shocks Shocked the Good People of the Riviera.

King Edward's experience with earthquakes, although of a restricted character, is sufficiently entertaining to be placed on record, writes the Marquise de Fontenoy. It may be remembered that about 15 years ago there was quite a severe earthquake along the French and Italian Riviera, which bowled over a number of badly constructed buildings, knocked others out of plumb, and created a good deal of alarm. It came very suddenly during the night time. The walls of every room in the hotel where King Edward, then Prince of Wales, was staying, groaned. The floors creaked and the furniture rattled. All the dogs in it howled together, and the noisy macaw in the manager's office screeched at the top of his voice. Then came a lull, as sudden as the disturbance, and the smothered sound of many slippered feet, and soft, rustling gowns were hurrying along the corridors and down the marble stairs. And the prince? At the first suggestion of danger his faithful equerry, Gen. Sir Stanley Clarke, bounded out of bed, and making his way across the smoking saloon, knocked at the door of the prince's bedroom.

"What's the matter?" asked a drowsy voice.

"There's an earthquake; come, sir," was the shouted reply.

"Then, why don't you send it away?"

"Won't you come outside, sir?"

"Outside? No, certainly not. I'm in bed. Go away."

The equerry, his duty performed, followed the hurrying crowd out into the open air, under the deep blue sky and tranquil stars. After an hour of this peaceful scene, alarm died away, and everyone had returned to the hotel to dress when the second shock came, driving them all out again into the garden.

The equerry's thoughts again at once flew to the sleeping prince. The heir apparent to the throne of Great Britain was, in a measure, in his special charge. How had he acquitted himself of his sacred stewardship? A twinge of conscience made him feel uncomfortable as he sat out there in the still garden on an inverted watering pot, expecting the tall chimneys of the diplomat's house across the square to come toppling down over him. He had not aroused the prince at the second shock. So he got up, returned to the hotel, and, passing through the public rooms—His Royal Highness was on the ground floor, in a sort of annex, that projected into a private flower-planted court—reached the prince's door and knocked.

There was no response. He knocked again. Still no answer. A third, louder than before—loud enough, in fact, to rouse all the seven sleepers. But still no answering voice. And then the horrid truth, sudden as was the earthquake shock, flashed into the wretched equerry's mind. Something was wrong. Had the prince perished? In an instant he had flung the door open and dashed across the anteroom. The curtains at the door of the bed-chamber were drawn close together. With a frenzied hand he seized them and drew them apart. As he did so, something — but whether an aerolite, a thunderbolt, or a falling beam he knew not — struck him full in the face. Strange lights danced before his eyes. His head swam, and in a momentary faintness he leaned against the door. But next moment a voice fell on his ear, grave and reproachful! "Look here, Clarke, I won't have any more of this, and if you don't shut up making that beastly row and let me go to sleep, I'll shy the other boot at you."

Dresses of Spider Web.

The worm is proverbially the last of created things to turn against the tyranny of those who seek to coerce it, and the silkworm is evidently no exception to the rule, for it has for ages been patiently laboring to gratify human vanity. Not so the spider, however, whose beautiful silk has not yet been similarly applied, simply because that wily beast refuses to work to order, but a determined onslaught upon his pride and prejudices has been made in Madagascar, where a regular factory has been started to make silk dresses from spider web. The old difficulty has still to be faced, however, and time alone will show whether man or the spider is to be the victor. The spiders, which spin luxuriously in their native groves, sulk or fight or devour their young or otherwise amuse themselves when brought to the factory, but they will not work except just occasionally, when the mood happens to strike them. Then they sometimes spin for days at a time and die of overwork. Their habits and customs are being carefully studied, and if only they will do what is required of them they will be made as comfortable as circumstances will permit. Altogether it is the prettiest little parlor. Perhaps the spider may yet be induced to walk in and favor the proprietor with those silk dresses for which the world is still waiting.—Chamber's Journal.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

ASTONISHED THE DOCTOR

Physician said She Might Drop Dead at any time.

MRS. ROBERT EATON

"The Doctor told me I had heart disease and was liable to drop on the street at any time," says Mrs. Robert Eaton, of Dufferin, Ont.

"I was afraid to draw my breath, it pained me so. I was nervous, short of breath, had dizziness, loss of appetite, smothering and sinking spells, and I could not sleep.

"Sometimes I would have to lie down to keep from falling. My hands and feet would seem to go to sleep and a sort of numbness would come all over me.

"I began using Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. From the start I improved. I feel much stronger, look better, and altogether Anti-Pill has made a new woman of me.

"I am entirely cured."

The Fate of a Crown . .

... BY ...
SCHUYLER STAUNTON

Copyright, 1905, by The Reilly & Britton Co.

Presently we regained our carriage and were driven rapidly from the morgue.

This drive was longer than the first, but during it no word was spoken by any of my companions. I could not help staring at the closed eyes of Mazanovitch, but the others, I noticed, avoided looking at him. Did he see, I wondered?—could he see from out the tiny slit that showed beneath his lashes?

We came at last to a quiet street lined with small frame houses, and before one of these the carriage stopped. Mazanovitch opened the front door with a latch key, and ushered us into a dimly lighted room that seemed fitted up as study and office combined.

Not until we were seated and supplied with cigars did the little man speak. Then he reclined in a cushioned chair, puffed at his cheroot, and turned his face in my direction.

"Tell me all you know concerning the vault and the ring which unlocks it," he said, in his soft tones.

I obeyed. Afterward Figgot told of my meeting with the Minister of Police, and of Paola's orders to him and Marco to escort me to Rio and to place the entire matter in the hands of Mazanovitch.

The little man listened without comment and afterward sat for many minutes silently smoking his cheroot.

"It seems to me," said I, at last, "that the death of Senhora de Mar, and especially the fact that her ring finger has been severed from her hand, points conclusively to one reassuring fact; that the ring has been recovered by one of our band, and so the Cause is no longer endangered. Therefore my mission to Rio is ended, and all that remains for me is to return to Cuyaba and attend to the obsequies of my poor friend de Pintra."

Marco and Figgot heard me respectfully, but instead of replying both gazed questioningly at the calm face of Mazanovitch.

"The facts are these;" said the latter, deliberately; "Senhora de Mar fled with the ring; she has been murdered, and the ring taken from her. By whom? If a patriot has it we shall know the truth within fifteen minutes." I glanced at a great clock ticking against the wall. "Before your arrival," he resumed, "I had taken steps to communicate with every patriot in Rio. Yet there were few able to recognize the ring as the key to the secret vault, and the murder was committed fifteen minutes after the train left Cruz."

I started, at that.

"Who could have known?" I asked.

The little man took the cigar from his mouth for a moment.

"On the train," said he, "were General Fonseca, the patriot, and Senhor Valcour, the Emperor's spy."

CHAPTER X.

I remembered Fonseca's visit of the night before, and considered it natural he should take the morning train to the capital.

"But Valcour would not need to murder Madam Izabel," said I. "They were doubtless in the plot together, and she would have no hesitation in giving him the ring had he demanded it. On the contrary, our general was already incensed against the daughter of the chief, and suspected her of plotting mischief. I am satisfied he has the ring."

"The general will be with us presently," answered Mazanovitch, quietly. "But, gentlemen, you all stand in need of refreshment, and Senhor Harcliffe should have his burns properly dressed. Kindly follow me."

He led the way up a narrow flight of stairs that made two abrupt turns—for no apparent reason—before they reached the upper landing. Following our guide we came to a back room where a table was set for six. A tall, studious-looking Brazilian greeted us with a bow and immediately turned his spectacled eyes upon me. On a small side table were bandages, ointments, and a case of instruments lying open.

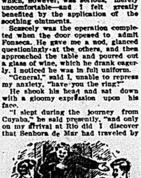
Within ten minutes the surgeon had dressed all my wounds—none of which, however, was serious, merely uncomfortable—and I felt greatly benefited by the application of the soothing ointments.

Scarcely was the operation completed when the door opened to admit Fonseca. He gave me a nod, glanced questioningly at the others, and then approached the table and poured out a glass of wine, which he drank eagerly. I noticed he was in full uniform.

"General," said I, unable to repress my anxiety, "have you the ring?"

He shook his head and sat down with a gloomy expression upon his face.

"I slept during the journey from Cuyaba," he said presently, "and only on my arrival at Rio did I discover that Senhora de Mar had traveled by the same train. She was dead when they carried her into the station."



A slender figure, draped in black and slightly stooping, stood in the doorway.

"And Valcour?" It was Mazanovitch who asked the question.

"Valcour was beside the body, wild with excitement, and swearing vengeance against the murderer."

"Be seated, gentlemen," requested our host, approaching the table. "We have time for a slight repast before our friends arrive."

"May I join you?" asked a high querulous voice. A slender figure, draped in black and slightly stooping, stood in the doorway.

"Come in," said Fonseca, and the new arrival threw aside his cloak and sat with us at the table.

"The last supper, eh?" he said, in a voice that quavered somewhat. "For to-morrow we die. Eh, brothers?—to-morrow we die!"

"Croaker!" cried Fonseca, with scorn. "Die to-morrow, if you like; die to-night, for all I care. The rest of us intend to live long enough to shout huzzas for the United States of Brazil!"

"In truth, Senhor Piezoto," said Marco, who was busily eating, "we are in no unusual danger to-night."

Startled by the mention of the man's name, I regarded him with sudden interest.

The reputation of Floriano Piezoto, the astute statesman who had plotted so well for the revolutionary party, was not unknown to me, by any means. Next to Fonseca no patriot was more revered by the people of Brazil; yet not even the general was regarded with the same unquestioning affection. For Piezoto was undoubtedly a friend of the people, and despite his personal peculiarities had the full confidence of that rank and file of the revolutionary party upon which, more than upon the grandees who led it, depended the fate of the rising republic.

His smooth-shaven face, sunken cheeks, and somewhat deprecating gaze gave him the expression of a student rather than a statesman, and his entire personality was in sharp contrast to the bravado of Fonseca. To see the two leaders together one would never suspect that history would prove the statesman greater than the general.

"Danger!" piped Piezoto, shrilly, in answer to Sergeant Marco's remark, "you say there is no danger? Is not de Pintra dead? Is not the ring gone? Is not the secret vault at the Emperor's mercy?"

"Who knows?" answered Fonseca, with a shrug.

"And who is this?" continued Piezoto, turning upon me a penetrating gaze. "Ah, the American secretary, I suppose. Well, sir, what excuse have you to make for allowing all this to happen under your very nose? Are you also a traitor?"

"I have not the honor of your acquaintance, senhor," said I, stiffly; "nor, in view of your childish conduct, do I greatly desire it."

Fonseca laughed, and the Pole turned his impassive face, with its half-closed eye-lids, in my direction. But Piezoto seemed rather pleased with my retort, and said:

"Never mind; your head sits as insecurely upon its neck as any present. 'Tis really a time for action rather than recrimination. What do you propose, Mazanovitch?"

"I am waiting to hear if you have discovered the present possessor of the ring," answered the captain.

"No; our people were ignorant of its very existence, save in a few cases, and none of them has seen it. Therefore the Emperor has it, without doubt."

"Why without doubt?" asked Mazanovitch.

"Who else could desire it? Who else could know its value? Who else would have murdered Madam Izabel to secure it?"

"Why the devil should the Emperor cause his own spy to be murdered?" inquired Fonseca, in his harsh voice. "You are a fool, Piezoto."

"What of Leon de Mar?" asked the other, calmly. "He hated his wife. Why should he not have killed her himself, in order to be rid of her and at the same time secure the honor of presenting his Emperor with the key to the secret vault?"

"Leon de Mar," said Mazanovitch, "is in Rio Grande do Sul. He has been stationed there for three weeks."

For a time there was silence.

"Where is Paola?" suddenly asked Piezoto. "I want to know what Paola is doing in this crisis."

"He was last seen near de Pintra's residence," said Figgot. "But we know nothing of his present whereabouts."

"You may be sure of one thing," declared Marco stoutly; "that Francisco Paola is serving the Cause, wherever he may be."

The general snorted derisively, and Piezoto looked at him with the nearest approach to a smile his anxious face had shown.

"How we admire one another?" he murmured.

"Personally I detest both you and Paola," responded the general, frankly. "But the Cause is above personalities, and as for your loyalty, I dare not doubt it. But we wander from the subject in hand. Has the Emperor the ring or is he seeking it as eagerly as we are?"

"The Emperor has not the ring," said Mazanovitch, slowly; "you may be assured of that. Otherwise—"

Piezoto gave a start.

"To be sure," said he, "otherwise we would not be sitting here."

CHAPTER XI.

Later that evening there was a large gathering of the important members of the conspiracy, but the result of their deliberations only served to mystify us more than before as to the murderer of Madam Izabel and the possessor of the ring. Many were the expressions of sorrow at the terrible fate of Dom Miguel—a man beloved by all who had known him. The sad incident of his death caused several to waver in their loyalty to the projected Republic, and I was impressed by the fact that at this juncture the Cause seemed to be in rather desperate straits.

"If the ring is gone and the records discovered," said one, "we would best leave the country for a time, until the excitement subsides, for the Emperor will spare no one in his desire for vengeance."

"Let us first wait for more definite information," counseled the old general, always optimistic. "Should an uprising be precipitated at this time we have all the advantage on our side, for the Republic is to-day stronger than the Empire. And we have yet to hear from Paola."

So, after much comment, it was determined to watch every action of the court party with redoubled vigilance, and in case danger threatened the republicans, to give the signal that would set the revolution going in full swing. Meantime we would endeavor to get in touch with Paola.

But the Minister of Police had mysteriously disappeared, and although telegrams were sent in every direction, we could hear nothing of Paola's whereabouts. Inquiries at the court failed to elicit any information whatever, and they were doubtless as ignorant on the subject as ourselves.

Officially, I was supposed to be occupying a dungeon in the fortress, and Mazanovitch had actually locked up a man under my name, registering the prisoner in the prescribed fashion. Therefore, being cleverly disguised by the detective, I ran little risk of interference should I venture abroad in the city.

Curiously enough, Mazanovitch chose to disguise me as a member of the police, saying that this plan was less likely than any other to lead to discovery. Wherever I might wander I was supposed to be off duty or on special service, and the captain enrolled me under the name of Andrea Subig.

I was anxious at times to return to Cuyaba, for Lesba's white face, as I had last seen it on the morning of Dom Miguel's incarceration, haunted me perpetually. But the quest of the ring was of vital importance, and I felt that I dared not return until I could remove my dear friend's body from the vault and see it properly interred.

Under Mazanovitch's directions I strove earnestly to obtain a clue that might lead to a knowledge of where the missing ring was secreted; but our efforts met with no encouragement, and we were not even sure that the murderer of Izabel de Mar had ever reached the capital.

On the third morning after my arrival I was strolling down the street toward the railway station, in company with Mazanovitch, when, suddenly I paused and grasped my comrade's arm convulsively.

"Look there!" I exclaimed.

Mazanovitch shook off my hand, impatiently.

"I see," he returned; "it is the Senhorita Lesba Paola, riding in the Emperor's carriage."

"But that scoundrel Valcour is with her!" I cried.

"Scoundrel? We do not call Senhor Valcour that. He is faithful to the Emperor, who employs him. Shall we, who are unfaithful, blame him for his fidelity?"

While I sought an answer to this disconcerting query the carriage whirled past us and disappeared around a corner; but I had caught a glimpse of Lesba's bright eyes glancing coyly into the earnest face Valcour bent over her, and the sight filled me with pain and suspicion.

And the next instant was tumbled upon the platform.

"Listen, Captain," said I, gloomily, "that girl knows all the important secrets of the conspiracy."

"True," answered the unmoved Mazanovitch.

"And she is riding in the Emperor's carriage, in confidential intercourse with the Emperor's spy."

"True," he said again.

"Paola has disappeared, and his sister is at court. What do you make of it, senhor?"

"Pardon me, the Minister of Police returned to his duties this morning," said the man, calmly. "Doubtless his sister accompanied him. Who knows?"

"Why did you not tell me this?" I demanded, angrily.

"I am waiting for Paola to communicate with us, which he will do in good time. Meanwhile, let me counsel patience, Senhor Americano."

But I left him and strode down the street, very impatient indeed, and filled with strange misgivings. These Brazilians were hard to understand, and were it not for Lesba I could wish myself quit of their country forever.

Lesba? What strange chance had brought her to Rio and thrown her into the companionship of the man most inimical to her brother, to myself, and to the Cause?

Was she playing a double game? Could this frank, clear-eyed girl be a traitor to the Republic, as had been Izabel de Mar?

It might be. A woman's mind is hard to comprehend. But she had been so earnest a patriot, so sincerely interested in our every success, so despondent over our disappointments, that even now I could not really doubt her faith.

Moreover, I loved the girl. Had I never before realized the fact, I knew it in this hour when she seemed lost to me forever. For never had speech of mine brought the glad look to her face that I had noted as she flashed by with Valcour pouring soft speeches into her ears. The Emperor's spy was a handsome fellow; he was high in favor at court; he was one of her own people—

Was he, by the by? Was Valcour really a Brazilian? He had a Brazilian's dark eyes and complexion, it is true; yet now that I thought upon it, there was an odd, foreign cast to his features that indicated he belonged to another race. Yes, there was a similarity between them and the features of the Pole Mazanovitch. Perhaps Valcour might also be a Pole. Just now Mazanovitch had spoken kindly of him, and ——

I stopped short in my calculations, for I had made a second startling discovery. My wanderings had led me to the railway station, where, as I approached, I saw the Emperor of Brazil, Dom Pedro de Alcantara, surrounded by a company of his Uruguayan guard, and in the act of boarding a private car attached to the Matto Grosso train.

I had never before seen the Emperor, but from descriptions of him, as well as from the deference of those about him, I had no doubt of his identity.

His hurried departure upon a journey, coupled with Paola's presence at the capital, could only bear one interpretation. The Minister of Police had been in conference with the Emperor, and his Majesty was about to visit in person the scene of the late tragedy, and do what he might to unearth the records of that far-reaching revolution which threatened his throne.

Here was news, indeed! Half-dazed, I started to retrace my steps, when a soft voice beside me said:

HOW BRAVE BELLEVILLE BOYS WENT OUT TO FACE FENIAN RABBLE FORTY YEARS AGO.

Interesting Reminiscences of June 3rd, 1866--What the Intelligencer's Fyles Have to Tell of An Event Never to Be Forgotten in This City--Departure of the Men For the Front--Scenes at Prescott--Personnel of the Fifteenth and First Belleville Rifles at the Time--Those Who Survive To-day.

On Sunday, June 3, 1866, exactly 40 years ago to-morrow, the Fifteenth Regiment and First Belleville Rifles, of this city, were ordered to Prescott to repel the Fenians, who, it was expected, were coming from the United States to invade that portion of Canada. Those were stirring times, which many people alive in this city to-day can remember. The Intelligencer, with the kindly assistance of that enthusiastic veteran and loyalist, Mr. William Johnson, has copied from the fyles of 40 years ago and otherwise prepared a full account of the happenings of those exciting days. Many of the "Boys of the Old Brigade" have long ago answered the last roll call, but many, we are thankful to say, still walk this earth and carry themselves proudly, as becomes men who, when their country called them, bravely set forth ready, with their faces to the foe, to die if need be in defence of Canada. The following extracts tell a story of which Bellevillians as a whole may well be proud;

Weekly Intelligencer, June, 1866.

"The struggle with the cut-throats has come at last. Thanks to the noble spirit that emulates our people it promises to be short and decisive. The readiness and alacrity with which our volunteers sprang to arms is in the highest degree commendable and their gallant conduct on the field of battle covers them with imperishable renown. The worst feature of the affair is that the foe they meet are the lowest strata of creation. Though this is the fact they must be met and the manner in which it is done covers our brave and gallant volunteers with glory.

Head Quarters, Ottawa,
June 3, 1866, 1 a.m.
General Order.

Your Battalion is called out and is required to proceed by special train to Prescott, immediately on receipt of this telegram, and report to Colonel Atcherly.

P. L. McDOUGALL,
Co. A.A.G.

Lt.-Col. A. A. Campbell, Belleville.

This is a copy of the telegram received on Sunday morning the 3rd of June, at two o'clock, by Colonel Campbell, ordering his force to Prescott at once. In a few minutes the bugles were sounded, the alarm bells were rung and before daylight a considerable force had assembled at the armory. The news spread like wildfire through the town and at dawn of day the streets were alive with people. About 9 o'clock escorted by the 1st Belleville Rifles the Battalion proceeded to the station where a special train was in waiting, and after a few minutes spent in bidding their friends farewell, the men embarked, and amidst the cheers of the assembled thousands, the waving of handkerchiefs, the stirring tunes of martial music, the Iron horse bore away its precious freight.

About five o'clock the steamer Bay of Quinte arrived from Picton with over 300 men of the 16th Battalion, under command of Lt.-Col. Ross. They were escorted to the Armory by the Rifles and a large crowd of people and preparation had been made to have them billeted through the town. But in a few minutes after orders came for the 16th Battalion to proceed to Kingston and the 1st Belleville Rifles to Aultsville, by special train, which was in waiting. Again our gallant citizens accompanied the gallant men to the station and the scene of the morning was enacted over again. Amid the fervent "God bless you" of relatives and friends, the booming of cannon, the waving of handkerchiefs and the loud cheers of the people, the men got on board and the train was soon under headway."

"Sunday the third of June, 1866, will be a day never to be forgotten for Belleville and the country surrounding it. Twice on that day did thousands of our citizens, men, women and children accompany the gallant bands of volunteers to the station and bid them "God speed" on their perilous but noble journey. Twice the sad scene of parting was gone through with and none but those whose loved ones were of the company can conceive the feeling that controlled them as the hand unclasped and the last good-bye was said. The heart knoweth its own sorrow, but that sorrow was not an unmoved one. Not one who had a son or husband, or brother or father on board these trains but felt an inward satisfaction that the old love for country and for God was as fresh in their hearts as when first implanted by nature in the human breast. The heart throbbed and the tear dropped but the hand went up and the voice cheered as the trains bore away their precious burdens. The sorrow was marked with gladness.

"The rally from Belleville we do not think can be exceeded by any other locality in Canada. Including the 16th Battalion from Prince Edward between eight and nine hundred men have left Belleville for the front since Sunday morning and we are safe in saying that if there were necessity a like number would be ready to follow at a few hours notice.

Total, 351 officers, non-commissioned officers and men.

With but few exceptions the United States press has given more or less countenance to the Fenian movement, and now that the ruffian horde has invaded our shores they show their approbation of their doings in a very decided manner. Many of them openly advocate their cause and urge the reinforcements of the Fenians on our frontier, while others express sympathy for the "poor deluded people," as they style them for doing such a foolish a thing as to invade Canada. Not a word about the wickedness or criminality of the invasion—not a word of condemnation of the scoundrels who have committed the most atrocious act known in the annals of crime." • • • On Monday afternoon the 5th instant, at 3 o'clock, pursuant to public notice from the Major—Hon. Billa Flint—a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Town Hall to adopt measures for the protection of the inhabitants. A large number of special constables were sworn in who will be placed under the command of Lt.-Col. Ponton, and from them a number will be selected to patrol the streets each night."

When "The 15th" arrived at Prescott in the afternoon it was found that the Fenians had not yet crossed the St. Lawrence from Ogdensburg, N.Y., where ten thousand it was reported had gathered, but as the attack was fully expected that night, they were under arms that and the two following nights. The 15th was then placed on the "Flying column" which was a great compliment, as that was the authorities, estimate of their mobility and courage.

The first few days were spent in the homes of the hospitable people of Prescott, who never could do too much for "the Belleville red coats." Their tents arrived from Ottawa, and until the return of the Battalion to Belleville on Sunday the 19th of June, they were encamped on the "Fort field" alongside Fort Wellington.

The 1st or Belleville Rifles remained at Aultsville until Tuesday, the 19th of June.

The garrison at Prescott consisted of about 2000 men, composed of—

Four companies of the Rifle Brigade—Regulars.
Detachments of Royal Artillery—Regulars.
Gananoque Field Battery—Volunteers.
Ottawa Garrison Artillery —Volunteers.
Belleville Battalion of Infantry—Volunteers.
Harrisburg Battalion of Infantry—Volunteers.
Merrickville Battalion of Rifles—Volunteers.

A PATRIOTIC FUND.

"A more enthusiastic or spirited meeting than which was held in the Town Hall on Friday evening last—8th June—it has rarely been our good fortune to attend. The object was to raise a patriotic fund for the volunteers. The movers and seconders of the following resolutions made eloquent patriotic and telling speeches bearing more or less on the objects of the meeting.

Moved by W. W. Dean, Esq., seconded by H. P. Jellett, Esq., 1st Resolved that it is the bounden duty of every loyal subject of Her Most Gracious Majesty in this Province to repel the aggressive attack of an armed band of robbers who have already invaded our soil and shed the blood of our fellow countrymen.

Moved by H. Corby, Esq., seconded by Rev. J. Clune. 2nd, Resolved, That this meeting desires to express its deep sense of the patriotic spirit evinced by the volunteers of Canada, which has already added a bright page to its history, and the promptitude with which the Belleville Battalion and that Rifle Company responded to the call of duty, deserves our warmest commendation.

3rd, Resolved,—Moved by the Rev. C. M. Fox, seconded by Dr. Hope, That the absence of the brave defenders of our soil—from lawless aggression—entail severe privations upon their families, and this meeting recognizes the duty of forming a Patriotic fund to assist the wives and children of our own volunteers during the absence of their natural supporters.

Moved by Rev. S. Jones, seconded by Dr. Relyea. 4th, Resolved, That the following gentlemen be appointed a committee to carry out the foregoing resolutions, and that they have full powers conferred upon them for that purpose, viz, Hon. Billa Flint, George Filliter, E. W. Holton, C. J. Starling, James Blackbeck, Henry Corby, John Bell, Sheriff Taylor, P. D Conger, James Kennedy, George Vair, Michael Gillen, M. Sawyer, E. Chandler, Sanford Baker, George Ritchie, Wm. Sutherland, W. H. Mendell, R. Tannahill, James Whiteford, Francis McAnnany, Thomas Kelso, Dr. Wm. Canniff, Andrew Thomson, Dr. Rufus Holden, Dr. Wm. Hope, James Glass, A. G. Northrup, George Neilson, Michael Nulty, Neil McArthur, Smith Bartlett, Thomas Holden J. A. Phippen. The meeting subscribed over $3000.

THE RETURN HOME.

"When it became known on Sabbath morning last—19th, that the brave boys were expected home in the after part of the day, the enthusiasm of the people knew no bounds. Placards had been posted up on the church doors that the train conveying the saviours of their country had left Prescott at 9.30 a.m., and was expected to arrive at the station at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon. Long before that hour the streets were thronged with an expectant and happy crowd wending their way to the station. Mothers who had beardless boys amongst the brave defenders of the country; wives who had husbands; sisters who had brothers, and those others who soon expected to sustain a nearer and dearer relation to each other, were amongst the eager, joyous throng. By the time the train arrived thousands were in the vicinity of the station. They crowded the platform, they covered the tops of the long line of freight cars, and filled the spacious ground in front of the station and waited patiently an hour and more before the signal was given "they are coming." The railway officials had furnished a large number of signals which were placed on the track some distance from the platform, which, when being struck by the wheels of the engine, made a report like a rifle shot. As the engine came steaming in it was greeted with a salute from a cannon, loud cheers from men, waving of handkerchiefs by the ladies The cheers were repeated over and over and over again as the redcoats came in sight. It was some time before the men could disembark and then form, so eager was the multitude to grasp the hands and give a rousing welcome to their friends. The men looked browned, but all seemed well and in good spirits. They all appeared glad to get home again the only regret that could be heard was that they had not had the opportunity they so fully expected, of coming face to face with the Fenians, and giving them a good threshing. We must not forget to mention that Capt. Minns' Company, of the Grand Trunk Railway Brigade, acted as guard of honor at the arrival of the train and fired salutes when the cars stopped. About four o'clock the Battalion formed and preceded by the band, marched to the Armory accompanied by a multitude of men, women and children. At the station and from private and public buildings gaily floated the national flags of Great Britain, and from balconies and windows as the Battalion marched through the streets there were tumultuous demonstrations of welcome. At the Armory Frances McAnnany, Esq., on behalf of the Town, with a few appropriate remarks, welcomed the volunteers back again. He complimented them upon their devotion to their country, their readiness with which they sprang to arms and was gratified to see them all return without a scratch. Lt.-Col. Campbell before dismissing the men, addressed them briefly. He was proud of being the commander of such an efficient body of men. He was proud of the way they had responded to the bugle call a fortnight ago he was proud of their conduct while on active service, for he did not think a better behaved body of soldiers could be found in Canada. He knew they had won the respect of the people of Prescott, as they had the confidence of their officers, and he felt a peculiar gratification in bringing them to their homes without a casualty. He felt greatly indebted to his officers for the aid they had given him in maintaining the discipline and sustaining the credit of the Battalion, which, he might say, was spoken of by the Commanding Officer of the Regular Force, as second to none in the Province. He thanked the men for their good conduct, and in dismissing them knew that if they were called out again, and they might be, they would respond as heartily and willingly as they did on the morning of the 3rd of June."

"On Tuesday forenoon information was secured here that the Belleville Rifles had left Aultsville that morning and were expected to reach Belleville about half-past four o'clock. Col. Campbell of the 15th Battalion, gave orders to have the men turn out to furnish an escort to the Rifles, which they did, but found out that the train was delayed some hours, and they were dismissed until evening, when they again assembled, and headed by the band marched to the station accompanied by a large crowd of all classes of citizens of both sexes. Flags were flying in every direction and the people turned out en masse to give a right royal welcome to the "Old Rifles." The Firemen also turned out with torches and escorted the "Black coats," down street. The reception, considering the lateness of the hour, was most enthusiastic. The appearance of the men evinced that they had not only been well drilled, but heavily worked. The steadiness with which they went through the various movements and the excellent discipline of the Company, reflect the highest credit on both officers and men."

It is to be deplored that the official "rolls" of the 1st Belleville Rifles and the 15th Battalion have been destroyed. "Somebody blundered" at Ottawa and ordered that they be burnt, so that it is owing to the Veterans' Association that we are able to give our readers lists of the officers and non-commissioned officers on the 3rd of June, 1866, and of the surviving members to-day;

The names of the officers and non-commissioned officers of the First Belleville Rifles and Fifteenth appear previously in this article.

THE GENTILE WOMAN'S FAITH—GOLDEN TEXT IS; "GREAT IS THY FAITH: BE IT UNTO THEE EVEN AS THOU WILT."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Time—Summer of A.D. 29, a few weeks after the last lesson.

Place—On the borders of the country of Tyre and Sidon, forty or fifty miles northwest of the Sea of Galilee.

Place in the Life of Christ—About the middle of the third year of his ministry.

In the evening after the feeding of the five thousand, while Christ withdrew into the mountain for quiet prayer after the exciting and wearying events of the day, his disciples set out to return across the sea and were caught in a storm. Jesus came to them, walking upon the water, and Peter made his attempt to do the same. There followed at Capernaum a series of discourses with the Pharisees that not only aroused their intense opposition, but alienated many of his disciples.

24. And from thence. From Galilee, and probably (John 6:24) from Capernaum. He arose, and went. The Pharisees opposed him because he, the carpenter's son, claimed to be the divine bread of life, the Son of God (John 6: 41, 42): because of the lofty spiritual nature of his teaching, which they could not understand (John 6: 52): because in his teaching he disregarded the ordinances and ceremonies that made up their religion of show (Mark 7: 1-5, 19); and especially because he boldly set up the standard of heart purity; and condemned them for their unrighteous living (Mark 7: 6-13, 20-23). His disciples that left him were doubtless offended by these same things (John 6: 66-71), and also because he insisted upon refusing worldly authority and power (John 6: 15), rebuked those that followed him merely to see miracles and enjoy their fruits (John 6: 26), and was evidently seeking to build up a spiritual and not a material kingdom.

A second reason for Christ's retirement was doubtless the need of rest, for himself and his disciples. It was with this in view (Mark 6: 31) that they had crossed to Bethsaida, but the design had been frustrated.

Went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon. Two flourishing seaports, the capitals of Phoenicia, a narrow, level district along the shores of the Mediterranean. Sidon was twenty miles north of Tyre. The journey is not long, as Tyre is only about 35 miles, and Sidon 55 miles, from the Sea of Galilee. They were heathen, but active commercial and manufacturing people, wealthy, luxurious and dissolute.

Would have no man know it. Not for fear of the Pharisees any more, but because he was shunning crowds. But he could not be hid. His fame preceded him; and his bearing and behavior marked him off as a remarkable man; his following of disciples moreover would make concealment extremely difficult.

Among the suffering whose ears heard of the arrival of a Healer at any place, mothers would always be first. They would make their way through all obstacles to reach him. We know to-day that no love is stronger than a mother's: it was so in ancient Tyre.

25. A certain woman. R.V., "But straightway a woman." "Straightway" does not imply that the woman heard of Christ's arrival as soon as it happened, but that, after hearing, she lost no time in coming. Whose young daughter. R. V., "little daughter," a touch of pathos; it is so hard to see little children suffer! Had an unclean spirit. Unclean, because the affliction produced uncleanness of body and soul. The phenomenon was not confined to Jews or to the land of Israel (Acts 16: 16 f.) Heard of him. Not merely of his coming, but something of what he was and had done. The fame of his great miracles must easily have passed over the borders into the neighboring territory. Some from this region listened to the Sermon on the Mount (Mark 3; 8). Came and fell at his feet, in the attitude of deepest humility, beseeching him (v. 26) to work the cure. Matthew, gives the words of her cry, "Have mercy on me, O Lord!" Lord, help me!" doubtless repeated over and over.

When we carry our troubles to Christ in prayer, sometimes he removes them at once, but often he finds it necessary to treat us as he treated that heathen mother. Note how many obstacles were placed in the way of her faith, to test it.

The First Test was the difference in race, nationality, and religion. 26. The woman was a Greek. A Greek-speaking Gentile, under the influence of the manners and customs of the Greeks, descendants of Japheth. A Syrophenician by nation. A descendant of the Syrian, as distinguished from the Carthagenian Phenicians, a Semitic race. Matthew tells us that she was "a Canaanitish woman," of the blood of the original inhabitants of the land, descendants of Ham. Thus she represented the descendants Shem and Ham by descent, and of Japheth by language and civilization, and so was a representative of the vast number of pagans, a sort of epitome of all the races of mankind. These barriers of strangeness in race, religion, nationality, she surmounted by calling Jesus "Lord," and "Son (of David.") thus showing some knowledge of the Jewish Messiah. Moreover, she spoke the universal language, love. All that come to Christ in faith are "no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens." (Eph. 2; 19.)

The Second Test was Silence. He answered her not a word (Matthew.) It would even seem as if he arose and left the house, since the disciples are obliged to seek him later with their complaints of the woman's importunity.

The Third Test sprung from the opposition of the disciples, who, as Matthew tells us, became annoyed by the woman's pleadings, sought out Christ, and asked him to "send her away"—healed, that is, as Christ was wont to send such suppliants away. Christ understood their request in that sense, for he answered by reminding them of the fact—fundamental in his ministry—that he "was not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

The Fourth Test was a seeming denial. 27. Jesus said unto her: Let the children first be filled. The Jews were the chosen children of God. If God was to manifest himself among men, it must have been in some especial race; and all students of history know that no race has ever lived so well fitted as the Jews for this revelation—adapted by their pre-eminently religious nature and by the long course of their training. They must first be filled with the gospel, just as the first of a series of reservoirs must be filled before there can be an overflow to fill all the others in their turn. In this wise principle all Christian workers must follow their Lord. Make the home God-like if you would have a God like neighborhood, city and nation. Fill the local church with gospel fire if you would kindle Pentecost in the distant mission fields. But Christ went on to the climax of apparent harshness: It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs. Jesus probably quoted a familiar proverb.

28. Even this final obstacle is removed and the mother passes the test triumphantly. She answered, replying to his looks and his tone rather than his words. "Her woman's wit was sharp that day, and seized the one advantage Jesus had afforded. Dog he had called her; then dog she would be: only she must have a dog's place and privileges. Yes, Lord; yet. "The Revised Version does justice to her words by reading 'even' instead of yet.' She does not enter a caveat against the analogy, but accepts it wholly, and only asks him to carry out his own metaphor. She takes the sword from his hand, or, as Luther says, she catches him at his own words.'" The dogs under the table. The little dogs are not outside. They, too, have a place in the family. If Christ puts it so, then she and her people have a place, though a humble one, in the house of the Master of all. The children may be fed first, but they, too, are to be remembered and blessed. Eat of the children's crumbs. The crumbs are not only accidental fragments, but also the pieces of bread on which the guests, in the absence of napkins, wiped their hands, and then threw them to the dogs to eat.

"Jesus made no secret of His satisfaction. "O, woman," He cried, "great is thy faith." (Matthew.) It is impossible for us to realize the tone in which Jesus uttered these words, nor the love which beamed in full glory from his eye. Nothing ever drew from our Lord such commendation as the exercise of a supreme faith.

29. For this saying. Because of the great faith which it proved. The devil is gone out of thy daughter. And "from that hour," says Matthew, "her daughter was healed." The cure, as in the case of the centurion's servant (Matt. 8: 13) was simultaneous with Christ's announcement of it.

30. Hurrying home, the mother found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed. Probably the cure had been attended by violent convulsions, as in other cases of the same kind in the gospels (Mark 1: 26; 9: 22-26.) The mother was happy. Her home was no longer darkened by a perpetual gloom. Her little daughter was no longer furious in passion, worn with hysteria, helpless in epilepsy and profane in spirit. When the mother stole into the house it was the abode of peace.

Thin, Bloodless People

Are constantly in danger of contracting disease of one kind or another. Good rich, red blood naturally repels disease and destroys disease germs, and the man who's blood is in this condition is practically proof against germ diseases.

On the other hand, if the blood is weak, thin and watery, the system is in no condition to resist attack, and the anaemic person is always liable to contract Consumption, La Grippe, Typhoid, Pneumonia, and kindred diseases; Coughs and colds are easily taken and hard to shake off, and disease of some kind is always either present or impending.

The moral is, "find something to enrich the blood." There is just one preparation which can be depended upon to do this speedily and with absolute certainty, and that is

FERROL

FERROL contains all the elements necessary to the formation of rich, red blood, and in such a shape that they cannot fail to be assimilated.

If your blood is thin do not fail to take FERROL, and do not delay even for one day. Delays are dangerous.

Gribbon Inquest Was Concluded.

JURY IMPUTES BLAME TO NOBODY, BUT THINKS THAT GATES SHOULD BE PLACED AT THE CANIFTON ROAD CROSSING.

The inquest to enquire into the death of Hugh Gribbon, who on Monday last was killed at the Canifton road G.T.R. crossing, was held last evening, and the verdict of the jury was reached.

The enquiry was held in the police court room, and many besides the jury were present.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, presided. County Attorney Anderson represented the Crown, and Mr. S. Wells, of Montreal, was present on behalf of the G.T.R. Considerable evidence was submitted and the verdict was not reached until a late hour.

THE EVIDENCE.

Michael Bolger, being the first witness, testified that he lived in Belleville and witnessed the accident to Mr. Hugh Gribbon on Monday, May 28th. Witness was near the G.T.R. crossing at the time. At the time Gribbon reached the crossing a freight train was passing by on the north track. The horse turned eastward and ran along beside the train. Witness tried to catch the horse, but he was unable to do so. The horse went east as far as where an engine was standing on the south rail. The horse went between the engine and the moving train. Witness saw a car strike the buggy Gribbon was in and he thought Gribbon was also struck by a car. Could not say whether or not Gribbon was thrown out. The train was not going fast at the time. Heard the engine whistle for the crossing. When witness saw Gribbon after the accident he was dead. Had often seen the deceased under the influence of liquor, and had seen him fall out of his rig. Witness was of the opinion that gates might be placed at the crossing.

Cross-examined — Could not say whether the bell was ringing or not, but he heard the engine whistle. Had seen rigs struck at the crossing.

Wm. Hulley testified that he lived near the G.T.R. Canifton road crossing. He saw Gribbon on Monday, when the accident occurred. There was no doubt the deceased was under the influence of liquor. Witness' evidence was in corroboration of Bolger in reference to the horse turning eastward and running eastward with the moving train. The buggy was badly smashed up. Gribbon was about dead when witness arrived to where the accident occurred. Heard the bell of the engine ring after the whistle had been blown. Witness was of the opinion that gates should be placed at the crossing. He thought that the train men were in no way to blame for the accident.

Cross-examined — Had known the Canifton road crossing for a number of years, and the only person whom he had heard of being injured before was Dr. Sing, who was hurt last fall by being struck by a passing engine.

Dr. Clinton said he knew the deceased, and, from reports, he was a man much addicted to drink. Saw the deceased driving up Mill street shortly before the accident. He saw Gribbon just after the accident occurred and he was gasping for breath. Nothing could be done for him. The injuries were about the head and forehead. There was much travel upon the road in question. He thought that the crossing could be better protected, as it was necessary to drive up to the track rather close before a train could be seen. In his opinion gates would afford good protection.

Mr. F. J. O'Neil said he was a G.T.R. fireman, living at York. He was fireman on engine 860, which drew in the freight train from the west on Monday evening last. Witness did not hear of the accident until the train arrived in the yard. He did not see the accident. No rig was at the crossing when the engine passed over. He had passed over the crossing in question several times and it did not occur to him that it was a dangerous place. He was ringing the bell when the engine passed over the crossing, and the whistle had been blown near the crossing.

Mr. James Carroll testified that he resided in East Toronto, and was engineer on the freight train No. 94 and engine No. 860, which was in the accident. He stopped the train on account of the accident, after receiving a signal from the conductor. As the train passed over the crossing witness saw the deceased in his rig some 75 yards south of the crossing. The conductor told witness that a man had been killed, but he did not see him. Toronto was the only place he knew of where gates were placed over the crossings.

Cross-examined—He whistled for the crossing just west of the iron bridge.

Ald. Marsh testified that there was considerable traffic over the Canifton road crossing. Saw the deceased when the body was in the baggage-room of the station. He did not think the crossing was as safe as it might be. In his opinion gates would afford good protection to the travelling public.

Mr. M. Sprague testified that he knew the Canifton road crossing, which was extensively used. He would consider it was a dangerous crossing in some respects. A flagman might be stationed there or gates erected. It was necessary to get rather close to the crossing before was possible to see trains her east or west. Did the accident, but saw the some minutes after it oc-ke testified that he tended bar at his father's hotel. On Monday last Hugh Gribbon was in the hotel, and he gave him two or three drinks. This was about noon. In the afternoon witness saw Gribbon again, and he was driving about the streets in a rather careless manner.

This concluded the evidence, and the Coroner, after reviewing the evidence, placed the matter in the hands of the jury. As citizens it was their duty to say in their verdict that the crossing was a dangerous one, if they so thought, and to recommend that it be properly protected. He also spoke of light engines being allowed to stand a short distance east of the crossing. The cattle guards did not seem to prevent horses or vehicles from going over them. The crossing was, in his opinion, a menace to the travelling public. It was within the jury's power to make a recommendation as to its better protection. He also said it was apparent that in the city liquor had been sold to persons who were intoxicated. This was a violation of the law.

THE VERDICT.

The verdict recorded by the jury was as follows;

"That the late Hugh Gribbon did, on the afternoon of May 28th, come to his death, whilst under the influence of liquor, by coming in contact with a G.T.R. freight train at the Canifton road G.T.R. crossing. We find no blame attached to the employees upon the train or the engine standing upon the track.

"The jurors strongly recommend that the G.T.R. authorities provide a safeguard at this crossing, in view of the immense traffic at this point. We would also concide with the suggestion of the City Council that gates or guards be placed at this crossing, and that the proper G.T.R. officials be notified accordingly."

RUSSIAN NIHILISTS IN OREGON, WHO WOULD WIPE PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT OFF THE LANDSCAPE.

Portland Ore., June 2.—(Special.)—As the outcome of the arrest of a Pole in this city, for an assault upon several Russians, local detectives have learned of the existence here of a large body of Russian Nihilists, who it is alleged, have been plotting the assassination of President Roosevelt, simply awaiting the accumulation of sufficient funds before sending a deputation to Washington to carry out the scheme.

Kingston Churchmen Are Very Indignant.

BECAUSE ALL SAINTS CHURCH CHANCEL WAS SOLD FOR USE AS A BARN.

Kingston, June 1.—Several months ago All Saints' church was turned over to St. Luke's at a nominal price by a diocesan committee. St. Luke's congregation used the main part of the church, and sold the chancel and sanctuary for use as a barn, with the altar and chancel steps, the sacred texts and scrolls in full view of passers-by.

This created a scandal and the executive board of the diocese discussed the matter in warm fashion. The bishop said St. Luke's had broken faith with him. He was told All Saints' would still be used for sacred purposes. The way it was disposed of grated on church feelings. He resented the conduct of the congregation. Canon Grout said the rector of St. Luke's had striven to undo the unfortunate action of his people, and failing to reclaim the sanctuary had personally painted out the sacred inscriptions.

The present owner asked double the price for its recovery. St. Luke's congregation was censured and ordered to reclaim it from its present use, offensive to the church people of the diocese. Archdeacon MacMorine issued a circular against any similar disposal of church properties.

Gribbon Inquest Was Concluded.

JURY IMPUTES BLAME TO NOBODY, BUT THINKS THAT GATES SHOULD BE PLACED AT THE CANIFTON ROAD CROSSING.

The inquest to enquire into the death of Hugh Gribbon, who on Monday last was killed at the Canifton road G.T.R. crossing, was held last evening, and the verdict of the jury was reached.

The enquiry was held in the police court room, and many besides the jury were present.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, presided. County Attorney Anderson represented the Crown, and Mr. S. Wells, of Montreal, was present on behalf of the G.T.R. Considerable evidence was submitted and the verdict was not reached until a late hour.

THE EVIDENCE.

Michael Bolger, being the first witness, testified that he lived in Belleville and witnessed the accident to Mr. Hugh Gribbon on Monday, May 28th. Witness was near the G.T.R. crossing at the time. At the time Gribbon reached the crossing a freight train was passing by on the north track. The horse turned eastward and ran along beside the train. Witness tried to catch the horse, but he was unable to do so. The horse went east as far as where an engine was standing on the south rail. The horse went between the engine and the moving train. Witness saw a car strike the buggy Gribbon was in and he thought Gribbon was also struck by a car. Could not say whether or not Gribbon was thrown out. The train was not going fast at the time. Heard the engine whistle for the crossing. When witness saw Gribbon after the accident he was dead. Had often seen the deceased under the influence of liquor, and had seen him fall out of his rig. Witness was of the opinion that gates might be placed at the crossing.

Cross-examined — Could not say whether the bell was ringing or not, but he heard the engine whistle. Had seen rigs struck at the crossing.

Wm. Hulley testified that he lived near the G.T.R. Canifton road crossing. He saw Gribbon on Monday, when the accident occurred. There was no doubt the deceased was under the influence of liquor. Witness' evidence was in corroboration of Bolger in reference to the horse turning eastward and running eastward with the moving train. The buggy was badly smashed up. Gribbon was about dead when witness arrived to where the accident occurred. Heard the bell of the engine ring after the whistle had been blown. Witness was of the opinion that gates should be placed at the crossing. He thought that the train men were in no way to blame for the accident.

Cross-examined — Had known the Canifton road crossing for a number of years, and the only person whom he had heard of being injured before was Dr. Sing, who was hurt last fall by being struck by a passing engine.

Dr. Clinton said he knew the deceased, and, from reports, he was a man much addicted to drink. Saw the deceased driving up Mill street shortly before the accident. He saw Gribbon just after the accident occurred and he was gasping for breath. Nothing could be done for him. The injuries were about the head and forehead. There was much travel upon the road in question. He thought that the crossing could be better protected, as it was necessary to drive up to the track rather close before a train could be seen. In his opinion gates would afford good protection.

Mr. F. J. O'Neil said he was a G.T.R. fireman, living at York. He was fireman on engine 860, which drew in the freight train from the west on Monday evening last. Witness did not hear of the accident until the train arrived in the yard. He did not see the accident. No rig was at the crossing when the engine passed over. He had passed over the crossing in question several times and it did not occur to him that it was a dangerous place. He was ringing the bell when the engine passed over the crossing, and the whistle had been blown near the crossing.

Mr. James Carroll testified that he resided in East Toronto, and was engineer on the freight train No. 94 and engine No. 860, which was in the accident. He stopped the train on account of the accident, after receiving a signal from the conductor. As the train passed over the crossing witness saw the deceased in his rig some 75 yards south of the crossing. The conductor told witness that a man had been killed, but he did not see him. Toronto was the only place he knew of where gates were placed over the crossings.

Cross-examined—He whistled for the crossing just west of the iron bridge.

Ald. Marsh testified that there was considerable traffic over the Canifton road crossing. Saw the deceased when the body was in the baggage-room of the station. He did not think the crossing was as safe as it might be. In his opinion gates would afford good protection to the travelling public.

Mr. M. Sprague testified that he knew the Canifton road crossing, which was extensively used. He would consider it was a dangerous crossing in some respects. A flagman might be stationed there or gates erected. It was necessary to get rather close to the crossing before it was possible to see trains going either east or west. Did not see the accident, but saw the deceased some minutes after it occurred.

Mr. John Burke said he knew Hugh Gribbon and knew he was addicted to drinking. Witness saw deceased on the day he was killed. He was in witness' hotel in the afternoon about 1 o'clock. Witness did not give him a drink that day.

Robert Burke testified that he was tending bar in his father's hotel. He knew Hugh Gribbon and on Monday last gave him two drinks of whiskey. He had never been warned not to sell liquor to Gribbon.

James Larkin said he was a licensed bartender at the Ontario Hotel. He knew Hugh Gribbon and saw him on Monday last, and served him with one glass of whiskey. He did not get any more liquor at that hotel that day.

Harry Burke testified that he tended bar at his father's hotel. On Monday last Hugh Gribbon was in the hotel, and he gave him two or three drinks. This was about noon. In the afternoon witness saw Gribbon again, and he was driving about the streets in a rather careless manner.

This concluded the evidence, and the Coroner, after reviewing the evidence, placed the matter in the hands of the jury. As citizens it was their duty to say in their verdict that the crossing was a dangerous one, if they so thought, and to recommend that it be properly protected. He also spoke of light engines being allowed to stand a short distance east of the crossing. The cattle guards did not seem to prevent horses or vehicles from going over them. The crossing was, in his opinion, a menace to the travelling public. It was within the jury's power to make a recommendation as to its better protection. He also said it was apparent that in the city liquor had been sold to persons who were intoxicated. This was a violation of the law.

THE VERDICT.

The verdict recorded by the jury was as follows;

"That the late Hugh Gribbon did, on the afternoon of May 28th, come to his death, whilst under the influence of liquor, by coming in contact with a G.T.R. freight train at the Canifton road G.T.R. crossing. We find no blame attached to the employees upon the train or the engine standing upon the track.

"The jurors strongly recommend that the G.T.R. authorities provide a safeguard at this crossing, in view of the immense traffic at this point. We would also coincide with the suggestion of the City Council that gates or guards be placed at this crossing, and that the proper G.T.R. officials be notified accordingly."

RUSSIAN NIHILISTS IN OREGON WHO WOULD WIPE PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT OFF THE LANDSCAPE.

Portland Ore., June 2.—(Special.)—As the outcome of the arrest of a Pole in this city, for an assault upon several Russians, local detectives have learned of the existence here of a large body of Russian Nihilists, who it is alleged, have been plotting the assassination of President Roosevelt, simply awaiting the accumulation of sufficient funds before sending a deputation to Washington to carry out the scheme.

Kingston Churchmen Are Very Indignant.

BECAUSE ALL SAINTS CHURCH CHANCEL WAS SOLD FOR USE AS A BARN.

Kingston, June 1.—Several months ago All Saints' church was turned over to St. Luke's at a nominal price by a diocesan committee. St. Luke's congregation used the main part of the church, and sold the chancel and sanctuary for use as a barn, with the altar and chancel steps, the sacred texts and scrolls in full view of passers-by.

This created a scandal and the executive board of the diocese discussed the matter in warm fashion. The bishop said St. Luke's had broken faith with him. He was told All Saints' would still be used for sacred purposes. The way it was disposed of grated on church feelings. He resented the conduct of the congregation. Canon Grout said the rector of St. Luke's had striven to undo the unfortunate action of his people, and failing to reclaim the sanctuary had personally painted out the sacred inscriptions.

The present owner asked double the price for its recovery. St. Luke's congregation was censured and ordered to reclaim it from its present use, offensive to the church people of the diocese. Archdeacon MacMorine issued a circular against any similar disposal of church properties.

Belleville's First Military Corps.

As we have mentioned elsewhere, Belleville's first military organization, the First Belleville Rifles, left Belleville on the momentous 3rd of June, 1866, and were sent to guard the St Lawrence frontier at Aultsville. To-morrow's parade would not, therefore, be complete without the successors to that Company — No. 1 Company of the 49th Hastings Rifles—being present. Lieut.-Col. Halliwell has invited this Company to join with the XV. Regiment to-morrow in the church parade.

St. Thomas' Church.

To-morrow will be the Festival of Whitsunday, the Festival of the Advent of the Holy Spirit. Services at St. Thomas' Church will partake of a festal character and will be as follows:—

8 a.m.—Holy Communion.

11 a.m.—Choral celebration of the Holy Communion with sermon.

7 p.m.—Evensong with sermon.

A June Wedding.

At 10 o'clock this morning a quiet wedding occurred at the residence of Mr. Geo. Denmark, Alexander street. The bride was Miss Annie Denmark and the groom Mr. Walter W. Mills, of this city. The couple were unattended. Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of the John St. Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Mills left at noon on a wedding tour in the west.

PRESTON IN, JURY OUT

Former Kept Latter From Participating in N. A. T. Co.

Alf. Jury's Belief Is That Preston Was Connected With Both North Atlantic Trading Co. and the Leopold Agency—Racy Evidence Given by Jury Before the Agriculture Committee at Ottawa.

Ottawa, June 2.—As a measure of precaution, to offset the possibility that W. T. R. Preston might sail away with his trunks full of papers, F. D. Monk moved when the agriculture committee assembled yesterday morning, that the secretary notify the commissioner to stay. The motion carried.

A. F. Jury, the Liverpool agent, was appointed, he said, in May, 1897, with $1,500 a year and expenses. His present salary is $2,000 and expenses. The Government paid a 7 shilling bonus per head on immigrants intending to work the land.

The bonus was never paid to Government agents. The bonus now is not paid till the emigrant gets to Canada, and is passed upon by the superintendent of immigration.

Mr. Preston received funds from Ottawa to pay over to the booking agents in bonuses. Jury knew of no instance in which Preston had not paid the money over.

Mr. Monk asked for Jury's opinion as to the probable results if the Government ceased paying a bonus.

"It would result in considerable diminution," was his answer.

Preston and N. A. T. Co.

Jury first heard of the North Atlantic Trading Co. in the summer of 1897, when Preston came to Liverpool and talked to Mr. Mitchell, who was in charge of the office work there, and talked of the formation of a syndicate. Subsequently there came a letter from the N. A. T. Co., an impertinent letter, directing the Government's agents to forward all continental immigration enquiries.

When the contract went into effect there were complaints from continental agents, from steamship companies who felt that they were being deprived of the results of years of advertising.

There was, Jury thought, an agreement between Sol Sallinger and the N. A. T. Co. as to what Sallinger was to get for working for the company.

On one occasion Sallinger was dunning for money, and Preston sent him his private cheque.

"Preston was acting for the N. A. T. Co.?" asked Chisholm of Antigonish.

The answer was: "So he says."

Col. Sam Hughes expressed his understanding that any mention of Canada in connection with immigration on the continent would mean imprisonment.

"Don't you believe it." said Jury.

Duncan Ross wanted to know whom Jury thought Preston was acting for in employing and paying Sallinger.

"For himself," said Jury.

Jury Couldn't Get In.

Mr. Monk wanted to know about the N. A. T. Co. Jury hadn't much information.

"They would not let me in," he said.

"Who wouldn't?"

"Preston."

Jury said he had written applying to get in.

Mr. Monk invited Jury to tell about his trouble with Preston. Jury began with saying that Preston on going to London found his powers being exercised by Mr. Comber, secretary of the High Commissioner.

Jury and Mitchell in Liverpool gave Preston certain information about unused pamphlets, by word of mouth, and Preston wrote to Mitchell in a confidential letter, asking for the same information in writing. Mitchell refused, and Preston wrote again officially. Jury and Mitchell refused to be used in a fight between Preston and Comber.

Jury produced a letter from an Allan steamship agent in Norway, one Bennett, stating that Preston had appointed two N. A. T. agents in that country.

Not Judge and Jury.

"If," said Chisholm, "Preston states that he is not connected with the company, you would not sit in judgment on him?"

"I wouldn't believe him, of course."

To this Mr. Jury added: "I wouldn't believe him on oath."

Chisholm asked about the dangers of carrying on an immigration propaganda on the continent. Jury held up both hands. "All this talk," said he, "is nonsense. Mr. Preston knows there is no one better able to beat the laws of these countries than the steamship agents who have been doing it all their lives."

Since then it had been said that in Liverpool he had talked of the Preston situation to all Canadian M. P.'s, etc., who came along. He had talked to Mr. Fielding and Mr. Fisher.

Carvell asked about the letters taken from the Ennis office in Liverpool. Jury said he went and took the letters when Ennis did not see, but "they were just close so I could reach forward and get them."

"You say that Ennis was a party?"

"I do."

Jury went on to say that he had a "great itching" to get letters in which Preston was declaring open war against the trades unions of Canada, and he wanted, he admitted, to make a point against Preston.

Ennis had put the letters in an envelope, the envelope in a pigeonhole, and had then turned his back to both Jury and the correspondence. Jury took the letters. He got the letters copied and also photographed, and returned them.

All Thought Preston In It.

He believed Preston was connected with both the N. A. T. Co. and the Leopold agency.

"I have known Preston," said Jury, "for many years, and my suspicions were aroused when Preston talked about organizing a syndicate. I smelled a mouse.

"I saw the hand of Preston all through in the appointment of Sallinger, the instructions to your agents, and I have proof that he went to the continent and appointed the agents of the N. A. T. Co. I never spoke to a steamship man about this contract who had not the idea that Preston was financially interested in it. The men are not fools. When their business was taken away they began to enquire."

Mr. Macdonald of Pictou asked:

"You would make the people of Canada believe, if possible, that Preston is connected with the company?"

"I don't think it's necessary. I think they are already convinced."

This riled the Pictou member, who proclaimed his inclination to take no impertinence from a paid servant of the Government.

Carvell, of Carleton, N. B., roused the wrath of Mr. Monk by referring to Jury as his witness. Carvell suggested that Monk had spent two hours with Jury yesterday, arranging for questions and answers.

"That," said Monk, "is not the case."

Carvell asked Jury, who said he had talked with Monk for about ten minutes, and that he had asked Monk to ask questions. "I had asked Government members to put them, and they wouldn't promise. I asked Mr. MacLean of Nova Scotia, Macdonald and Chisholm.

"And Mr. Chisholm," said that gentleman jumping up, "told you the Government members wanted all the facts."

"Like the man looking for work and praying to God he wouldn't find it," retorted Jury.

TWO SABBATHS.

Jews to Be Exempted From Operation of Sunday Act.

Ottawa, June 2.—The special committee of the Commons agreed yesterday on the amendment it is proposed to recommend in the Government's Sunday observance legislation.

One of the most important items is designed to cover the plea of the Jews and the Seventh Day Adventists' for exemption from the act. This provides that whoever conscientiously and habitually observes the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from work thereon, shall not be subject to prosecution for working on Sunday provided his work does not disturb others in the observance of the day.

Among the most important exemptions are those made to the transportation interests.

$100,000 FOR FRISCO.

Ottawa, June 2.—The San Francisco appropriation went through both Houses yesterday and received the royal assent. Deputy Governor Sedgwick also assented to a number of bills.

The debate was resumed on Mr. Borden's resolution respecting abuses in the Lands Department by Mr. Turiff (East Assiniboia) and he was followed by Mr. Bennett (East Simcoe).

Mr. Adamson (Humbolt) and Mr. McCarthy (Calgary) were the other speakers of the day, and Mr. Crawford (Portage La Prairie) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Must Protect Level Crossings.

Ottawa, June 2.—Mr. Lancaster's level crossing bill was reported yesterday by the special committee which had it under consideration. Railway companies must, after a lapse of twelve months, have protection at level crossings in cities and towns and incorporated villages unless relieved by the railway commission.

COX IN MANY CONCERNS

Senator Outlines the Field of His Investments.

Admits That Hyde's Fate Is Before His Eyes In Preventing One-Man Control —Built Up the Imperial Life For His Son to Manage Instead of Securing Him a Position With the Canada Life—Stock Investment.

Toronto, June 2.—Senator Cox was again on the stand all day yesterday before the Insurance Commission, except for a short time at the beginning when Co. Macdonald of Confederation Life corrected some incorrect impressions from his evidence about New Zealand insurance.

Cox Could Wait.

Senator Cox, president of the Canada Life, succeeded Col. Macdonald on the stand, having waited from the opening of the court.

"It's very desirable to know in advance who's going to vote," was his candid confession when asked about the twenty days' notice required from policyholders for their proxies.

The amount of interest policyholders took in the proxy business varied considerably, according to the Senator. In 1900, out of 6,500 policyholders 1,905 proxies were sent in. This was the first year proxies were in force. In 1902, 7,330 policyholders only contributed 266 proxies. In 1906, 8,800 policyholders sent in 768 proxies. This increase in the number was due to the increased interest in life insurance, following the United States investigation.

Force of Public Opinion.

That public opinion prevents a man from acting in his own interests, was the burden of one portion of the Senator's evidence, yesterday. He gave as an instance what happened when he wanted to get his son in the insurance business. He wanted him to be manager of the Imperial Life. So he himself acquired holdings.

"A perfectly patriotic and natural thing, too," he said.

"Partly patriotic and partly to secure a profitable field," suggested Mr. Shepley.

"Yes, sir. My son was desirous of entering the insurance field and if I had used my influence to put him on the staff of the Canada Life, what would the public have said?"

"Well, just about what they have been saying."

"Yes, sir, but they would have said it with greater force."

What happened to Hyde in the Equitable in New York was another example the Senator gave of the force of public opinion.

He Sold Out.

The witness gave details of the transaction between himself and Mr. Gooderham regarding the Manufacturers' Life and Temperance and General. Senator Cox held considerable stock in the Temperance and General and a small share in the Manufacturers'. He was indignant when he found Mr. Gooderham, who had a controlling interest in the Manufacturers', had also acquired a controlling interest in the Temperance and General. He entered into negotiations to amalgamate the Imperial, the Temperance and General, and the Manufacturers'. But the actuary of the Imperial reported adversely, and he sold out his stock in the two companies.

In Many Companies.

The companies Senator Cox was connected with, mentioned by him yesterday morning, were: Canada Life, National Trust, Central Canada, Dominion Securities, Temperance & General, Dominion Iron & Steel, Manufacturers', Imperial, Dominion Coal, Provident Investment, Toronto Savings & Loan, Electrical Development, Sao Paulo.

Senator Cox denied control of the Canadian General Electric or of the Hamilton Loan or Provident Loan Co. The Canada Life had invested in the Dominion Coal Co., Dominion Iron & Steel Co., Dominion Rolling Stock Co., and the Cape Breton Railway Stock Co., and the Electric Development Co.

Stock Investments.

At the afternoon session the aim of Mr. Shepley was to show that the Canada Life had been going into stock investment, and this line will be continued on Monday morning.

Mr. Cox admitted that the Central Canada and the Dominion Securities are practically one and the same. They are different corporations, but their interests are identical. Mr. Shepley was asking about the purchase of Dominion Coal by individuals connected with the companies. Mr. Cox said there was a lot of dealing in Montreal and in Toronto.

Borrowing on Policies.

"If a man hadn't the money to buy the stock, could not he take out a policy in the Canada Life and borrow money on it?" Mr. Shepley asked.

Mr. Cox replied that a policy in the Canada Life was good security, and Mr. Shepley went into a lot of detail following the question, but the Senator held his ground, and then Mr. Shepley shifted to the $500,000 handed over to the Dominion Securities for Dominion Coal. There was a credit on Jan. 31 in the Bank of Commerce of $10,000 and $2,500 in the Nova Scotia Bank. At the end of February these credits were turned into debits—$75,000 in the Bank of Commerce and $198,000 in the Bank of Nova Scotia. The insurance department of the Canada Life handed over to the investment department $181,000. This information was collected from the books.

Used Its Credit.

"What's your opinion as an insurance man about it, Mr. Cox. Did the Canada Life use its credit for the purpose of lending money?" Mr. Shepley asked.

"We do not refrain from making a good investment for want of money," replied the Senator.

"Our ordinary income is over five millions a year. Our monthly income is five hundred and six hundred thousand dollars. It has never occurred to us that there was anything wrong at all in our investments and our dealings have been to net a valuable profit. The Dominion Coal is an immensely valuable property. Although not paying dividends, it is a enormous concern."

"We always paid interest on our overdrafts," said the Senator. There are times when call loans are profitable if you need money, Mr. Cox told Mr. Shepley.

"I am just simply stating facts, and if there was anything improper in it it must be explained to me," said the Senator, who admitted the purchase of Dominion Coal, which had proven a profitable investment.

For Family's Protection.

Mr. Shepley continued taking up the list of securities purchased by the Canada Life through the Dominion Securities and the Central Canada.

"Within the last few years eight of the leading English and Scotch companies have given no dividends," Mr. Cox said, and he stated that he had a policy in the Standard Life, and just to-day he got a circular saying that he could not get the $1,750 bonus coming to him because the company was strengthening the reserve.

The Senator took the stand that life insurance was for the protection of the family, and even if he didn't get his profits, it was well to have a company strengthened so that the family would benefit when the day came.

The Dissatisfied.

"I think the dissatisfied policyholders of our company are about three per cent., and I never saw a man I could not reasonably deal with and show him where there had been a gross misrepresentation, and satisfy him that he was really being treated most fairly. We have three millions of money invested. The average rate of interest has been decreased by at least two per cent. per annum. It was as easy to lend money at six per cent. 20 years ago as it is now to lend it at 4 per cent." asserted the Senator.

CHAIRMAN RAILWAY BOARD.

Hot Weather HEADACHES

Tablets, powders, drugs, of any kind will NOT cure headaches. Simply because they never reach the CAUSE of the headache.

What causes headaches? Poisoned blood, always.

If the bowels are constipated—

If the kidneys are weak—

If the millions of pores of the skin are not active—

There are bound to be headaches.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

cure headaches because they cure the cause of headaches. They do not drug the nerves. They go to the root of the trouble, invigorate and strengthen the liver and increase the flow of bile into the bowels, which cure constipation. Act directly on the kidneys, heal all kidney irritation. Act on the skin, stimulate and open the pores.

With bowels, kidneys and skin all healthy and working in harmony, the blood is kept pure and rich and there can be no headaches.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are pure fruit juices—combined by a secret process with tonics and intestinal antiseptics.

Ute Indians in Colorado Will Fight Way to Canada.

Denver, Col., June 4.—Dissatisfied with the Government management of the Uintah reservation, about 500 Indians have assembled at Vernal, twenty-five miles north of the reservation, and are awaiting the opening of the mountain passes to the north, declaring that they will flee from Uncle Sam's control and take refuge in Canada, under the British flag, if they have to fight their way.

The Utes say: "We wish to go in peace, but if we cannot go in peace we will go anyhow and the Great Spirit will guide us on our journey. We fear no one who gets in our path. It is for him to fear. Let all beware who oppose us."

Indian Woman 124 Years Old.

Her feet will no longer carry her.

Antwerp, June 4.—According to The Metropole, King Leopold is about to reply energetically to British interference in the Congo independent state and to the accusation that foreigners are shut out of the Congo. The Royal Tragedy.

Assassin Morale Adds Another Dramatic Chapter.

Shot Guard Dead, and Then Turned to Flee, But Inhabitants Seized Him—Turned Revolver on Himself and Sent Shot Into Region of Heart Body Viewed and Completely Identified—Alfonso on Return.

Madrid, June 4.—The capture and suicide Saturday night at Torrejon de Ardos of Manuel Morales, the chief suspect in the bomb outrage against King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, adds another dramatic chapter to the incidents surrounding the royal wedding. Morales was recognized in the little town of Torrejon de Ardos, midway between Madrid and Alcala. A guard sought to detain him, but Morales, drawing a revolver, shot the guard dead. Then he turned to flee, but a number of the inhabitants of the town were upon him, and turning the revolver upon himself he sent a shot in the region of his heart, expiring a few minutes later.

Senor Cuesta, the proprietor of the hotel, from the balcony from which Morales threw the bomb, viewed the body yesterday morning and completely identified it as that of his recent guest.

A close examination of the dead man showed that there were three abrasions on the body besides the death wound—one on the hand, one under the left eye, and one on the forehead.

The final disposition of the body of Morales has not yet been determined on, but the public demand an ignominous burial.

Alfonso's Predictions.

The American envoy to the royal wedding, Frederick W. Whiteridge had a brief conversation with King Alfonso during the reception at the palace Saturday night. When the conversation naturally turned to the attempt on the King and Queen, King Alfonso shrugged his shoulders and made the following significant statement, showing how he views the future: "Yes, fortunately it was unsuccessful, but it will come again. It may be any time—perhaps to-morrow, perhaps within a month, perhaps within a year—but it will come."

The face of the King wore a look of calm resignation as he gave this forecast of the future. Although he bore himself splendidly throughout the terrible experience, the courtiers witnessed a trying scene as King Alfonso and Queen Victoria hurried within the castle after the attempt was made to assassinate them. For a moment Alfonso's nerves were completely unstrung, and turning to Queen Victoria, her dress spattered with blood, he exclaimed:

"Why did I bring you to this country? It was wrong; you never should have come here."

Then the queen-mother and one of the infantas calmed the overwrought nerves of the King and the bridal couple repaired sadly to the nuptial chamber.

The churches of Madrid yesterday celebrated masses of thanksgiving for the escape of the King and Queen.

Driven From Home.

Barcelona, June 4.—Senor Morales, father of the anarchist who attempted to kill King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, and who committed suicide at Torrejon de Ardos Saturday night, was seen at Barcelona yesterday. He is the proprietor of a prosperous factory there. He has a strong individuality and is highly respected.

Answering the questions of an inspector of police concerning his son, he said: "I wish to know nothing of this infamous creature formerly bearing my name. I have not considered him my son since I drove him from my house March 12." The reasons were purely domestic.

Englishman Is Released.

Madrid, June 4.—Robert Hamilton, the English bomb suspect, has been released. The British embassy intervened. It seems to have been a case of mistaken identity.

Cowle's Captain's Defence.

Cleveland, June 4.—The steamer Cowle, which sent the Erin to the bottom in St. Clair River, is unloading her cargo at Port Huron. Capt. Montague says: "After the collision occurred, the barge Danforth, which was in tow of the Erin, began getting a boat down, and did so in our sight. The Cowle was leaking badly, and it seemed highly probable that we would have to beach her to prevent sinking. By the time the exact condition of our boat was known we were too far away to render aid."

Indian Woman 124 Years Old.

Montreal, June 4.—Married to her third husband in the year that Queen Victoria was crowned Queen of England, yet still living and enjoying good health, is the story of an old Indian woman at Seven Islands, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. She is 124 years of age. Her sight is excellent, and she still sews, she still smokes, and the only ailment of old age which has overcome her is with regard to walking. Her feet will no longer carry her.

Five Eaten By Dogs.

St. John's, Newfoundland, June 4.—Reports from Labrador state that five persons were killed and eaten by savage dogs on that coast during the past winter. These dogs, which have been largely interbred with wolves, have frequently killed people heretofore. One of the victims this winter was a man aged 35, and the others were an elderly man and his wife, daughter and grandchild.

Earl Grey's Pictures.

Toronto, June 4.—Earl Grey has offered to lend a number of his own pictures to the exhibition, an offer which Dr. Orr readily accepted. The pictures are "Hope," by Watts; "Lady Grey and Children," by Lawrence, and "Curran," by Lawrence. His Excellency also offers to lend an historic banner of St. George for the next exhibition.

Changes In the Cabinet.

Ottawa, June 4.—Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada Saturday.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth will be sworn in as Minister of Justice when Lord Grey returns from Toronto, and Rodolphe Lemieux, Solicitor-General.

Two Years for a Brute.

St. John, N. B., June 4.—George Hector, the negro who made a criminal assault on Mrs. Annie Bettle a few days ago, and narrowly escaped being lynched by the posse which captured him, pleaded guilty to the charge, and Saturday was sent to the penitentiary for two years.

Must Pay Full Fare.

Ottawa, June 4.—By an order-in-council any person other than an employe or holder of a duly authorized pass traveling on Government railways without payment of the established fare is liable to a penalty of fifty dollars.

INTELLIGENCER JOB OIFFCE
FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK.

Daily Intelligencer.

In Politics For "What There Was in It."

Directly after the Liberal victory in 1896 a prominent politician was heard to speak in the city of Winnipeg to this effect, "The Liberals are sure of office for five years, but no longer, they should make the best of their time while the chance lasts." His advice was to get rich quick by exploitation of the country's resources. That certain men of that party have profited by the recommendation, says the London Free Press has since become evident. The people have been amazed and dazzled by the good fortune that has fallen into the lap of gentlemen on the spot, with the suddenness of magic. Mr. Sifton stands out with special prominence as the reaper of fat harvests, from the high position which he held, as in fact the controller and dispenser of the new wealth, and from the fact that he rose in five or six years from the position of an attorney with judgments against him, to live like one of those New York insurance millionaires, with city and country establishments on a scale of grandeur which no citizen of Ottawa in business has approached. But he is not alone in this new-found splendor. A brother-in-law, Mr. A. A. Burrows, M. P., has been visited with an equal share of good luck. While the Hon. Clifford was Minister of the Interior, the disposer of good things out west, Mr. Burrows was able to secure some eighteen valuable timber berths, covering in the aggregate 478 1-4 square miles of ground, or 305,920 acres. These grants were issued at short intervals covering a period of six years, from 1898 to 1904. They were picked out in sections varying in area from one square mile to fifty square miles. Quite likely Mr. Burrows uses good judgment in selecting these timber locations, and got full value for the money invested. With so well-informed a friend as the Hon. Clifford to give the tip it is hardly to be supposed that he failed to back the right horse. The probability is that Mr. Burrows enjoyed a confidence and support at headquarters not accorded to ordinary applicants, and was thus enabled to procure an enviable place in the line up. That this is the opinion of Mr. R. L. Borden, the vigilant Opposition leader, is plain from the questions he seeks to have elucidated in Parliament.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The rare days are with us.

* * *

Fine turnout of the military and Veterans yesterday, wasn't it? It's a long time since a better one was seen here.

* * *

Some street crossings over in West Belleville have been blocked up for over two weeks now, and residents of the streets are beginning to wonder if the Public Works people have forgotten that they are still on the map.

* * *

St. Michael's church tower is going up in fine style. It threatens, when completed, to be one of the chief architectural beauties of Belleville.

* * *

That sermon to the Veterans and soldiers yesterday, by "one of our local ministers," was a grand one. "No better ever heard in this city," was the consensus of opinion yesterday.

* * *

Not many moons ago the unfortunate musical "critic" of this paper was severely taken to task and crushed, with withering sarcasm, by a correspondent who objected to the "write-up" of the Albani concert in this city. The saddened and broken "critic" was only prevented from ending his career in the river by the assurances of prominent members of the Philharmonic society that they quite agreed with his views.

Now, it may interest the correspondent in question to learn that in the London, Eng., Daily Telegraph, of May 19, is published that part of The Intelligencer's Albani concert "write-up" which referred to Mr. Haydn Wood, the violinist. There are nine lines of it, for which Mr. Wood's agent, of course, pays five shillings a line. This matter is not mentioned in a spirit of egotism, but simply to show that, even though The Intelligencer may occasionally be abused by people whose pet corns have been stepped on in this city, its remarks are deemed worthy of reproduction by artists of world-wide reputation, in a paper which commands the largest circulation in the largest city in the world.

HAYDN WOOD.
"The violinist, Mr Haydn Wood, played with a depth of feeling not often met with. He lacked none of the attributes of a violin virtuoso. His harmonies were dazzling, and his execution left nothing to be desired. His variations on a Paganini Caprice and Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnol" showed that there was little in the way of technique he was not master of. He also played Schumann's Traumerei in a perfectly ideal way; one could hardly imagine it better played."

There are so many good things in the following, from the Brockville Times, that we have no hesitation in reproducing it:

"The Hamilton Spectator, recently gave its readers the following good advice:

"Follow the lead of the people who are investing their brains and fortunes in the development of their home city. What matter if they are making more than you out of it? Through their enterprise you will surely get a share of advantage. Help the industrial committee even if you can do no more than show a sympathetic interest in its effort. Encourage the aldermen to be better than they have been by commending their good deeds, as well as condemning their bad. Make things easy rather than difficult for the railway promoter, the man with electric power at his call, the steamboat man, and all others who have at their disposal these schemes and utilities that make for municipal greatness.""

"This is admirable good sense. Help along every worthy local enterprise. Give the local industries a liberal deal when you can. Do not be afraid of someone getting a little money or a little credit. When a new suggestion is made for some new enterprise do not look for the holes and the weak points only but try to see the good points too. Give newcomers a kindly word and a little patronage at once and don't wait until they have been frozen out of the town."

Yesterday was Whitsunday, just six weeks from Easter, and weather prophets now predict more pleasant weather than we have been getting recently. It is said that, as the wind blows on Easter Sunday, so it will blow for six weeks. It will be remembered that there was a cold, raw north wind on Easter Sunday, and the wind, since then, has mostly been from the same quarter.

The band concert season is now near at hand, and the following remarks of the Peterboro Review apply quite as much to this city as they do to that, unless things change very much this summer from what they were in former years:

"At the band concert last night in Victoria Park the music would have been enjoyed to a greater extent if so many persons and children had not kept moving about. The practice of wandering here, there and everywhere, and talking in a loud tone of voice during the rendition of some high class selection, is reprehensible, and would not be committed if persons were only a little more thoughtful. Children, especially, should not be allowed to make a noise and keep up a constant racket. A sum of money is voted the band to provide music, and the pleasure of the listeners must not be disturbed by small boys and others. The citizens go to enjoy the selections, and they should do so uninterruptedly. The small boy may have rights, but so have adults. It is hoped that in future better order will be observed at band concerts and that there will be less moving about. If persons desire to shift they can do so when the music is not going on."

Smashup at Station On Saturday Night

On Saturday night, at a late hour, some cars of a Grand Trunk Railway freight train were derailed in the yard here. It appears that a brake beam broke, and this caused the accident. The train was coming in from the west and had just passed the station when the trouble occurred. Some eight cars were derailed as a result of the accident, but, fortunately, no person was injured. Some damage was done to rolling stock and also some loss was sustained to merchandise. The accident occurred in a portion of the yard which did not affect traffic. The wreck was not cleared up until some time yesterday.

BASEBALL.

Foundrymen Were Again the Victors.

A game of baseball was played on the Hospital lot on Saturday afternoon which proved to be too one-sided to arouse much interest. The teams were from the establishments of Marsh & Henthorn and the Belleville Hardware Company. For the first three innings good ball was played, but in the fourth the Lock Factory team went to pieces and from that point to the finish all interest was gone. The score at the finish was 20 to 10 in favor of the Marsh & Henthorn team. Mr. R. Collins was umpire and did his duties in an impartial manner. The players and their positions were as follows:

Foundry — E. Tuite c, R. Palos p, H. Watkins 1st b, W. Pepper 2nd b, J. Cornell 3rd b, V. Brennan s.s., R. Hunter cf, G. Bawden lf, and C. Cornell rf.

FOOTBALL.

Albert College Beat Stirling.

An interesting game of football took place in Stirling on Saturday last, between the Stirling team and the Albert College team. The college boys were a little handicapped by the smallness of the ground and perhaps did not display their usual form. The game was close and vigorously contested the issue being in doubt all the time. Owing to the short distance between ends the game was played much in front of the goals and some fine defence work was seen. A rain storm stopped the play near the finish with the teams a tie. As soon as the rain cleared the game recommenced and Albert scored in a few minutes, winning the game 2—1. The return match will no doubt be very interesting.

SPORTING NOTES.

Lacrosse results on Saturday; — Capitals 6, Torontos 5; Shamrocks 6, Tecumsehs 3; Cornwalls 4, Nationals 2; Brantford 10, St. Kitts 4.

The yawl Tamerlane won the Lipton cup in the Brooklyn Yacht Club's ocean race.

The pole vault record has been broken again. Leroy Somse, of the University of Michigan, cleared 12 feet 4 7-8 inches on Saturday.

Jimmy Reynolds, Port Hope's 55-year-old barber, started this morning to walk from that town to Toronto, on a wager of $135 that he could not cover the distance in 24 hours. It is conservatively estimated at 65 miles. Much money has been bet "on the side," and it is believed that, unless the old pedestrian's feet go back on him, he will land the money.

The Hamilton Jockey Club races open to-morrow, and will last for 11 days.

The Cheese Board.

At the Cheese Board on Saturday afternoon cheese dropped off 1-1-8c from last week, but was still 1-13-16c better than at the same date last year. The drop in price was owing to the increased offerings, there being 432 boxes more cheese offered on Saturday than at the corresponding date last year. The attendance was large, and the bidding exceedingly spirited. A few of the cheese offered were full grass, but the great majority were fodder.

The president, in a little address, said he had learned that one or two factories had been selling off the Board, and announced that such a proceeding would not be countenanced in future. All factories must carry out rule 15, which provides that all cheese must be registered each sale day, under penalty of suspension, expulsion or fine. The feeling on the local board is strong against this practise, as it is felt that it has a tendency to demoralize the existing conditions.

Forty-four factories boarded today, 3690 white and 25 colored being offered. The sales were; Brenton & Son, 310 at 11 cents; Lovell & Christmas, 560 at 11 cents; Hodgson Bros., 340 at 11 cents; W. J. Magrath & Co., 500 at 11 cents; the balance went to Jas. Alexander at 11 cents, with the exception of a lot of 135 boxes, which sold at 10 15-16 cents.

FAULTY DIGESTION.

CAUSES PHYSICAL AND MENTAL BREAKDOWN — MI-O-NA WILL STRENGTHEN STOMACH.

Few people realize the intimate relation between the mind and the stomach. Worry and excessive mental work re-act on the digestive system, while on the other hand the greatest cause of nerve and brain impoverishment is a weak or faulty digestion.

Just as soon as you find that your food is not properly digested, that you taste it after eating, that the tongue is furred, the breath heavy, the appetite poor, the head occasionally dull and aching, begin the use of Mi-o-na.

This reliable remedy contains no pepsin, and is an absolute strengthener of the digestive system. In fact, it is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach, excepting cancer. It is not a patent medicine, and its formula is furnished to physicians, druggists, and all intelligent people who may desire it. Mi-o-na differs from any other remedy on the market in its lasting effects.

Mi-o-na costs but 50 cents a box.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

ANOTHER WONDER OF SCIENCE.

Biology has Proved that Dandruff is Caused by a Germ.

Science is doing wonders these days in medicine as well as in mechanics. Since Adam lived the human race has been troubled with dandruff, for which no hair preparation has heretofore proved a successful cure until Newbro's Herpicide was put on the market. It is a scientific preparation that kills the germ that makes dandruff or scurf by digging into the scalp to get at the root of the hair, where it saps the vitality; causing itching scalp, falling hair, and finally baldness. Without dandruff hair must grow luxuriantly. It is the only destroyer of dandruff.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

OTTAWA PEOPLE TAKE UMBRAGE.

BECAUSE DR. TORREY REFUSES TO GO THERE UNLESS UNITED STATES EDITION OF HYMNAL IS USED.

Ottawa, June 3.—Considerable feeling has been aroused over an incident in connection with the forthcoming Torrey-Alexander meetings. It is over hymn books. The Ottawa committee bought 600 copies of the British edition of the revival hymnals, but Dr. Torrey has wired that he would not come to Ottawa unless the United States edition of the Torrey-Alexander hymnal was used. Needless to say, the message had the effect of a bomb thrown into the evangelistic camp here. Many strong opinions were expressed. The Ottawa members were indignant at the national affront. The Pembroke members coincided, and there was a strong disposition to cancel the mission altogether. This, however, was overruled by reason of the expense already involved in preparation of the visit.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

A Battle in the Sea.

Did you ever see bluefish charge a school of menhaden at sea? That is something worth seeing. The bluefish throw their lines forward until they almost surround the menhaden, and they attack them flank and rear. The menhaden fairly make the water boil in their efforts to escape, while all around the enemy is at them tearing relentlessly. Into all this commotion comes a great shark. It's a picnic for the shark, a school of menhaden all herded up for its benefit. It swims leisurely into the midst of them, opens its mouth and takes in half a dozen menhaden at a gulp. It swims around and bites out half a dozen more from the school. It gorges itself without effort. But the menhaden are not nearly as much disturbed by the presence of the monster swimming about among them as they are by the charging bluefish. The shark takes half a dozen fish or more at a bite, while the bluefish only bites a piece out of a single fish, but there is only one shark, while there may be thousands of bluefish plunging and tearing incessantly and killing and maiming at every stroke. The shark's a brute, but under such circumstances the menhaden have less of fear than they have of contempt for him.

A Photographic Warning.

The following story of a young lady living in the country who came to London to be photographed is told by M. A. P. and vouched for by a well known London photographer. After some days the lady, Miss B., was informed the photograph was not a success, and another sitting was suggested. This she agreed to, but again was informed that the photograph was a failure. There was a third sitting. In two days' time she received an urgent letter from the photographer asking her to come up to his studio and to bring a friend with her. Miss B. went, accompanied by her mother, and was shown the amazing results of the three sittings. The pictures of the girl herself were quite good, but in each plate there was to be seen standing behind her the figure of a man holding a dagger in his uplifted hand. The features, though faint, were clearly discernible, and Miss B. recognized them as those of her fiancee, an officer in the Indian army. The effect of this experience was so great that after a few days she wrote out to India, breaking off the engagement.

Louis Napoleon Answered.

Lady Blessington did not always meet with gratitude from some whose position at last enabled them to serve her. She sheltered in her London home Louis Napoleon after he had escaped from his prison in Ham. After Louis Napoleon became president of the French republic he seems to have turned the cold shoulder on Lady Blessington and Count D'Orsay when they approached him in Paris. There was a story going at the time, for the accuracy of which we certainly will not vouch, but which appeared in several of the London papers. Shortly before Lady Blessington's death she met, so the story goes, the president driving in the Champs Elysees. He stopped his carriage, she stopped hers, and they conversed for a few minutes. His manner seemed to her determinedly chilly. "Do you stay long in Paris?" he asked as he was about to drive on. "No," she answered. "And you?"—London Spectator.

Hanging It!

Hang the paper! says Mamma, her face alight with joy,
O hang the paper! says papa in echo of mamma;
Within the cry of each their lurks a very different note,—
Mamma thus speaketh from the heart, Papa speaks from the throat.

GIRL IN THE CASE.

If you notice a man who is passing the shops
Looks in at the furniture store,
And lets his eye rove to the place where the stove
In neatly displayed on the floor,
If he looks at the dishes, the tables and chairs,
And everything else round the place,
And stops every day as he passes that way,
You may know there's a girl in the case.

If he has at his work a pre-occupied air,
A faraway look in his eye,
And hums as he looks through ledgers and books,
And scribbles a name on the sly,
If he takes down a picture when no one is near,
And secretly smiles at the face,
And blushes like ain if someone butts in,
You may know there's a girl in the case.

And if you observe a man who has lost
All interest in story and song,
Who wants to destroy your innocent joy
And swears that the world was made wrong,
Who growls at events with a pessimist's leer
And sees nothing good in the race,
Who tells you to take a jump in the lake,
You may know there's a girl in the case.

If a man has a watch that is handsome and fine,
Full jewelled and all of that thing,
That he holds up to view when he shows it to you,
But carefully hangs to the string:
If he opens it forty times every hour
To see if the hands are in place,
Or something like that, you may bet an old hat,
That there is a girl in the case.

At this season the magazines deal extensively in advice on "How to Keep Your Lawn in Good Condition." Frequent pushing of the lawnmower is a good way. But what the average man wants to know is how to keep his lawn in apple-pie order without breaking his back or blistering his hands. The common way is to leave the job to wifie.

At the same time, it is a good thing women are not as absent-minded as men are. Fancy how scandalous it would be if the ladies should some time make a very natural mistake and pull their stockings up over their arms in place of the long gloves they are wearing, and then calmly wander down town to the ice cream counter in their bare feet!

Farmers should use more paint on their buildings. It is the best of economy to do so. Even at the highest retail price of materials it pays handsomely to keep the buildings well painted. Everybody will acknowledge that a set of farm buildings well painted are a great deal more attractive than those that are unpainted. But this is far from being the whole benefit to be received.

A Remarkable Career.

General Sam Houston was not only a great Texan, but probably the most striking and commanding figure which has yet appeared in the public life of the far southwest—born in Virginia, taken to Tennessee at an early age, whence, while yet in his teens, he went to war with Andrew Jackson against the Creek Indians; desperately wounded in the battle of the Horseshoe Bend; adjutant general of Tennessee and a representative in congress from that state; governor of Tennessee in his youth; married, separated from his wife in two months, resigning immediately as governor, self exiled for years among the Cherokee Indians, emigrating to Texas in 1832; member of the convention of 1836, which declared Texas to be an independent republic; general and commander in chief of the army which achieved independence at San Jacinto; twice president of the republic, United States senator and governor of the state.—C. A. Culberson in Scribner's.

John Doe Proceedings.

"John Doe" proceedings were abolished by law in Great Britain in 1852. Previous to that time John Doe had figured in the old fashioned ejectment action for the recovery of the possession of land, together with damages for the wrongful withholding thereof. For various reasons of convenience and history dating from the reign of Edward III. A did not proceed against B directly in such a case. Instead A delivered to B an entirely false statement from the fictitious "John Doe" that A had devised the land to "John" for a term of years, and "John" had been ousted from it by the equally fictitious "Richard Roe." Then Richard informed B that he was not going to defend the action himself, but B must do it, and so on. Occasionally, by way of variety, "John Doe" gave place to one "Goodtitle."

Columbia River Thrice Named.

The Columbia river has had three names. It was first called the Oregon. Afterward it was called the St. Roque, but when it was discovered by Robert Gray in 1792 it was given the name of his vessel, the Columbia, in place of the two floating appellations, Oregon and St. Roque. According to Whitney, the original name of the river was the Orejon, "big ear" or "one that has big ears," the allusion being to the custom of the Indians who were found in its region of stretching their ears by boring them and crowding them with ornaments.

Why Is It?

Here is a question in naval science which is to the average sailor man a riddle unsolved. Take a vessel of, say, 2,500 tons; place on it a cargo of 3,500 tons. This gives you a total of 6,000 tons. Hitch a little tug to this vessel, and she will yank the big craft along at the rate of six or eight knots an hour. Now put the tug's machinery in the big vessel. It won't move her half a knot an hour. Why is this?

When You Take a Bath.

When drying off after a bath stand in the bathtub in water up to the ankles. When rubbed with coarse towels until the body is all aglow, step out and wipe the feet. This prevents that uncomfortable chilly feeling experienced if one steps immediately out of a bathtub full of water on to the bath mat.

Love.

We never can say why we love, but only that we love. The heart is ready enough at feigning excuses for all that it does or imagines of wrong, but ask it to give a reason for any of its beautiful and divine motives, and it can only look upward and be dumb.—Lowell.

A Kindly Provision of Nature.

"The codfish," said the professor, "lays considerably more than 1,000,000 eggs."

"It is mighty lucky for the codfish that she doesn't have to cackle over every egg," said the student who came from a farm.

Not Guilty.

Lawyer—You say you left home on the 20th. Witness—Yes, sir. Lawyer—And came back on the 25th? Witness—Yes, sir. Lawyer (severely)—What were you doing in the interim? Witness—Never was in such a place.

We are all wise. The difference between persons is not in wisdom, but in art.—Emerson.

Superb "Nerve" of a Hat Seeker.

"Oh, but the 'nerve' of some women is worth a fortune to them!" groaned a girl at luncheon in a department store. "I've been trying to get a hat. Upstairs in the millinery department I tried on hats until my arms ached pinning them on, and the saleswoman got purple with rage because none suited me. In walked a grenadier sort of woman, with a scared looking maid carrying a big paper bag. This woman sniffed around, turned hats upside down and almost inside out and finally looked over the untrimmed shapes. She picked out one. Drawing a chair before the biggest mirror in the place, she sat down and had the maid empty the contents of that bag in her lap. It held feathers, flowers and ribbons. Then she began to pin on feathers here, a flower there and to try the effect of a bow in another place. She even had the maid hold a trimmed hat while she copied it! The attendants seemed fascinated, for no one said a word. And that in a store, mind you, where the salesgirls ask you sarcastically whether you are looking for something cheap if you refuse to put down $35 on a hat they select for you."

Her Property.

Now and again things happen on the football field which go to add to the gayety of the nation. On one occasion, for instance, during a certain league match in the north, the referee somehow managed to lose his whistle. There was not another whistle to be found, and it seemed that the game would have to come to a sudden and inglorious end, until the referee hit upon an ingenious scheme. He produced a latchkey from his pocket and managed to tootle merrily enough on it till suddenly, as he approached the touch line a woman's shrill voice was heard, exclaiming:

"Fred, come here at once! Where did you get that latchkey?"

As he listened to the guffaw which went up from the assembled crowd that referee was the most sheepish looking man on the ground, and as he thought of the curtain lecture looming ahead his heart became like lead within his bosom.—London Answers.

Training a Dog.

A dog understands "yes," and is equally competent to grasp the "no." Outside of that he is all dog and follows his dog ways. He indulges in no mental refinement and will not comprehend many of your changes of mood or mind. Whatever you undertake to teach make it plain, simple and unchangeable. It is a pity that he must be taught not to jump up on people and compliment them with his caresses. He means well, but must be disciplined sternly into knowing that it is not good form under any circumstances. The discipline need not be accompanied by any severity. A light touch with a whip, if applied invariably, will soon settle the matter. Some kennel men adopt the plan of stepping lightly on the hind foot, and it is perhaps the clearest way of conveying the idea.

Art Above Nature?

Art is one of the greatest phenomena of our world. It is one of the most serious of things. Nature has no art. Nature is grotesque and weird, but art is ours; it is human. Art means anything. A system of philosophy is as much art as beauty in sculpture and rhythm and cadence in poetry. There is the art of living, the art of meeting people. No bird gives real music. The finest nightingale sends out only weird tones, but it isn't music. The only musical sound in nature is the sound of water dripping from a rock. Art is hypernature, antinature. It is neither imitation nor rivalry, but something we give to nature.—Dr. Emil Reich.

A Cubic Foot of Gold.

If some millionaire agreed to give you a cubic foot of pure gold if you should put it in a sack and carry it a mile, do you think you would be equal to the task? Certainly you are confident of your ability to perform the task, but there would not be the least danger of the man of money losing his gold cube. Such a lump of virgin gold would weigh a few grains over 1,203 pounds.

Doctors' Latin.

At its best it must be admitted that doctors' Latin is, in the words of a distinguished professor, "doggy and mediaeval." For our own part we would go so far as to say that it is more "doggy" than mediaeval. At its worst it is a monstrum horrendum with which no respectable dog would own kinship.—British Medical Journal.

Cigars Before Breakfast.

"The proper time to test a cigar or stogy is in the morning before breakfast," said a tobacconist. "Naturally, early morning smoking is not healthy, but it is very discriminating. Try it by smoking samples of your favorite brands in the early morning and you can depend upon your judgment."

Triumph of Art.

Miss Peachley (exhibiting her new hat)—I know you won't like it. Miss Tartun—But I do, dear. I never saw anything more artistic than that arrangement of the flowers. It hides the shape of it beautifully.

Just Like the Little Injuns.

Teacher—How many commandments are there, Sally? Sally—Please, teacher, ten. Teacher—Suppose you were to break a commandment. (Impressive pause.) Sally—Then there'd be nine.—Punch.

Owned Up.

Redd—I saw a picture up at the exhibition of a cart drawn by a donkey. Greene—Yes; it was. I drew it.—Yonkers Statesman.

"Have you money, senhor?"

"Yes," I answered.

"Then," continued Masanovitch, "you must take this train for Cuyaba. Let the Emperor guide you. If danger threatens us, telegraph me the one word, 'Lesba'! Do you understand, Senhor Harcliffe?"

"I think so," said I, "but let me use some other word. Why drag a woman's name into affair?"

He coughed slightly.

"It is a word you will remember," said he. "Good by to you, senhor."

He had an odd way of disappearing, this strange Pole, whose eyes I had never seen. With his last word he actually melted into the crowd of loiterers who were watching the Emperor's departure, and I could not have found him again had I so desired.

My first thought was to rebel at leaving Rio, where Lesba Paola had taken refuge from the coming storm. But the girl seemed amply amused without me, and my duties to the interests of my dead chieftain forbade my deserting the Cause at this crisis. Therefore I would follow the Emperor.

As the train moved slowly out of the station, I swung myself upon the steps of the rear car, and the next instant was tumbled upon the platform by a person who sprang up behind me.

Angrily protesting, I scrambled to my feet; but the fellow, with scarcely a glance in my direction, passed into the car and made his way forward.

The exclamations died suddenly upon my lips.

The belated passenger was Senhor Valcour, the spy.

CHAPTER XII.

The name of an Emperor is a fine thing to conjure with. When we arrived at the station at Cuyaba at early evening a score of saddle-horses and several carriages were awaiting the royal party.

I stood in the shadows of the station and watched the guardsmen mount and surround the equipage in which their imperial master seated himself. His civic companions—men of high rank, evidently—occupied the other carriages; and then the entire cavalcade swept away into the gloom and left me alone.

The station agent was known to me as a patriot, be he was still bobbing his head after the royal party when I accosted him.

"Get me a horse, Pedro."

"A horse! Ah, your excellency is joking. Every horse that could be found has been impressed by the Emperor."

"Anything will do. A nag of any sort, with saddle or cart, will answer my purpose. The Cause demands it, Pedro."

"I am powerless, your excellency. Absolutely powerless!"

It was true enough. The only way for me to get to de Pintra's mansion was on foot, and after inducing the man to give me a peasant's dress in exchange for my police uniform, I set out at once.

It was a long and gloomy walk. There was a moon, but large banks of clouds were drifting across the sky, and the way was obscured more than half the time, causing me to go slowly in order to avoid stumbling into the ditches.

I met no one on the road, for the highways were usually deserted at this hour, and the silence all about me added its depressing influence to the anxiety of my thoughts.

The Emperor's advent into this stronghold of the Revolution indicated that at last he had determined to act and suppress the conspiracy that had grown to such huge proportions. With the real leader—"the brains of the revolt," as de Pintra was called—out of the way, Dom Pedro doubtless had concluded he could easily crush the remainder of the conspirators.

But his success, I argued, would depend upon his securing the key to the secret vault, for without that the records would never come into his possession.

Did he have the key? Was this the explanation of his sudden activity? The thought made me hasten my steps, but although I put forth my best efforts it was close upon midnight before I sighted the great hedge that surrounded de Pintra's mansion. I half-expected to find the gateway guarded, but to my relief the avenue was as deserted as the highway had been.

Cautiously I passed along the drive leading to the mansion. I am not usually nervous at such times, but something in the absolute stillness of the scene, something menacing in the deep shadows cast by the great trees, unnerved me and made me suspicious of my surrounding.

Once, indeed, I fancied that I heard a stealthy footstep advancing to meet me, and with a bound I sprang from the driveway and crouched among the thick shrubbery, listening intently.

For a few moments I gazed as if fascinated.

But after a few moments I became reassured and resumed my journey, avoiding this time the graveled drive and picking my way noiselessly across the grass, skirting the endless array of flower-beds and shrubbery.

Fortunately the moon came out, or I might have lost my way; and before long the black line of shadow cast by the mansion itself fell at my feet. Peering ahead, I saw that I had approached the right wing of the house. It was here that my own room was located, and with a low exclamation of relief I was about to step forward into the path when my eyes fell upon a sight that caused me to suddenly halt and recoil in horror.

It was a man's arm showing white in the moonlight, and extending from beneath a clump of low bushes.

For a few moments I gazed at it as if fascinated, but quickly recovering myself I advanced to the bushes and gently withdrew the body until it lay exposed to the full rays of the moon. I fully expected to recognize one of our conspirators, but when I turned the man over a face was disclosed that was wholly unknown to me—that of a dark, swarthy person of evident intelligence and refinement.

He had been shot squarely between the eyes, and doubtless had met death instantly. I was about to consider the man a government spy who had been killed by Paola or some other of the conspirators, when I discovered, with a start of dismay, that the man's left hand had been completely severed at the wrist. Also the hand was missing, and although I searched the ground carefully in the neighborhood, I could find no trace of it.

This discovery gave me ample food for thought. The only plausible reason for the hasty amputation of the hand had doubtless been to secure a ring which the dead man had worn—the secret key to Dom Miguel's vault probably, since the murder had been committed at this place.

In whose possession, then, was the ring now? Madam Izabel, the Emperor's spy, had first stolen it. Then another had murdered her for its possession—not a conspirator, for all had denied any knowledge of the ring. Could it have been the man who now lay dead before me? And, if so, who was he? And had the government again managed to secure the precious jewel and to revenge Madam Izabel's assassination by mutilating this victim in the same way that she had been served?

But if the dead man was not one of the few leaders of the conspiracy who knew the secret of the ring, how should he have learned its value, and risked his life to obtain it from Madam Izabel?

That, however, was of no vital importance. The main thing was that the ring had been taken from him, and had once more changed ownership.

Perhaps Paola, lurking near his uncle's mansion, had encountered this person and killed him to get the ring. If so, had he carried it to the Emperor? And was this the explanation of Dom Pedro's sudden visit to de Pintra's residence?

Yet what object could Paola have in betraying the conspiracy at this juncture?

Filled with these thoughts I was about to proceed to the house, when a sudden thought induced me to stoop and feel of the murdered man's arm. The flesh was still warm!

The murder had been done that very evening—perhaps within the hour.

I own that the horror of the thing and the reckless disregard of life evinced in this double murder for the possession of the ring, warned me against proceeding further in the matter; and for the moment I had serious thoughts of returning quietly to Rio and taking the first steamer for New Orleans. But there were reasons for remaining. One was to get possession in some way of Dom Miguel's body and see it decently buried; for he was my uncle's friend, as well as my own, and I could not honorably return home and admit that I had left him lying within the dungeon where his doom had overtaken him. The second reason I could not have definitely explained. Perhaps it was curiosity to see the adventure to the end, or a secret hope that the revolution was too powerful to be balked. And then there was Lesba! At any rate, I resolved not to desert the Cause just yet, although acknowledging it to be the wisest and safest course to pursue.

So, summoning all my resolution and courage to my aid, I crept to the window of my room and, by a method that I had many times before made use of, admitted myself to the apartment.

I had seen no lights whatever shining from the windows, and the house—as I stood still and listened—seemed absolutely deserted. I felt my way to a shelf, found a candle, and lighted it.

Then I turned around and faced the barrel of revolver that was held on a level with my eyes.

"You are our prisoner, senhor!" said a voice, stern but suppressed. "I beg you to offer no resistance."

CHAPTER XIII.

I held the candle steadily and stared at my captor. He was dressed in the uniform of an officer of the royal guards—the body commanded by Fonseca. At his back were two others, silent but alert.

"You are here in the service of General da Fonseca?" I asked, with assumed composure.

"In the Emperor's service, senhor," answered the officer, quietly.

"But the general—"

"The general is unaware of our mission. I have my orders from his Majesty in person."

He smiled somewhat unpleasantly as he made this statement, and for the first time I realized that my arrest might prove a great misfortune.

"Pardon me if I appear discourteous," he continued, and made a sign to his men.

One took the candle from my hand and the other snapped a pair of handcuffs over my wrists.

I had no spirit to resist. The surprise had been so complete that it wellnight benumbed my faculties. I heard the officer's voice imploring me, in polite tones to follow, and then my captors extinguished the candle and marched me away through a succession of black passages until we had reached an upper room at the back of the house.

Here a door quickly opened and I was thrust into a blaze of light so brilliant that it nearly blinded me.

Blinking my eyes to accustom them to the glare, I presently began to note my surroundings, and found myself standing before a table at which was seated the Emperor of Brazil.

Involuntarily I bowed before his Majesty. He was a large man, of commanding appearance, with dark eyes that seemed to read one through and through. Behind him stood a group of four men in civilian attire, while the other end of the room was occupied by a squad of a dozen soldiers of the Uruguayan guard.

"A prisoner, your Majesty," said the officer, saluting. "One evidently familiar with the house, for he obtained entrance to a room adjoining Dom Miguel's library."

The Emperor turned from the papers that littered the table and eyed me gravely.

"Your name!" said he, in a stern voice.

I hesitated; but remembering that officially I was occupying a dungeon in Rio I decided to continue the deception of my present disguise.

"Andrea Subig, your Majesty."

Some one laughed softly beside me. I turned and saw Valcour at my elbow.

"It is the American secretary, your Majesty, one Robert Harcliffe, by name."

The spy spoke in his womanish, dainty manner, and with such evident satisfaction that I could have strangled him with much pleasure had I been free.

"Why are you here?" inquired the Emperor, after eyeing me curiously for a moment.

"I have some personal belongings in this house which I wished to secure before returning to the United States. Your men arrested me in the room I have been occupying."

"Why are you anxious to return to the United States?" questioned the Emperor.

"Because my mission to Brazil is ended."

"It is true," returned Dom Pedro, positively. "The conspiracy is at an end."

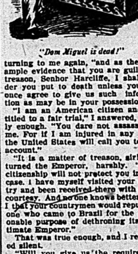
"Of that I am not informed," I replied evasively. "But I have been employed by Dom Miguel de Pintra, not by the conspiracy, as your Majesty terms it. And Dom Miguel has no further need of me."

"Dom Miguel is dead," retorted the Emperor, with an accent of triumph in his voice.

"Murdered by his daughter, your spy," I added, seeing that he was aware of the truth.

He merely shrugged his broad shoulders and turned to whisper to a gray-bearded man behind him.

"This conspiracy must be summarily dealt with," resumed the Emperor, turning to me again, "and as there is ample evidence that you are guilty of treason, Senhor Harcliffe, I shall order you put to death unless you at once agree to give us such information as may be in your possession."



"Dom Miguel is dead!"

"I am an American citizen and entitled to a fair trial," I answered, boldly enough. "You dare not assassinate me. For if I am injured in any way the United States will call you to full account."

"It is a matter of treason, sir!" returned the Emperor, harshly. "Your citizenship will not protect you in this case. I have myself visited your country and been received there with great courtesy. And no one knows better than I that your countrymen would repudiate one who came to Brazil for the treasonable purpose of dethroning its legitimate Emperor."

That was true enough, and I remained silent.

"Will you give us the required information?" he demanded.

I was curious to know how much the royalists had learned, and in what position the republicans had been placed by this imperial visit to their headquarters. Dom Pedro had said that the conspiracy was at an end; but I did not believe that.

"I am sure you err in believing me to be in the secret counsels of the republicans," I said, after a moment's thought. "I was merely employed in the capacity of private secretary to Dom Miguel."

"But you know of the underground vault? You have visited it?"

"Often," I replied, seeing no harm in the acknowledgment.

"Can you open it for us?" he demanded.

I laughed, for the question exposed to me his real weakness.

"Your Majesty must be well aware that there is but one key," I replied, "and without that secret key I am as powerless as you to open the vault."

"Where is the key?" he asked.

"I do not know. Sennora de Mar stole it from Dom Miguel."

"And it was taken from her by one of your conspirators."

"Have you traced it no farther?" I inquired, carelessly.

He shifted uneasily in his chair.

"My men are now investigating the matter," said he. "Doubtless the ring will soon be in our possession."

"And how about the murdered man in the shrubbery?" I asked.

The royalists exchanged glances, and one or two uttered exclamations of surprise.

"Is there a murdered man in the shrubbery, Captain de Souza?" questioned the Emperor, sternly.

"Not that I know of, your Majesty," returned the officer.

"I found him as I approached the house," said I. "He has been shot within the hour, and his left hand severed at the wrist."

It was evident that my news startled them. When I had described the location of the body some of the soldiers were sent to fetch it, and during their absence the Emperor resumed his questioning. I told him frankly that none of the records of the republicans was in my possession, and that whatever knowledge I had gained of the conspiracy or the conspirators could not be drawn from me by his threats of death. For now I began to understand that this visit to Dom Miguel's house was a secret one, and that the royalists were as much in the dark as ever regarding the conspiracy itself or the whereabouts of its leaders. One thing only they knew—that the records were lying with Dom Miguel's dead body in the secret vault, and that the ring which opened it was missing.

Before long the soldiers bore the body of the latest victim of the fatal ring into the presence of the Emperor, and Valcour bent over it eagerly for a moment, and then shook his head.

"The man is a stranger," he said.

Others present endeavored to identify the murdered man, but were equally unsuccessful.

I could see by their uneasy looks that they were all suspicious of one another; for Captain de Souza protested that no shot could have been fired without some of his men hearing it, and the fact that the ring they sought had been so recently within their very reach led them to believe it might not now be very far away.

For all the Emperor's assumed calmness, I knew he was greatly disturbed by this last murder, as well as by the impotency of his spies to discover the whereabouts of the ring. When Valcour suggested, in his soft voice, that I had myself killed the fellow in the shrubbery, and had either secreted the ring or had it now in my possession, they pounced upon me eagerly, and I was subjected to a thorough search and afterward to severe questioning and many fierce threats.

For a few moments the Emperor listened to the counsels of the group of advisors that stood at his back, and then ordered me safely confined until he had further use for me.

The officer therefore marched me away to the front of the house, where, still securely hand-cuffed, I was thrust into a small chamber and left alone. The key was turned in the lock and I heard the soft foot-falls of a guard pacing up and down outside the door.

The long walk from the station and the excitement of the last hour had greatly wearied me; so I groped around in the dark until I found the bed with which the room was provided, and soon had forgotten all about the dreary conspiracy in a refreshing sleep.

CHAPTER XIV.

Toward morning a tramping of feet aroused me; the door was thrust open long enough for another prisoner to be admitted, and then I heard the bolts shoot into their fastening and the soldiers march away.

It was not quite dark in the room, for the shutters were open and admitted a ray of moonlight through the window. So I lay still and strained my eyes to discover who my companion might be.

He stood motionless for a time in the place the soldiers had left him. I made out that he was tall and stooping, and exceedingly thin; but his face was in shadow. Presently, as he moved, I heard a chain clank, and knew he was hand-cuffed in the same manner as myself.

Slowly he turned his body, peering into every corner of the room, so that soon he discovered me lying where the moonlight was strongest. He gave a start, then, but spoke no word; and again an interval of absolute silence ensued.

His strange behavior began to render me uneasy. It is well to know something of a person confined with you in a small room at the dead of night, and I was about to address the fellow when he began stealthily approaching the bed. He might have been three yards distant when I arose to a sitting posture. This caused him to pause, his form well within the streak of light. Resting upon the edge of the bed and facing him, my own features were clearly disclosed, and we examined each other curiously.

I had never seen him before, and I had little pleasure of meeting him then. He appeared to be a man at least fifty years of age, with pallid, sunken cheeks, eyes bright, but shifting in their gaze, and scanty gray locks that now hung disordered over a low forehead. His form was thin and angular, his clothing of mean quality, and his hands, which dangled before him at the ends of the short chain, were large and hardened by toil.

Not a Brazilian, I decided at once; but I could not then determine his probable nationality.

"Likewise a prisoner, senor?" he inquired, in an indistinct, mumbling tone, and with a strong accent.

"Yes," I answered.

"Ah, conspirator. I see; I see!" He nodded his head several times, and then growled sentences that I could not understand.

While I stared at him he turned away again, and with a soft and stealthy tread made the entire circuit of the room, feeling of each piece of furniture it contained, and often pausing for many moments in one spot as if occupied in deep thought.

At last he approached the bed again, dragging after him a chair in which he slowly seated himself opposite me.

"Retain your couch, senor," he muttered. "I shall not disturb you, and it will soon be morning. You may sleep."

But I was now fully awake, and had no intention of sleeping while this strange individual occupied his seat beside me.

"Who are you?" I demanded. "A patriot?"

"Not as you use the term," he answered, at once. "I am Mexican."

"Mexican!" I echoed, surprised. "Do you speak English?"

"Truly, senor," he answered, but his English was as bad as his Portuguese.

"Why are you here and a prisoner?" I asked.

"I had business with Senor de Pintra. I came from afar to see him, but found the soldiers inhabiting his house. I am timid, senor, and suspecting trouble I hid in an out-building, where the soldiers discovered me. Why I should be arrested I do not know. I am not conspirator; I am not even Brazilian. I do not care for your politics whatever. They tell me Miguel de Pintra is dead. Is it true?"

His tone did not seem sincere. But I replied it was true that Dom Miguel was dead.

"Then I should be allowed to depart. But not so. They tell me the great Emperor is here, their Dom Pedro, and he will speak to me in the morning. Is it true?"

This time I detected an anxiety in his voice that told me he had not suspected the Emperor's presence until his arrest.

But I answered that Dom Pedro was then occupying de Pintra's mansion, together with many of his important ministers.

For a time he remained silent, probably considering the matter with care. But he was ill at ease, and shifted continually in his chair.

"You are Americano?" he asked at last.

"Yes," said I.

"I knew, when you ask me for my English. But why does the Emperor arrest an American?"

I smiled; but there was no object in trying to deceive him.

"I was private secretary to Dom Miguel," said I, "and they suspect my late master to have plotted against the Emperor."

He laughed, unpleasantly.

"It is well your master is dead when they make that suspicion," said he; then paused a moment and asked, abruptly, "Did he tell you of the vault?"

I stared at him. A Mexican, not a conspirator, yet aware of the secret vault! It occurred to me that it would be well to keep my own counsel, for a time, at least.

"A vault?" I asked, carelessly, and shook my head.

Again the fellow laughed disagreeably. But my answer seemed to have pleased him.

"He was sly! Ah, he was sly, the dear Senor Miguel!" he chuckled, rocking his thin form back and forth upon the chair. "But never mind. It is nothing. I never pry into secrets, senor. It is not my nature."

I said nothing and another silent fit seized him. Perhaps five minutes had passed before he arose and made a second, stealthy circuit of the room, this time examining the barred window with great care. Then he sighed heavily and came back to his seat.

"What will be your fate, senor?" he asked.

"I shall appeal to our consul at Rio. They must release me," I answered.

"Good, Very good! They must release you. You are no conspirator—a mere secretary, and an American."

I nodded, wishing I might share his confidence. Presently he asked for my name and residence, and I answered him truly.

"I myself am Manuel Pesta, of the City of Mexico. You must not forget the name, senor. Manuel Pesta, the clockmaker."

"I shall not forget," said I, wondering what he could mean. And a moment later he startled me by bending forward and asking in an eager tone:

"Have they searched you?"

"Yes."

"It is my turn soon. This morning."

He leaned back in his chair, closed his eyes, and fell silent again.

For my part I lay back upon the pillow, yet taking care to face him, and so we remained until daylight came and gradually drove the shadows from the little room.

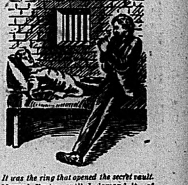
Even then my strange companion did not move. He was indeed a queer mixture of eager activity and absolute self-repression. Another hour passed, and then we heard footsteps approaching down the passageway.

With a start Pesta aroused himself and fixed a searching glance upon my face. Trembling with nervousness he suddenly raised his manacled hands and removed from his mouth a small object that glittered in the morning light.

My heart gave a sudden bound. It was the ring that opened the secret vault!

His own agitation prevented his noting my amazement. Thrusting the ring toward me he whispered, hurriedly:

"Conceal it, quickly, for the love of God! Keep it until I come for it—I, Manuel Pesta—until I demand it of Robert Harcliffe of New Orleans. It may be to-day—it may be many days. But I will come, senor, I—"



It was the ring that opened the secret vault.

The bolts of the door shot back and a squad of soldiers entered. Their sudden appearance barely gave me time to drop the ring into an outside pocket of my coat. As two of the soldiers seized him I noticed that the Mexican was trembling violently; but he arose meekly and submitted to be led from

BEST PROMISSORY NOTE

THAT FOR WHICH CHRIST STANDS THE GUARANTEE.

GRANDEST EVER WRITTEN

"And All These Things Shall Be Added Unto You, If You Seek Me First and Follow Me"—Temporal and Spiritual Blessing That Christ Is Ready to Give All Those Who Follow Him.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 3.—In this sermon the preacher shows the wonderful power that is within the reach of those who accept the invitation and realize the promise in the text, Matt. vi, 33, "And all these things shall be added unto you."

What is a promissory note? "Why," you answer, "it is a written agreement made by one man in the interests of another man." There are many forms of promissory notes, just the same as there are many forms of wills and last testaments, but as a rule the legal form of a promissory note is written thus: "Ninety days after date I promise to pay to the order of Mr. So-and-so $5,000 at the First National Bank of New York city, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Value received." What, I ask, can anybody write a promissory note and get $5,000 on a written agreement like that?" "Oh, no," you answer, laughing. "No man can get money at the bank on a promissory note unless he is known to be a wealthy man or he can put up some property as collateral or unless he is able to get some friend to indorse his note whose name is a sufficient guarantee that this promissory note will be paid. If it was not for this fact every dead beat in town would be flocking to the banks and to the rich men to borrow money, and our banks and capitalists would be bankrupted almost 'n a day." In other words, a promissory note is of value only when it is signed by a name which is a satisfactory guarantee that the note when it comes due will be paid in full.

Well, then, my friends, this promissory note of my text is one of the grandest and best and most wide sweeping notes ever written. The name of the Lord God Almighty is at the botton of it. Christ is the King who stands the guarantee that it shall be paid in full. What a glorious promissory note it is! Christ's name is the most potent and glorious in all history. In the records of the centuries you cannot find one instance where Christ has broken his promises. Now Christ says, "If ye will stop worrying about what you shall eat and drink and about what you shall wear and about the house in which you shall live and if you will seek me first and follow me, all these things will be added unto you." Are you ready to accept this text as a promissory note? If so, let us run over a few of the temporal and spiritual blessings which Christ is ready to give to us if we earnestly and prayerfully follow him.

Christ stands to-day in the first place as the willing deliverer from all temporal anxieties. He comes to us and says, "Friend, I will feed you; I will clothe you; I will house you for to-day." But this promise does not appeal to us very much. Why? Most of us know where to-day's dinners are to come from. But it is the dinner of to-morrow or of next week or of next year that is worrying us. Then Christ says: "I will not only guarantee you a full cupboard, a full wardrobe and a bed in which to sleep to-night, but I will promise you these temporal gifts as long as you live upon earth. I will promise them for you next winter, next year, ten, twenty, fifty years from now, if you are alive. I will promise you all these things if you will only trust me and live for me." Then we look up in wonder and say, "What, Lord, wilt thou take away from me this awful anxiety in reference to the future necessities of life if I trust thee?" Then Christ answers: "I will, I will. Thus I will do for all my desciples who obey me." Then if we are true disciples of Christ we say: "O God, I thank thee for taking this responsibility of the future off my shoulders. I roll my heavy burdens down at thy feet." Are you and I ready to do this to Christ and accept him at his word?

Have not the burdens in reference to the physical necessities of life been awfully hard to carry? During the first half of your business life most of your earnings went into bread and butter and meat and clothes and house rent. I read an address delivered some time ago by one of the most brilliant women of this country. She was making a plea for women to learn how to cook, so that they could reduce the expenses of the kitchen to the minimum. If a wife had to do her own cooking, then she should learn to do it economically. If she had hired servants, then by personal knowledge she should compel her cooks not to waste the food. Then this noted female speaker made this impressive statement: "Women, you sould learn how to do your work in life well, for nearly four-fifths of all an average man's income is spent by his wife in meeting the butcher, the baker, the grocer, the clothier bills and the house rent." Is not that a startling assertion? Yet it is true. For the first fifteen years of your business life practically all of your money was immediately spent to meet the bare physical necessities of your family's existence. No wonder as the money came in so slowly and went out so rapidly the sharp iron plow of care furrowed your face with wrinkles and bleached your black hair into silver and gray.

But the old proverb says, "It is a long lane which has no turning." Though the lane of financial struggle was long, yet at last it turned. It turns at last for almost every one. You cleared off most of your debts—aye, all of them. Your income began to exceed your outgo, although your domestic expenses were enlarging every year. You were investing your money to bring forth its 6 per cent. annually when suddenly the crash came. The old lane had a turn. But, alas, like a boomerang, it turned so completely that it went around in a circle. It brought you to prosperity. Then, again, it flung you into practical bankruptcy. The mine became exhausted, or the real estate boom broke, or the business partner became untrue. I do notk now what it was, but to-day you are perhaps again a poor man. "Oh," you say to yourself, "if I could only be sure that I would be able to meet my temporal wants next year as I am this year!" You can, brother. You can be sure if you wish to be sure. Christ says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you." Cannot you trust him? Will you not to-day roll over all that responsibility upon him? You may have financially failed, but God never fails. He will look after you when you are not able to look after yourself. Will you trust him now?

But food and clothing and house rent mean more to me than the bare necessities of life. They mean more than a mere treadmill existence and a perpetual grind. They mean more than emancipation from poverty and distress. They mean vast and unlimited resources. They are the symbols of great armies of men marshalled together as employes. They represent not only what we shall eat and wear and the houses in which we shall live, but they represent the food and the clothing we sell to others and the land which others rent from us. In other words, they represent power, unlimited and mighty power.

Let me illustrate. I go out upon the hillsides of New Zealand. I see thousands upon thousands of sheep browsing there. I say to the owner of these countless sheep: "For what do you raise those sheep? Why, I can see your flocks everywhere." "I raise them for the wool," he answers. "What do you do with the wool?" "Why, I send that to the English factories. If you were here in shearing time you would see hundreds of tons of that wool cut and shipped as the harvesters press the hay into bales for the market. Then after that wool reaches the factories it is cleaned and scoured and spun out into threads and woven into underwear and turned into coats and vests and pants and dresses and cloaks. Why, that coat you have on to-day is made out of wool. Thousands upon thousands of yards of cloth come from the backs of my sheep every year." "But," I say, "what is the good of raising so many sheep? You and your family can only wear a few dozen yards of cloth annually. Yet here you are raising enough sheep to clothe the whole English army. You certainly are not raising all these sheep for your own use?" "No," he answers, "I am raising all these sheep for power. I am beyond the mere question of my own livelihood. But the more sheep I own the more money I get and the more workmen I employ the more influence I have in the world and the more I am honored and looked up to as an influential capitalist." The great sheep owner of New Zealand pastures his thousands upon thousands of sheep for power. Many flocks are the symbols of man's influence over man. Great harvest fields, great flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, great farms and landed estates are the symbols not only of what we eat and drink and wear, but of unlimited power and influence. Now, when Christ comes to us and says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you," he is practically saying: "Seek first the kingdom of heaven, which is your first and chief concern, and I will take care of your temporal interests. All the wealth and power that it is well for you to have shall be given to you, only strive to do my work and seek to save men and serve me in your daily life."

Because the world at large does not recognize the infinite results of this power that does not prove that this power does not exist. The world has not recognized some of the mightiest men of the ages even in statecraft. The other day I was reading a most interesting article by Hannibal Hamlin on the United States Senate. With almost a century for his retrospect Mr. Hamlin declared that some of the mightiest Senators who influenced the legislation of his time were hardly known outside of their states and the Senatorial walls. Then he mentions some of them, whose names I had scarcely heard of before. There was Samuel S. Phelps of Vermont, whom Daniel Webster declared to be one of the soundest and ablest men he ever knew in public life. There were Senators Maguire and Badger of North Carolina and Senator Dixon H. Lewis of Alabama, whose brain was relatively supposed to be as large as his body, and that body tipped the scales at 500 pounds. These men, wrote Mr. Hamlin, were the great leaders of leaders, yet outside of Senatorial walls the public hardly knew their names. Thus may it be with the power of Christ's disciples. The world at large may not recognize the power of the Holy Spirit which is in us, but the power will be there. Christ will recognize it. Heaven will recognize it. All eternity will recognize it when we are able to bring sinful men and women in touch with Jesus Christ. Oh, ye men and women who long for power, will ye not take this text as its symbol, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you?" That means that the gift of the Holy Spirit can be yours.

But full wardrobes and cupboards and assured homesteads symbolically mean more to me than even power. They represent mental and physical and spiritual development. They represent in one sense freedom from care. In the next sense they represent growth, expansion, increased dome of forehead, healthful lungs, steady heartbeat. They represent all that is best and noblest in the physical and mental and spiritual domain. I cannot press home my thought better than by drawing two or three verbal pictures.

It is early morning, still almost dark, near Scranton, the queen city of the mining regions of Pennsylvania. In a little cabin a miner and his family are taking a hurried breakfast. At half-past 7 you can see the long lines of working people heading for the mines and the breakers. "Why are you taking your two boys along with you, Mr. Miner?" you ask. "It is too early for school yet. These boys are pale and thin. They do not get enough sunlight. You must not let them study so hard." "Study hard! Sunlight!" answers the miner. "These boys of mine do not go to school. They are earning their living the same as I am. We have a large family in this hut, and every one who can must go out and help to earn the food they eat, the clothing they wear and help pay the house rent." "What! Do these boys work for a livelihood? Why, one of them is so small his dinner pail almost touches the ground as he carries it along!" "Yes they work. All boys in miners' huts are compelled to work for their living." I go into the breaker, and there I find hundreds of little boys all crouched up, picking out the good coal as it passes along by their side. The air is unhealthy. It is laying the foundations of the "miner's asthma." The hours are long and tiresome. The "breaker boys," who should now be at school and who would make fine men if it were not for the money question, are being stunted in their growth. Ah, the pity of it! Do you not see how the food question, the clothing question, the house rent question, can be an accursed bulwark against physical, mental, moral and spiritual development?

How often have we heard this statement made by men and women: "Oh, how I wish this daily bread question was not holding me in its vise. I know I am growing to look like my typewriter, or my yardstick, or my kitchen stove or my sewing table. How I would love to travel and see the wonders of the world. How I would love to make the great thoughts of the great books speak to me. How I would love to develop my painting talent or my musical talent or my natural history talent. But just as I was about to enter college father died. Mother was left penniless. Then I had to go to work to become a mere bread earning, clothing earning and house rent earning machine." Grasp you not the symbol? With the cupboard and wardrobe and house renting question anxieties eliminated from your life, do you not see how in Christ you can grow and grow and expand and come to the full physical and mental and spiritual and moral development for which God intended you?

Let us bring this lesson a little nearer home. For thirty years you have consecrated your life to money making. At first you said you had to do it to make a living. Now you do it because your mercenary habits have the mastery of you. You save every penny you can. You are a miser. Your face shows it. Your mind, your body, your whole life is warped. You cannot enjoy a picture gallery. Music is to you a perfect bore. The only columns you love to read are the stock market columns. You are a mere money making machine. Now, compare your developed life to that of a man like Dwight L. Moody. He had all the capabilities of financial success. He had them in greater measure than you had. But one day he turned his back upon the store and went and knelt in his bedroom and said: "Lord, I give my life up to thee. I shall follow thee and thee alone. Thy will is to be my will." Was he not developed? Was he not developed in a better way than by cringing before the shrines of Midas' golden image?

Lastly, the struggle for the necessities of life represents for some of us the great barriers between us and the sweet scented gardens of happiness. It is nearly always represented with the workingman's overalls cast aside. Inevitably we picture that time in the dim future when we have amassed enough money to retire from business. Then we will buy a home in some suburban town; then we will have this large home always opened to our friends and our dear ones; then we will expect the children and the grandchildren to come and visit us and stay as long as they can. Oh, yes; food and clothes and a free homestead represent not only a peaceful old age, but a happy youth, a happy manhood. And why should not this be so? Can you find any life happier than the Christian life? Can you find any exhilaration and joy more glorious and transcendent than that of serving Christ? If you and I want true happiness we do not have to seek it in a suburban villa. We truly can find it in Jesus. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all this happiness will be added unto you."

We should be ready to seek this divine happiness at any cost, as was Dr. Ken, who afterward became the bishop of Bath and Wells. Dr. Ken at the time was living in Winchester. To that town came the licentious Charles II. of England, with his sinful court. In this court he brought along the notorious and yet beautiful Rahab, Nell Gwyn. The King bade her occupy the village rectory while he was there. In reply Dr. Ken said, "Never shall a person of the character of Nell Gwyn lodge under my roof." The court was horrified. The church leaders declared that "this Episcopalian priest had signed his ecclesiastical death warrant." But a short time after the bishopric of Bath and Wells became vacant The English Premier had a long list of prominent clergymen which he presented to the King for the appointment. Charles brushed these names aside as he said: "No, none of them shall have it. What is the name of that little man at Winchester who would not let Nell Gwyn lodge in his house? Well, Dr. Ken shall have it. I have resolved that any man who could be as true to God as he should have the next bishopric which fell vacant if it had been Canterbury itself." So as Dr. Ken won his promotion by his willingness to commit ecclesiastical suicide for right's sake God promotes us when we are willing to surrender all for him.

If we will first seek him and his righteousness he promises all things. Yea, all good things will be added unto us. Then we shall have the temporal necessities supplied. Then we shall have the Holy Spirit's power. Then we shall have true mental, physical, moral and spiritual development. Then we shall have the peace which passeth all understanding. Then we shall have heaven this side of the grave and heaven beyond. Anxious men and women, will you seek Christ and his righteousness and have all these things added unto you?

Solder For Aluminium.

A solder for aluminium has been invented, says Consul Atwell of Roubaix, by Fernand Hecht, a mechanic of that city. With a soldering iron he can join together two pieces of the metal or join aluminium to copper, brass or iron. The invention is simple, no acids or salts being used.

That Ten Acre Lot

By Donald Allen

Copyright, 1906, by K. A. Whitehead

Jed Wheeler, aged forty and a bachelor, was as well liked as any person in the village of Flint. He was neighborly, kind hearted and always willing to do for others.

Jed's good qualities were in a way his enemies. He was lazy, and, added to his laziness, he had a mania for trading. He would trade horses, dogs, guns, watches, overcoat or anything else, and it so happened that the other fellow always got the best of the bargain.

He had been left quite a little fortune by his grandmother, but in the course of five years he had sold at a loss or traded with sharpers until all that was left to him was a ten acre lot lying just outside the village limits. It was as fine a meadow as could be found in the county, and Jed was hanging on to that until some lightning rod man should come along and trade him a farm on top the Rocky mountains when he fell in love.

Jim Thomas, the carpenter, had died three years before and left a level headed, economical widow behind him. She was an old schoolmate of Jed's, and he had seen her almost every day for twenty-five years, and until the spirit of love bubbled up he had simply regarded her as he looked upon all other women.

He was sitting on the grocery steps one day whittling when his knife slipped and cut his finger. The Widow Thomas was just entering the store for half a dozen eggs when the accident occurred, and she pulled out her handkerchief and bound up the bleeding finger. It was only a trifle, but somehow it touched the heart of the old bachelor, and three days later he called on the widow.

"Martha," he began, "I've got tired of sloshing around alone and am going to get married."

"For the land's sake!" she exclaimed.

"That is, if the woman I want will have me."

"Who is it?"

"You."

"Now, Jed, don't come around here with any of your nonsense," she said. "You are a good natured man, but you are lazy. You think you've got brains, but everybody beats you. It would drive me crazy to have such a husband."

"I could and would reform. If I had any one to peck at me I'd go to work."

"I haven't time to be poking up a husband. It's hard to teach old dogs new tricks. Thank ye for the honor, Jed, but I guess we won't do any marrying."

Jed was crushed for three days, during which time a windmill man came along and offered to trade him 5,000 acres of desert land in Arizona for his meadow and explained that he could raise 10,000 rattlesnakes to the acre on the sandy soil and sell the oil for $5 a gallon to grease the feet of babies with.

If Jed had been in his normal condition he would have closed with the offer at once, but as he was in the throes of hopeless love he astonished the town by turning the windmill man down. Two days later he went back to the widow and said:

"Martha, I had a dream about Jim last night. I dreamed that I met him in front of the blacksmith shop and that we shook hands and he said he hoped I'd marry you."

"Oh, you've come about that, have you?" she asked.

"I have. I'm a miserable man."

"Have you tried catnip tea?"

"Catnip tea? Great heavens! What ails me is love, and if the Mississippi river was composed of catnip tea it couldn't cure me. Martha, if you won't promise to have me I can't live a week longer."

"Nonsense. I'm busy with my ironing, and you run along."

Jed was now so broken up that everybody began to notice and comment on it, but when questioned he simply shook his head and intimated that he was not long for this sinful world. He got up energy enough, however, to contract to get out a thousand ties for a suburban electric line, and, hoping this might work in his favor, he paid another visit to the widow and told her of it.

"Now that you see I am going to work, can't you say yes?" he asked in conclusion.

"Jed, what do you come bothering for?" she asked.

"Because I love you."

"Don't be silly. I'm making mince pies today and haven't time to argue."

Jed went away, determined to throw himself into the mill pond, but when he reached the bank he met a stranger who had been poking around the village for a couple of days without telling any one his business. He introduced himself and said that he thought some of establishing an orphan asylum if he could find a site to suit. In this way he brought the talk around to Jed's meadow. The value of the land as it lay was $100 an acre, though Jed had never had a cash offer for it.

The stranger didn't exhibit too great interest in the matter. He said he'd think the matter over and perhaps make an offer. He had no mountains in Idaho and no lakes in Europe to trade, but would be prepared to pay cash. A day later, while still sauntering around, he met Jed and said that he could have $1,000 for the land as soon as the deed was made out. The lovelorn bachelor had started for the office of the village lawyer to have the deed made out when he met the Widow Thomas. She noticed his excitement and asked the cause, and, when he had told her she said:

"Look here, Jed, don't you take too much stock in the orphan business."

"How do you mean?"

"You're an orphan yourself, and you don't want to let any other orphan get the better of you. Can you get a horse and buggy anywhere for an hour?"

"Of course."

"Then let's drive out to your land and see what kind of a place it would make for the poor orphans."

On the way out Jed recurred to the old subject, saying that he was on his way to drown himself when he met the stranger.

"Come, now," interrupted the widow, "this is straight business and you keep quiet."

When the meadow, which lay along the highway, was reached the widow insisted on walking across it from north to south. The ground looked as level as a floor, but near the center was a sort of sink hole. In rainy weather considerable water stood there, but the earth was now dry.

"Um!" said the widow as she halted and sniffed.

"Do you mean that smell?"

"Yes. Ever notice it before?"

"Once or twice. Smells as if somebody had been breaking rotten eggs around here."

"Get a pole and thrust it into the ground as far as you can."

"Here's one right here, and somebody's been poking. What do you make of it, Martha?"

"Jed, you've asked me to marry you," she said in reply.

"I have, but you don't seem to care whether you drive me to a suicide's grave or not."

"I don't know but I'd be willing to take chances."

"As how?"

"If you'll deed me this land today I'll promise to marry you within a month. I shan't answer any questions. It's yes or no right off."

"Then it's yes, by thunder!" exclaimed Jed as he reached the roadside fence.

The deed was made out before sundown and sent away to the county seat to be recorded. Next day the man who was looking for an asylum site called upon the Widow Thomas. He had scarcely mentioned the poor orphans when she laughed and said:

"Don't let your philanthropy cause you to lose a good thing. The ground up there is full of natural gas, and you know it. It's only twenty miles to pipe it to Chicago. If it's under the meadow, then it's under hundreds of acres around here. Go ahead and make any test you will and then come back with your offer."

A week later he was willing to hand over $10,000 in cash, and when Jed Wheeler had seen the money counted out and the deed passed he exclaimed:

"By thunder, Martha, but that was the only piece of land I had, and when a piano feller comes along and wants to trade me a goose farm for the raising of speckled geese, what am I going to say to him?"

"Refer him to your wife," she answered as she kissed him for the first time.

A Tragedy In Rice.

Here is a story of Scotch sailormen told by the Dundee Advertiser: "The ship's crew had been made up in a hurry, and when they had passed the bar and were beginning to feel a trifle hungry it was discovered that they had no cook. So the old man asked Geordie to try his hand at the job, and Geordie scratched his head and rubbed his chin and said he would do his best. Next morning he consulted Jack about breakfast. 'Oh,' said Jack, 'rice will do!' 'Will it, d'ye think?' said Geordie. 'Noo, about how much shall I cook?' 'Let's see,' replied Jack. 'There's fourteen of us with the old man. I should say a bucketful would be plenty.' 'I doot but it will,' said Geordie and went off to the galley. He got a bucketful of rice and put it in a large pot, and when it began to boil it likewise began to swell. So he baled out a portion into another pot, and that also did likewise. Then he baled out of both pots into other pots until all his pots were full. Still it swelled, and Geordie became alarmed. So he put on all the lids and lashed them tightly down. Then he went forth and locked the door and stood against the bulwarks watching it. Soon the skipper came along and made inquiries regarding breakfast. 'Whist, man!' replied Geordie softly. 'I'm cooking rice, and I don't know the minit it will burst the door.'"

Origin of "Feather In His Cap."

"A feather in his cap," signifying honor and distinction, arose from a custom which was common among the Syrians and perpetuated to this day among the various semicivilized people of adding a new feather to the headgear for every enemy slain. In the days of chivalry the embryo knight received his cocque in a featherless condition, and then won his plumes as he had won his spurs. In a manuscript written by Richard Hansard in 1588 and carefully preserved in the British museum is mentioned an ancient Hungarian custom, that of allowing no man to wear a feather in his cap who had not killed a Turk. The Hungarians had a law, which was in vogue as late as 1612, which allowed warriors to add a feather to their headdress collection "every time the claimant could prove that he had succored a starving Hungarian or had killed an ablebodied Turk or other Moslem." These old customs are now obsolete, but it is interesting to know that there were once such laws upon the statute books of nations thought to be civilized.

WHIRLIGIG OF FORTUNE

HOW THE MIGHTY GO DOWN AND THE WEAK GO UP.

"Bluest Blood" and the Longest Descents in England Are Among the Great Middle Class—A Plantagenet Who Was Engaged in Cobbling—A Butcher and a Toll-Gatherer Entitled to Quarter the Royal Arms.

It is a fact well known to all students of family history, said a genealogical expert to a writer for London Tit-Bits, that, if you want to find the "bluest blood" and the longest descents, you must go, not to the peerage, but to the great middle classes, and even lower, and that many a proud wearer of a duke's or an earl's coronet to-day has a pedigree which will not compare for distinction with that of some of his tradesmen or tenants. Yes, I know this is a surprising statement, but it is a sober statement of the truth.

There are very few of our present peers who can trace their descent from the great nobles of the days of chivalry or earlier. The founder of one line of marquesses was an innkeeper; of a line of earls a grazier, and so on, and many of the greatest aristocrats of our time owe their rank and wealth to the enterprise and luck of city apprentices. To quote Burke:

"Let us look back only as far as the year 1637, and we shall find the great-grandson of Margaret Plantagenet, herself the daughter and heiress of George, Duke of Clarence, following the cobbler's craft at Newport, a little town in Shropshire. Nor is this the only branch from the tree of royalty that has dwarfed and withered.

"If we were closely to investigate the fortunes of the many inheritors of the royal arms, it would soon be shown that 'the aspiring blood of Lancaster' flows through very humble veins. Among the lineal descendants of Edward of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, sixth son of Edward I., King of England, entitled to quarter the royal arms, occur a butcher and a toll-gatherer—the first a Mr. Joseph Smart of Halesowen, the latter a Mr. George Wilmot, keeper of the turnpike gate at Cooper's Bank, near Dudley.

"Then again, among the descendants of Thomas Plantagenet, Duke of Gloucester, fifth son of Edward III., we discover Mr. Stephen James Penny, the late sexton of St. George's, Hanover Square—a strange descent from the sword and sceptre to the spake and pickaxe!"

The last head of the great Scottish house of Lindsay and, de jure Earl of Crawford, died in 1744 in the capacity of ostler in an inn at Kinkwall in the Orkneys, and in four generations the descendants of Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley (the head of one of the oldest and most distinguished families in England) and his wife, daughter of the great Protector Somerset, ended as obscure London tradesmen—drapers and oil men outside the city gates.

Sir Thomas Convers, the head of a family which had held vast estates, owned castles and enjoyed high rank in the north of England almost from the days of the Conquest, died a pauper in a Durham workhouse. A grandson of Oliver Cromwell and a kinsman of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, served behind the counter in a Snow Hill shop, while one of his nieces ended her days in a workhouse, and of his great-nieces one married a butcher's son and the other a Cambridgeshire shoemaker.

Among peasants and laborers, farmers and small tradesmen are many descendants of the great feudal houses of Scrope and Greystoke, Neville and D'Arcy, and many another noble stock who can claim kinship with our bluest blooded peers and royal descents galore, while in the pedigree of the Duke of Northumberland figure farmers and heberdashers, husbandmen and paper-stainers.

ORIGIN OF UNION JACK.

British National Emblem Dates Back to Days of James.

In the fourteenth century the St. George's ensign was the accepted emblem of England, and so remained till the union with Scotland. It then became necessary to design a flag that would be emblematic of both countries.

This was done by combining the St. George's ensign with the ensign of St. Andrew, the cross of St. George lying over the other. It is the ordination of that device that Mr. Macdermott refers to.

King James I. was on the throne at the time, and on April 12, 1606, he issued such a proclamation ordaining the use of the new flag. The national emblem remained unchanged then for nearly 200 years, or until the union with Ireland on Jan. 1, 1801.

In commemoration of the latter event a third cross was incorporated with the other two in the design. The third cross is popularly called St. Patrick's cross, but this is incorrect. It is on the flag, however, to symbolize the presence of Ireland in the United Kingdom, and the flag as established in 1801 remains unchanged to-day.

Considerable speculation exists concerning the origin and significance of the term "Union Jack." The first word, of course, is obvious, but there has been a deal of learned disputation about the other. Some persons have held that "Jack" came from the nautical term, Jack-sprit, others from the word jacket, originally a Norman word, denoting the tunic worn over the chain armor, and that eventually became identified with heraldic designs.

The weight of authority, however, derives the word from the name of the King in whose reign the first union was consummated. James in French is Jacques. The union flag of King Jacques would easily become "Jacques' Union," or "Union Jacque," and so eventually Union Jack.

AFRICAN LIONS' TOLL.

Have Killed Hundred Laborers on Railway Line in Uganda.

At Simba, on the new Uganda railway, in Africa, lions killed 100 laborers while the road was being put through. Capt. Chauncey Stegand of the British army, killed three lions there one night last August, shooting from a platform under the water tank, for the lions had a habit of coming there to drink the drippings. The account runs:

"Nothing occurred up to 10 o'clock. Then the watcher heard a beast coming behind him, which proved to be a lioness. She came up, paused under the platform, and the captain heard the lapping of water beneath him. He moved to get a sight of her and made a noise in turning. The lioness made a side jump of about five yards and smelt the ground and listened. She thus exposed her side, and the captain fired two shots. The first shot hit her in the neck, the second in the heart. She gathered herself up like a horse about to buck and then bolted blindly toward the track, ran on it for about ten yards and fell. Then the captain heard the noise of two lions crashing through the high grass. One came out first and went up to the dead lioness and smelt the body and scratched at it. In a minute or two the other lion came out of the grass. Both together scratched the body, when they realized that she was dead, and both lay down for some time by the body, and then got up and roared, then lay down again, and again rose and roared, evidently performing a kind of wake or funeral service, with dirge.

"The captain fired at one and struck his jaw and the bullet glanced off his shoulder. He tumbled over on his head. The captain fired a second shot and hit him just behind the heart. The beast spun round like a teetotum, then rushed into the tall grass out of sight. The second lion Capt. Stegand shot through the heart.

"Capt. Stegand waited on the platform, hearing the wounded lion breathing and moaning in the high grass. About two o'clock the people of the station came out. The captain gave his orderly his spare rifle and then walked to the edge of the tall grass, when the animal bolted out with a roar and sprang at the captain, who shot him in the air. The beast fell upon him and seized his left arm in his teeth. The man managed to turn and strike the lion with his clinched right fist in the neck. The orderly yelled. The lion let go his hold and disappeared in the grass, lying there all night. He was despatched in the morning."

"RULES OF CIVILITY."

Good Breeding As It Was Taught in the Good Old Days.

The author of a quaint little book published in England in the year 1685, though manifestly of French origin, defines civility as "a science that teaches us to dispose of our words and actions in their proper and just places." With this definition, based, as he honestly confesses it to be, upon the experience of the ancients, no one will feel disposed to quarrel. It is only when we come to examine the fruits of this philosophy that we feel tempted to enter a mild protest. Hear, for instance, the funny way in which the author of "The Rules of Civility" warns his contemporaries against making too abrupt an entry into the presence of a great person. Rule 2 says: "At the door of his chamber or closet it would be rude to knock. We are only to scratch, and when in a king's or a prince's lodgings our name is demanded by any of the officers we must give him our surnames only without the addition of master.

Apropos of ladies, the author of "The Rules of Civility" tells us that "it is not becoming of a person of quality when in the company of ladies to handle them roughly, to kiss them by surprise, to pull off their hoods, to snatch away their handkerchiefs, to rob them of their ribbands and put them into his hat, to force their letters or books from them or to look into their papers," etc.

With regard to the subject "what we are to observe at the table" our author has many amusing things to say. "If a person of quality," says he, "desires you to help him with anything that is to be carved with a spoon you must by no means make use of your own spoon if you have eaten anything with it," but call for another, "unless he sends his own spoon along with his plate, where there will be no occasion for yours." "If we eat out of the dish we must have a care of putting in our spoons before our superiors or of eating out of any other part of the dish than that which is directly before us." "Having served yourself with your spoon, you must remember to wipe it, and indeed as often as you use it, for some are so nice that they will not eat potage or anything of that nature in which you put your spoon unwiped after you have put it into your mouth."—St. James' Gazette.

The Words We Use.

Our language, like our bodies, is constantly undergoing change, says The Liverpool Daily Post. New words are being added yearly, and at a greater rate than that at which words are becoming obsolete. At the same time the average man is never likely to raise his ordinary talking vocabulary above about 4,000 words, and that is ample for every-day use. The average well-educated man uses about 3,500 different words. Accurate reasoners, who avoid using vague or general definitions and expressions rise to as many as 8,000. Very few, and these few very eloquent, use as many as 10,000. Yet one dictionary contains as many as 250,000 words. Skeat's Etymological Dictionary, which is limited to primary words, treats of only 13,000. Shakespeare is the writer of greatest wealth of expression known, and he uses 15,000 different words; Milton only 8,000; and the translators of the Old Testament (Authorized Version) but 5,642.

New Ailment Needed.

Just at present a novel ailment is much wanted. Appendicitis is becoming demode; many people recover miraculously from it without an operation who a year ago would have been content with nothing less than Sir Frederick Treves and a nursing home. There has been a slight attempt to introduce Platonic melancholia, but it is neither contagious nor has a thrill of fatality.—Ladies' Pictorial, London.

PAST AND PRESENT SOLDIERS AT CHURCH.

INSPIRING SERVICE AT BRIDGE ST. YESTERDAY MORNING — GRAND SERMON BY THE PASTOR—NOTES OF THE PARADE—OTHER CHURCH SERVICES.

Then steadily, shoulder to shoulder
Steadily, blade by blade,
Ready and strong, marching along
Like the Boys of the Old Brigade.

It was an inspiring scene on the streets yesterday morning, when the members of the local Veterans' Association, headed by the Bugle Band and escorted by the Fifteenth Regiment and No. 1 Company of the Forty-ninth, marched to Bridge St. Church. Exactly forty years ago the old boys had started on a different errand—but that, as our old friend, the author of "The Absent-Minded Beggar," would say, is "another story." Two veterans of 1837 were in the Veterans' ranks yesterday; Messrs. A. T. Petrie, and William Blaind, the "Old Sergeant-Major." Old Mr. Petrie is rather feeble, and was urged not to attempt the march, but no. "I'll march with the old boys once more before I die," he said. Good old Allan! Time was when all of the Veterans would have jauntily kept step with the swinging martial music, but forty years, alas! is a long time. Some of the Old Boys lagged a bit yesterday. The spirit was as willing as of yore, but the flesh was weak, and that explains why a few of the Veterans did not square their shoulders and march away so jauntily as the majority did. Ah! me. What a sly rogue is Time! He steals away men's suppleness and powders their hair, and pushes them aside with the stern dictum, "Youth must be served." But there's one thing old Time cannot do. He cannot blot out the memory of gallant deeds, deeds of sacrifice and self-denial, and that is why, yesterday morning, those who had relatives among the Veterans, and everybody who admires manliness and patriotism, felt their pulses throb with pride as they realized that, though few in numbers to-day, the white-haired old chaps are honored and beloved for the chances they took, the hardships they suffered, and the cheerful gallantry they displayed forty years agone. As one sat in the gallery of Bridge St. Church and looked down on the Veterans, in the front of the centre aisle, with their grey heads, many, alas! showing that they had not used Herpicide, he could not help wondering what thoughts were running through the minds of those old boys yesterday morning, as they sat together, in God's House to celebrate happenings of forty years ago! It was a varied and inspiring scene. The pulpit draped with Union Jacks, the uniforms of the military, the large congregation—no wonder the eloquent preacher, in beginning his sermon, said it was "a most memorable occasion!"

But to begin at the beginning. The parade left the market square at a few minutes before 11, and moved off in the following order:

Bugle Band
Veterans
Regimental Band
Fifteenth Regiment.
No. 1 Co., Forty-ninth.

Lieut.-Col. Halliwell commanded the Fifteenth, and Lieut.-Col. Orr the Forty-ninth detachment. Lt.-Col. Ponton, R.M.R., as usual, turned out with his old corps, the Fifteenth.

The marching music furnished by both bands was excellent, and the Regimental Band handled the sacred marches in good style.

The musical portions of the service were very pleasing. The choir's anthem was the "Jubilate Deo," or 100th Psalm; the Boys' choir sang "We are on the Lord's Side," and Mr. James Dyer rendered, with excellent taste and expression, "Christ Doth Understand."

The organist, Mr. V. P. Hunt, played in his usual finished style, and his voluntaries were much enjoyed.

Rev. Mr. Wilson's sermon was an ideal discourse. No one who heard it could help being benefitted. Practical illustration, beautiful imagery, apt quotation and striking simile abounded and went hand in hand. His text was Phil. 3; 20:

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ."

Forty years ago, the preacher said, the Sunday sun dawned on a day most memorable to Belleville, and to-day, after the lapse of time, the feeling was, to him, almost overwhelming. Hundreds of Belleville's sons had gone forth to face a brutal foe. The preacher then related the incidents of the Fenian raid. Enthusiasm ran high in this city when the volunteers went away. And why not? Why should not the men of Belleville go forth to defend Canada, when in their veins ran the blood of the United Empire Loyalists, and when they had imbibed patriotism with the milk of their mothers? The Intelligencer on Saturday had beautifully expressed the thought: "Many of the Boys of the Old Brigade have answered their last roll call," but many, thank God, have survived to share the nation's prosperity. The riches of a nation, the preacher eloquently said, consisted in victories won in battles for the right, and to-day he welcomed not only the Veterans, but all who wore the King's uniform. The citizen soldier, who today went about his business, and to-morrow, perhaps, stood shoulder to shoulder with regular soldiers, was a man worthy of respect and remembrance. It was to him, Rev. Mr. Wilson said, a most remarkable thing how a country so sparsely populated as Canada had in the past, thrown back invading forces. His heart was proud when he remembered how, recently, Lord Roberts had praised the soldiers of Canada who fought in South Africa, and had said that only the surrender of Cronje had prevented the men of the First Contingent from being the first in the Boer trenches at Paardeberg. We all deplored war, but nations, like men, must live, and everybody must respect men who are ready to fight and, if need be, die for their country. We must be able to defend our shores and, if need be, other parts of the Empire. There were two leading Anglo-Saxon characteristics — reverence for God and love of country. Whatever faults the Anglo-Saxon had, he had those virtues—he reverenced his God and loved his country. After the battle of Agincourt, King Henry and his army had knelt and thanked God for the victory, and had used the same chant as the choir in this morning's service. Nelson at Trafalgar, White at Ladysmith, all had put their trust in the Lord. Britain stood for great principles, and to those principles her people were loyal. The U. E. Loyalists wanted freedom, and they followed the flag of Britain because they knew that under its folds they would find it. It was not the flag itself, but what it stood for, that made men cheer and fight and, if need be, die.

'Tis only an old bit of bunting
'Tis only an old faded rag

But men would as cheerfully lay down their lives for the flag to-day as they had done in the past. Speaking of the Fenian raid the preacher said that it was no wonder Canadians resented the action of the United States at that time, for the Fenians were publicly aided and abetted. The avowed object of the raid was to free Ireland, but the real object was rapine, plunder and murder. In 24 hours thousands of loyal men were under arms to repel the invaders, and the Fenians found that the conquest of Canada was as difficult in 1866 as the United States had found it in 1774 and 1812. Seven gallant men had lost their lives, but the glow of patriotism kindled in 1866 had never gone out and Confederation had speedily followed. And what a glorious country those gallant men defended! Truly we could say, "God hath not so favored any nation." No man could to-day look around him and not feel thankful for the keen foresight and supreme confidence of the men who, in early days, had laid the foundation for Canada's glories of to-day. The eyes of the world are now turned on Canada. Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras, had truly called Canada the "Bread basket of the world." We loved this land because of its richness and its vastness, but also because it was the home of our forefathers, whose proudest boast had been:

"A British subject I was born;
A British subject I will die."

Canada was a land of unparalleled resources, but the great question was, What will Canada do for Christianity? Shall this great land, in the future, when its population is a hundred millions, as it surely will be, be British and Christian, or shall licentiousness, sin and Sabbath desecration stalk abroad? Will this country be for the glory of God and the best interests of humanity? That was the question all men must ask themselves to-day, and if they desired it to be so they must help make it so. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to a people." Imperialism was now in the minds of all the colonies. In the words of Kipling, Canada had set the example.

"But I abide in my mother's house,
Said Our Lady of the Snows."

And that sentiment was re-echoed by the 48 colonies of the British Empire. Speaking of the honored dead who had fallen in the fight of 40 years ago, the preacher said he could find or think of no fitter eulogy for them than the one pronounced by Pericles over the Athenian heroes. After recounting the glories of Athens, the great philosopher had said: "These heroes were worthy to die for Athens." So might they say of the men who had died for Britain: "These heroes were worthy to die for such an Empire." But, though it was noble and great to die for one's country, it was better to live for her. Jesus Christ Himself told us that the best citizenship was in heaven, and St. Paul, the greatest since the days of Jesus Christ, laid down a sound doctrine: "Honor all men; love the brotherhood; fear God; honor the King." The preacher closed with the fervent prayer that the young men of to-day might grow up and be imbued with the spirit of their forefathers.

"God Save the King," sung with magnificent volume, closed one of the most memorable services ever held in Belleville.

The procession reformed and marched around a portion of the east hill, being afterwards dismissed on the market square.

NOTES OF THE DAY.

The artistically arranged, beautiful flags round the pulpit was the work of two veterans' daughters, Mrs. Alexander Ray and Mrs. George McCarthy.

In our issue of Saturday the name of Mr. James Malyea was inadvertently omitted from the surviving members of the 15th Regiment. He answered to the roll call yesterday morning, however, and showed that he was very much alive by marching to and from the church.

In several cases three generations of volunteers were represented in the parade.

Mr. V. Wallace Root's name should have appeared amongst former members of the 16th Regiment, as he is now living here.

The oldest man in the parade was Mr. Allan T. Petrie, 87, the hero of three campaigns—St. Lawrence frontier, 1837; Niagara frontier, 1865, and St. Lawrence frontier, 1866. It went against his grain that he could not as in days of yore, march as far as anyone. He did his best, but scorned a carriage.

A telegram was received from Lt.-Col. E. Harrison, of Ottawa, that he fully purposed being with his old Regiments, the 15th and 49th, but missed the train by a minute.

The campaigns of 1837, 1865, 1866, 1870, 1885 and the South African one had their representatives amongst the Veterans.

Four members of the Grand Trunk Railway Brigade represented a body of men who risked their lives and did good service to their country thereby by running trains night and day along the exposed St. Lawrence frontier, for the destruction of the Grand Trunk Railway at certain points was in the plans of the Fenians.

Holloway Street.

"Life Continuous," was the subject discussed last evening by the pastor, Rev. R H. Leitch. His text was from Job, 14th chapter and 14th verse.

"If a man die shall he live again?"

During the service Miss E. Price sang the solo part in the anthem, "Rock of Ages," and also sang a solo entitled "Hold Thou My Hand."

Bethel Hall.

The subject of prophecy was continued last night. It was shown from Acts 15, that God is not now converting the world, but taking out of it a people for Himself, and that when this is completed, 1st Thess., 4th chapter, will be fulfilled (1st resurrection), afterwards the tribulation spoken of in Matt. 24 and 25th chapter, and prophesied in Revelation 4th to 19th chap., will come on the world, such a time as the world has never seen nor ever will see again, showing the fallacy of the idea that the world is improving. After God deals with it in judgment then, and not till then, will the millennium be ushered in and Christ reign. Meantime the gospel of God's grace is being preached and all who take the place of lost sinners and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ will be saved.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the evening service yesterday the Rector preached the first of a series of sermons on "Divine Propulsion," taking as his text the words,

"Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business."

The sermon was addressed more particularly to the young, and showed that, inasmuch as the Saviour, when a child, put the work of His Father before everything else, so should the children of to-day do so, and would do so if their parents showed them the way. The choir sang a pretty anthem, Mr. A. S. Large taking the solo in good style.

Baptist.

Pastor Emerson preached at both services in the opera house yesterday morning, subject, "Hard Times," text Matt. 6—34. Evening subject, "Who is Jesus Christ?" This was the second address of the series being dealt with by the preacher on the subject of "Questions men are asking," text, Matt. 16—13 — Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? This, said the speaker was the great religious question of to-day, who is Jesus? If Christ were not the Son of God, as some people would have us believe, then our whole religious superstructure would totter and fall. This was a vital question to all conditions of mankind, whether they were religiously inclined or otherwise. The church of Christ has been the most potent factor in existence for the uplifting of all classes of society. It was the means through which all our benevolent institutions had been founded, and Christ Himself was the Great Head of the church, therefore, all these institutions were divine, even as Christ was divine. We see His Divinity in the far-reaching influence of His life, even after the lapse of nearly 20 centuries. What other life has so influenced humanity? What influence is quickening the people, of heathen lands, and bringing out the best in their lives? The influence of the Christ. To whom do we turn in times of sorrow or bereavement but to Him? How awful would be the thought of death but for His presence. The moral necessities of our being demand the existence of the Christ, for only in Him has God perfectly revealed Himself. His friends, his enemies and even He Himself testified to the fact that He was the Son of God and his friends were willing to seal their testimony by laying down their life. Men are saying to-day, Give us the principles of the sermon on the Mount. What influence has kept together the church for 20 centuries, and why is it to-day purer and more spiritual than ever before? and a mightier power than ever in uplifting humanity? What has transformed the lives of the outcast and reprobate and made them good citizens and made their lives pure and holy? The cross of Christ, the only begotten Son of God. In conclusion he urged his hearers to seek this Christ who alone could enrich and ennoble their lives. The choir sang an anthem entitled, "He is Calling."

SHERIFF WIDDIFIELD DEAD.

Due to Second Stroke of Apoplexy He Suffered Recently.

Toronto, June 4.—Dr. Widdifield, sheriff of York County, died suddenly yesterday morning, between the hours of 6 and 9 o'clock. Death occurred at his residence, "Glenbyrne," 178 St. George street, and was due to a stroke of apoplexy, the second he had suffered from.

The late Sheriff Widdifield was well-known throughout York County and Toronto, and he also had an extended acquaintance throughout Ontario. He was born on June 12, 1845, and was appointed sheriff in 1888. Previous to that time he had taken an active interest in politics. He was a candidate for the Legislature for North York in 1875, and carried the riding in the Liberal interest. Mr. Widdifield remained in the Legislature until he resigned to accept the position of sheriff. He was unmarried.

G. T. R. and Its Employes.

Montreal, June 4.—Discussing labor matters, F. H. McGuigan, manager of the Grand Trunk Railway system, says: "Taking the labor situation all around so far as the Grand Trunk is concerned, I think it is not unsatisfactory."

The average wage increase granted the engineers under the arbitration award is a little less than 6 per cent.

BARGAIN BAITED DUPES

Alluring Offers Attracted a Flow of Cash.

Woodstock Man Arrested and Charged With Fraud—Non-Existent "Co-operative Society" Was Successful Through Extensive Advertising—E. Hull & Sons, Nurserymen, St. Catharines, Caused the Arrest.

Woodstock, June 4.—"For sale—sugar 33 lbs, best granulated sugar for one dollar; also everything you eat, wear or use, at wholesale, no matter where you live. Co-operation pays the freight and saves you one-third. Send for list First National Co-operative Society, Woodstock, Ont."

The foregoing advertisement, inserted in various Canadian papers, attracted attention, it would seem from results, all over Canada.

High Constable Boyle, St. Catharines, and Constable Hill of this city went to Beachville and took Arthur Smith of Hillcrest Farm into custody. Saturday morning the prisoner was taken to St. Catharines to answer to a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, with intent to defraud.

The arrest was made at the instigation of E. G. Hull & Sons of St. Catharines, nurserymen, who claim to have sent money to Smith Bros. of Beachville for a shipment of seed potatoes, which was never forwarded.

The arrest led to the uncovering of some strange doings. Circular letters, it is said, have been sent broadcast over the country by means of the mails, advertising "seed potatoes, which sold in the old country in 1903 for $7,000 per stone (14 pounds), collie dogs, imported hogs, strawberry plants" and other things almost as varied and numerous as it is possible to imagine. This circular was directly responsible for the arrest of Arthur Smith.

In addition to the circular, a publication known as The Canadian Co-Operator, was published monthly and sent out, advertising everything "from a needle to an anchor," the choice of goods being as great as is found in the biggest department store in the land. Groceries are given particular attention, and prices are quoted away below those which the manufacturers quote to the wholesalers. Granulated sugar cannot be bought at 33 lbs. for a dollar in carload lots, but the unsuspecting were duped right and left, and money orders, postal notes, registered letters, bank drafts, etc., have been coming to the Woodstock postoffice for months, only to be sent to the dead letter office and returned to the senders.

The First National Co-Operative Society could not be located by the authorities here, and an inspector of the Postoffice Department came here to investigate the society. It was decided, for some reason not known to the local police, not to prosecute the concern.

The "First National" has no office in this city, but mail addressed to the concern found its way into Smith's hands, and he is held responsible.

Chief Zeats has received many communications from people who have been duped, and in some cases the dupes have even come to this city to try to recover their money. The mails were extensively used, and farmers seemed to be the special mark.

Trial on Tuesday.

St. Catharines, June 4.—A. W. Smith of Beachville, charged with fraud, who was arrested at his home by High Constable Boyle at 1 o'clock Saturday morning, appeared before the magistrate and was remanded until Tuesday.

LIFE'S MISERIES.

Death of Former Georgetown Man Due to Business Worry.

Cornwall, June 4.—C. W. Young returned home Saturday from attending the funeral of his brother, Joseph E. Young, Cummerland, B. C., whose remains were interred at the old family home, Georgetown, Ont.

The deceased took his own life at Duluth, Minn., on May 28 in a fit of despondency due to a prolonged case in court causing him to be away from home to the detriment of his affairs at a most critical season in the fruit business, in which he was interested.

The deceased was a son of the late James Young formerly manager of the Toronto Paper Co. at Cornwall, and was born at Georgetown, Ont., 43 years ago. He was for many years treasurer of the Rat Portage Lumber Co. at Kenora, Ont. Since last March he had been treasurer of the Summerland, B. C., Development Co. and incidentally worked a fruit ranch which he owned in that district.

He is survived by his wife, one sister, Mrs. Chambers of Stroud, Eng., and three brothers, C. W. Young, Cornwall; Clarence Young, manager of the Merchants' Bank, Brampton; and R. E. Young, superintendent of railway lands, Interior Department, Ottawa.

Advise Pope to Yield.

Paris, June 4.—All accounts agree that the result of the private convocation of Catholic bishops to advise the Pope in regard to accepting the new laws for the separation of church and state was a substantial majority favorable to the popular and Parliamentary decision. The most reliable version is that the bishops voted to accept the law authorizing public worship associations by a majority of twenty-two out of a total of seventy-four votes.

Arrested in Windsor.

Windsor, June 4.—J. Greenbaum was arrested here charged with stealing in London and 12 other places. Greenbaum went to the warehouse of R. C. Struthers & Co., London, last Thursday, accompanied by a woman, and after leaving there a piece of silk valued at $45 was missing. When arrested Greenbaum had in his possession silks valued at $700 and $800. All the silk found was Canadian.

Henley Entries.

London, June 4.—The foreign entries for the Henley regatta closed Saturday. Besides W. B. West of Philadelphia the only transatlantic competitors are the Argonauts of Toronto.

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION

Breaks Nearly Every Window in the Town of Bracebridge.

Four Cases, Ignited by a Grass Fire, Cause a Terrific Explosion, which Was Heard For Many Miles Distant—Dynamite Was For Blasting Government Road — Fortunately There Was No Loss of Life.

Bracebridge, Muskoka, June 4.—A tremendous explosion occurred at 8 o'clock Saturday evening when several buildings were shattered and many windows throughout the town, especially on the main business street, were broken.

Four cases of dynamite in a building at the wharf were ignited by a fire which burned in the grass on the hill leading to the lake all day. The explosion was terrific. It was heard many miles distant.

The dynamite was for blasting out the Government road leading to the wharf.

Fortunately no one was close enough to the explosion to be injured. The stable of Hugh Anderson was wrecked. Among the buildings which suffered considerably from broken windows were the house of Dr. Williams, the Court House and the Dominion Hotel. Nearly every place of business on Main street was similarly damaged.

At this moment it is impossible to compute the monetary loss, but the number of plate glass fronts that will have to be restored is large.

TERRIBLE FALL TO DEATH.

Laborer Pulled Over Cliff by Machinery and Crushed Beneath It.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 4.—Antonio Forgolone, of No. 748 Nineteenth street, was fatally injured in a fall over the high bank into the gorge below the falls at midnight Saturday night.

Forgolone was in the employ of the Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power and Manufacturing Co. as a driller. He was operating a steam drill on a ledge of rock at the edge of the bank, and in moving his machine it became overbalanced and toppled toward the edge.

Forgolone, in trying to save it, hung on too long and was pulled over the edge with it. The machine and man turned a complete somersault in the descent, and in landing the heavy drill fell upon the unfortunate man, crushing him.

He lived until his companions got him to the top of the gorge and to the hospital.

Six Men Drowned.

North Sydney, June 4.—One of the worst tragedies in the history of Sydney Mines occurred there early Sunday morning when six men lost their lives by drowning off Cranberry Head, where, after leaving a liquor saloon Sunday morning, they conspired to overhaul the lobster traps. The boat which they obtained was a mere shell. On reaching the traps, it is supposed all men leaned over the same side of the boat to pull the tray in, with the result that the frail craft upset, throwing the six occupants into the water. Two of the bodies have been found.

Rev. Mr. Roger Drowned.

Peterboro', June 4.—A telephone message was received here yesterday from Bancroft, stating that Rev. W. M. Roger, who had charge of a mission of the Presbyterian Church at that place had been drowned. He had been fishing. Mr. Roger, who was a graduate of Toronto University and Knox College, was ordained in 1866.

Boy Fatally Hurt.

Ingersoll, June 4.—Chas. Procunier, 13 years old, fell off a horse which he was riding, with another boy. In some way he was thrown to the ground. The horse stepped on his head, which was crushed in. There is practically no hope of recovery.

Killed by Trolley.

Montreal, June 4.—Mangled and torn beneath the wheels of an electric car, little 5-year-old Elizabeth McElperan of No. 6 Oller street, died in the General Hospital on Saturday night. The little girl ran in front of the car. The motorman made strenuous efforts to stop the car.

Accidentally Shot.

St. Thomas, June 4.—F. J. Jennings had a miraculous escape from death Saturday afternoon. Jennings, who conducts a shooting gallery, was standing at the rear end of his gallery when a wealthy farmer came into chat with a friend. He took a gun, fire three shots and was laying the gun down when it accidentally went off, the bullet striking Jennings just above the eye, taking an upward course, coming out of the top of his head and making a serious flesh wound. Jennings is still in a critical condition.

Fatality at Acton.

Acton, June 4.—A fatal accident occurred at the Acton Tanning Co.'s works about noon Saturday. Abraham Stauffer, an employe, was pulling leather out of a drum, when in some way the machinery operating it was put in motion by another employe. Mr. Stauffer was partly in the drum at the time, and the motion hurled him against beams above, crushing him badly about the chest, from which he died about half an hour after. He leaves a widow and one married daughter.

Fatal Dose of Laudanum.

Toronto, June 4.—On Friday laudanum taken to relieve pain caused the death of Mrs. Thomas Burke, an old lady living at 18 Howie avenue. She took the drug while her husband was out and left a note to be awakened when he returned. Burke called on Dr. Cleland, but Mrs. Burke was dead when he arrived.

IN WATER 17 HOURS.

Boat Capsizes and Occupant Covers 30 Miles By Swimming.

Honolulu, June 4.—Through the capsizing of a boat occupied by Edward Devauchelle, a half white, and three native companions off Maui Island last Tuesday, the three natives were drowned.

After swimming for seventeen hours, and covering thirty miles, Devauchelle reached a rock, on which he slept all day Wednesday. On Thursday he took a further swim of two miles and landed at Molokai.

One of the natives accompanied Devauchelle for 15 hours and then sank exhausted.

Nine Killed in Trolley Wreck.

Providence, R. I., June 4.—Nine persons were killed and twenty injured through the overturning of a large trolley car on the Rhode Island Co.'s line at Moore's Corner, East Providence, just after 1 o'clock Saturday morning. Many of the victims of the accident were of English birth and were employed in the British Hosiery Co.'s mill and other textile factories at Thornton.

Engine Through Open Draw.

New York, June 4.—One of the most remarkable railway accidents that ever happened near this city just missed being a disaster at the Pennsylvania Railroad's newest steel drawbridge over the Hackensack River, a few minutes after 2 p.m. Saturday. The St. Louis Express, speeding toward Jersey City, reached the bridge as the draw was opening. The locomotive ran across the draw and fell into the river. Its tender, two drawing-room coaches and a dining car were wrecked on the bridge. Not one of the persons on the train was hurt. The nine passengers who were in the two wrecked drawing-room coaches were transferred to the day coaches and finished the trip with a delay of only a half hour.

FORTY-TWO WERE KILLED.

Result of Mexican and American Race Riot at Cananea.

Bisbee, Arizona, June 4.—Latest advices from Cananea, Mexico, where a race riot raged Friday between Mexicans and Americans, following a strike of the Mexican miners at the Greene Consolidated Copper Mines, says the situation at Cananea last night was normal. The American volunteers, who went across the line at Naco, with Governor Ysabel of Sonora, on Saturday morning, returned to Bisbee yesterday morning. Their services were no longer needed, although their presence there during Saturday before the arrival of Col. Kosterlisky with Mexican rurales, held the situation in check.

The town is now under martial law and Col. Kosterlisky is disarming Americans and Mexicans alike. A telephone message yesterday says that no shots have been fired since Saturday afternoon at 6 o'clock. Col. Kosterlisky and Governor Ysabel, assisted by Gen. Torres, are on the ground, and Col. Greene, chief owner of the Cananea copper mines, makes the statement that the trouble is over.

A conservative estimate of the number killed in the two days' fighting is 36 Mexicans and six Americans.

The trouble arose over the demand of the Mexicans for an increase in wages from $3.50 to $5 per day. The population of Cananea is 23,000, of which 5,000 are Americans.

MOURNED IN TEARS.

Large Crowds Pay Tributes of Respect to Michael Davitt During Journey to the Grave.

Dublin, June 4.—The love and respect in which Michael Davitt was held in Ireland, and the widespread sorrow at his death was amply evidenced by the scenes in the streets here Saturday morning when the body of the "father of the Land League" was removed from the Clarendon street Chapel, where it had lain over night, to Broadstone station for conveyance to the peaceful, country graveyard at Strade, County Mayo.

The business places closed their shutters, the shades were drawn down in the private houses, and the streets were lined by enormous crowds of people, the men doffing their hats as the coffin, which was almost hidden by beautiful floral wreaths, was borne by.

The funeral cortege included many Nationalist members of the House of Commons and clergymen, representatives of every religion and political creed.

John Redmond, John Dillon and other members of the Irish Nationalist party were among the mourners, who closely followed the hearse. While the procession stretched out to enormous proportions another vast crowd awaited the arrival of the body at the station, and on all sides a feeling of the deepest sorrow was apparent among the people.

Numbers of mourners joined the train conveying the body at Mullingar and Athlone. Everywhere along the countryside the people seemed aware of the mission of the train and hats were respectfully lifted in the fields and on the roadsides as it dashed past.

An enormous crowd awaited the arrival of the train at Foxford, and a procession of vehicles nearly a mile long followed by a big gathering of persons drawn from miles around started for Strade, the family burial place of the Davitts, five miles from Foxford.

The ceremony was most impressive. The old graveyard is near the ruins of the western abbeys, and the grave under an ash tree and within sight of the birthplace of the Mr. Davitt. A large body of the peasantry was awaiting at the cemetery and many persons threw wreaths on the coffin when it was lowered into the grave.

When all was over a large crowd lingered, their eyes bedimmed with tears, till after the others had dispersed.

STROUDS

ROMANCE OF A WRECK.

How a Million Dollars Was Saved From the Sea—Mystery That Will Never Be Solved.

To buy a wreck for £350 and subsequently to acquire from it a fortune of nearly £200,000 is a stroke of good luck such as falls to the lot of few men.

This, however, a Melbourne draper, now the Hon. J. G. Alkman, member of the Legislative Council of Victoria, can claim to have done, and the profits from his purchase is not complete yet, for the wreck is still proving a handsome source of revenue.

The romantic story of this great fortune has only just come to light, writes the Melbourne correspondent of The Express, and is told by Mr. Alkman himself.

On a June night two years ago the magnificent P. and O. steamer Australia, which cost £550,000 to build, went ashore at the entrance to Port Philip Bay, a short distance from Melbourne. The vessel herself was subsequently put up to auction, and knocked down to Mr. Alkman for the ridiculous sum of £290. Afterwards the auctioneer offered the cargo left by the underwriters on the wreck, and this Mr. Alkman secured for another £60.

"The low price at which the whole thing had been knocked down was a complete surprise," declares Mr. Alkman. "I had enough money with me to pay a deposit of £2,000.

After much trouble Mr. Alkman succeeded in getting divers to work on the wrecked liner, and then came the first of my pleasant surprises.

"It was not long," he says, "before I had the pleasure of seeing the decks filled with cargo. Looking round at the time, you would have seen all classes of goods—drapery, hardware and electro-plated ware. You would have seen 400-gallon tanks filled with enamel ware, and a complete set of band instruments which realized very good prices. A great part of the cargo we recovered was in the after hold, where it had apparently been overlooked.

"During the preliminary operations one of the greatest surprises was the discovery that some one with a fishing boat was removing something from the steamer, apparently without the aid of any diving gear.

"We determined to make a careful examination of the hull at low water, when, to our surprise, we found a valuable cargo of Muntz metal lying high and dry and quite accessible.

"There were ten tons of it, which were taken out in less than a day, the metal eventually realizing £750. Nine hundred tons of bar iron, hard steel, tool steel, and spar steel were recovered from the wreck, and were sold at an average rate of £10 a ton. I also got 740 tons of galvanized iron and 40 tons of steel during the first operation.

"After six months' operations we left what remained on the boat, with the object of abandoning her, when, in conversation with an engineer, that gentleman mentioned that, counting the condenser and the metal, brass and copper piping, there must have been hundreds of tons of metal on board.

"He stated that he had seen the steamer when it was being built at home, and he was sure that some of the copper pipes would weigh a ton in themselves."

The statements made by the engineer were fully borne out by investigation, and work was immediately resumed.

"During the second operations on the Australia 219 tons of brass, copper and gun metal were recovered, and 1,950 tons of scrap cast iron were obtained from the engine and other castings on board. Five tandem and four Tangye engines and a large quantity of pig iron were also got from the wreck.

"The four propeller blades, which consisted of either phosphor or manganese bronze, and which weighed 14 tons altogether, were taken from the steamer, and realized £1,000 as old metal."

Half the hull of the Australia still remains above the water, and quantities of brass, copper and gun metal have still to be recovered.

It is estimated that Mr. Alkman's profits from the wreck approach £200,000. He has recently bought the Melbourne Coffee Palace, which, with proposed alterations, will cost £100,000 and has also acquired several other well-known businesses.

Why the underwriters never removed the valuable cargo or failed to realize the value of the vessel itself, is a mystery which may never be solved.

How He Earned a Baronetcy.

Sir Astley Paston Cooper, who obtained his otherwise nobly-earned baronetcy in reward for an operation upon George IV., was so nervous when called in to perform it that Lord Liverpool, who, with other Cabinet Ministers, was in attendance in the next room, seizing hold of his trembling hand, said:

"Courage, courage, Cooper! Remember that this operation either makes or breaks you!"

This thought, which you would say was more likely to unnerve than to nerve the great surgeon, is supposed to have braced him up, and he certainly performed the operation with his usual coolness, dexterity, and success.

Sir Astley was probably the most famous surgeon in Europe. On one occasion his signature was received as a passport among the mountains of Biscay by the wild followers of Don Carlos; while on another a young doctor, by showing Sir Astley's signature to his diploma, was at once appointed by the Carlist leader surgeon-in-chief to his army.

The Newest Wash Fabrics
. . . Are Here . . .

We put more enthusiasm and more care into this season's stock of cool summer fabrics than ever before and the result is pleasantly repaying our efforts. There are hundreds of pretty patterns, most of them exclusive, but each and every one we have is here because it was the very prettiest of its kinds we could secure.

Prices are in every instance much lower than usually asked for such exquisite fabrics.

Moliere, Scott and Homer.

"As Moliere never had the heart to draw a jealous woman among all his pictures of men who knew, like himself, the torments of jealousy, so Scott never had the heart to draw a young and beautiful woman who is wicked," writes Andrew Lang. "This ancient familiar source of poignant interest he passes by, out of his great chivalry. There was nothing to prevent him from writing a romance on the passionate, wretched tale of the once beautiful Ulrica in 'Ivanhoe,' a fair traitress driven on the winds of revenge, treachery and parricide. Here was a theme for a 'realistic' novel of England after the conquest, but Scott sketches it lightly as a Thyestean horror in the background. In his work such a piece of 'realism' stands alone, like the story of Phoenix in Homer's work (in the ninth book of the 'Iliad'). Both artists, Scott and Homer, had a sense of reverence for human things. They did not lack the imagination necessary for the portrayal of the evil and terrible, but they did not seek success in that popular region."

Huxley and Lewes.

Here is an anecdote once related by Herbert Spencer—who, by the way, was rather heavy in hand when he undertook to play story teller. Apropos of Huxley's humor he described a dinner of distinguished authors:

Over their cigarettes they fell to discussing their various methods of commencing to write. One said he wrote and wrote, tore up, then wrote again, and so on.

George Lewes, who was present, looked surprised, and then cried out:

"Oh, I'm not like that! I commence to write at once, directly the pen is in my hand. In fact, I boil at a low temperature."

"Indeed," cut in Mr. Huxley, "that is very interesting, for, as you know, to boil at a low temperature implies a vacuum in the upper region."

Lewes himself was the first to lead the shout of laughter which of course greeted this clever repartee.

The Trap Shot.

Trap shooting has made America a land of straight shooters, and no country in the world can compare with the United States in shooting. Gun clubs in America are directly responsible for that reputation which Uncle Sam so proudly bears. By constant practice at inanimate targets the American unconsciously prepares himself for his country's call to arms. Gun clubs are really the outcome of the abundance of live game in America. The average business man loves to tread the woods in search of live game, but usually his time to go on these hunting trips is limited to perhaps once a year, and during the interval he has lost his "shooting eye." He needed practice to keep his eye keyed up properly, and in order to get practice at home during spare moments he organized the gun club, where between hours he could get all the practice he needed—Recreation.

Moated Houses In England.

Helmingham Hall is the seat of Lord Tollemache in Suffolk, about eight miles from Ipswich. The existing drawbridge has been raised every night for the past 300 years, and the present owner does not allow the custom to become obsolete. Another fine example of a moated house is Leeds castle, about three miles southeast of Maidstone, in Kent, which, surrounded by its moat, forms almost a lake crossed by a single bridge. There is a fine moat at Wells, in Somersetshire, where the episcopal palace, an ancient castellated mansion, is surrounded with walls inclosing nearly seven acres of ground. This moat is supplied with water from St. Andrew's well.—London Standard.

Dissipated Elements.

In the disintegration of radium by the giving off of helium the amount of energy set free is 1,000,000,000 great calories for one gram of radium. Now to reconstruct the dissipated elements would require as much energy as was lost in their dissipation, and this explains the hopelessness of their synthesis, as no such amount of energy can be employed. How were these elements first constructed? That is a question for the students. A German physicist, W. Meigen, suggests that the dissipation of elements is an actually irreversible process, like the dissipation of heat.

Ants' Eggs.

Ants' eggs are considered a choice dish in some countries. They are spread upon a slice of bread and butter, and sauces considered excellent are made with them. They are esteemed as a costly food in Siam, within the reach only of well to do people. They are the object of an important trade in some countries of northern Europe, where they are cooked in boiling water and yield a kind of vinegar or formic acid.

Just as Bad.

A clergyman asked the choir leader, "Can't you do something to arouse the interest of the men in the choir?"

"Yes," said the leader. "I could put a widow in it, but then all the women would lose interest."

The custom and fashion of today will be the awkwardness and outrage of tomorrow. So arbitrary are these transient laws.—Dumas.

Honest Liberals Dont Like It.

The carnival of corruption and reckless extravagance, if nothing worse, which is daily being opened up in connection with the doings of the Ottawa Government, is causing even the staunchest friends of the party to turn away in disgust. Things were certainly bad in Mackenzie's time to cause that stalwart old Liberal to write that he had to stand guard over the treasury like a sentinel, to keep professed friends from plundering it, but they are even worse now, when there is seemingly no one to stand honest guard. Young and old Liberals alike are to-day growing restive under the exposures of wrong doing, and what is perhaps worse, the attempts made to suppress the truth thereby leaving so much to the imagination as lurking in the background. At the last meeting of the Young Liberal Club of Toronto, the spirit of dissatisfaction was openly expressed. One speaker said that "Reformers are dissatisfied with the conduct of their party, and hundreds are deserting its ranks." Another suggested a Liberal convention. "Those fellows down at Ottawa want to be looked after sharper," he remarked. "It begins to look as though the grafters and the corporations had got hold of the Liberal Government; they may have to be turned down to cure them. The broken pledges and reprehensible conduct of Hon. G. W. Ross on the temperance question have annihilated his Government and it begins to look as though the leaders of our party at Ottawa are surrounding themselves with as much graft and corruption as they did in Ontario."

These observations showed an appreciation of the dangers which have crept into the party at large. It was the awakened sense of all good citizens, realizing that the time had come for a change, which defeated Mr. Ross. His cup was full to the brim of such political iniquities as shamed even firm friends, and the same feeling is being felt by all right minded men at the doings of the Laurier Government.

When young Liberals talk so broadly and are not afraid of being written out of the "party," the feeling in all ranks must have become one of grave anxiety. What must they think of the state of things in the immigration department when the notorious "hugger" of the West Elgin "machine" refuses to answer vital questions regarding the secret conspiracy in Europe which took over a quarter of a million from the treasury for services which cannot be shown? What are they to think of the Arctic trip, the accounts for supplying which came to six times as much per man as the occasion called for? No wonder the young Liberals fret at such revelations and wonder what next is coming. In a short time they may see a great deal more than has yet come out, when the commission moved by Mr. R. L. Borden gets at work.

Talking of "graft," the following special despatch, published by the London Free Press, is eloquent;

> New York, June 1.—The scandalous news of graft at Ottawa is no news to United States contractors, who have bid for contracts from the Dominion Government. The graft in the Washington of the North is notorious. It even surpasses the men who are accustomed to schemes of graft in the United States, and if it is greater than they have met with in their own land it must be appalling in its proportions and character.
>
> The other day your correspondent smoked an after-dinner cigar in a well known club with four of the leading contractors of this city The conversation drifted to Canada, and by easy stages to Ottawa and the Laurier Administration.
>
> Every contractor present had done business or tried to do business with the Liberal Government, and every one had the same experience.
>
> "You talk about graft in the United States," said one, and his views were backed by the others, "Why it isn't a circumstance to what I found in Ottawa, and that very recently.
>
> "I have tendered for contracts in every country on this continent, but I never faced a fiercer proposition of graft than I did at Ottawa. Graft stands out on Parliament Hill like free silver in Cobalt."
>
> And they were all honorable and reputable men.

The Yankee way appears to be the limit. The Grits in Canada supplied the Canadian South African contingents with dog biscuit ground up and labelled "emergency food," but, though worthless, that was not poisonous. The greed for gain in the United States appears to stifle all considerations of patriotism and humanity.

It is just possible that Mr. Hill's remarks might apply with equal force to industries as well as railroads. The experience of Belleville would seem to bear it out, anyhow.

Owing to a serious break in machinery this morning, The Intelligencer is compelled to crave the indulgence of its readers for a few days. Until repairs are made the paper may be a little late. The courtesy of the proprietors of The Ontario, who allow us to use their press, is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

An Explanation

Belleville, Ont., June 5, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir, — In order to prevent a possible false impression, please permit me to add a word of explanation to an article headed "Bargain Baited Dupes," which appeared in last night's Intelligencer. The article reports the arrest of one A. W. Smith, of Woodstock, for obtaining money under false pretences, and states that the prisoner made his alluring offers through advertisements in various papers, circulars, and by the issue of a monthly publication called the "Canadian Co-operator," which advertised everything from a needle to an anchor. It is in regard to the use of the title "Canadian Co-operator" that the writer wishes to add a word of explanation.

The Canadian Co-operator is the name of a monthly magazine published at Whitby, Ont., since June, 1904, by the Co-operator Publishing Co Mr. W. J. Clokey, of Toronto, is president of the company, and the writer is editor. The magazine has no connection whatever with the A. W. Smith mentioned in your article, and has published no advertisements of his or of the chimerical "First National Co-operative Society." The magazine is an advocate of co-operation in general — co-operative stores, co-operative fruit growers' associations, co-operative banking, etc., —and is not published in the interests of any particular enterprise. Apparently A. W. Smith has been using the title of this magazine for an advertising publication of his own, —of course without asking or obtaining permission from the publishers.

Trusting that this explanation will make clear to your readers the entire lack of connection between the monthly magazine Canadian Co-operator, and the fraudulent operations mentioned in your article, I remain,

Respectfully yours,
J. C. WILLS.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will Be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

MAKING THE FARM WORTH MORE.

Many farms could be improved to sell in the future for from $500 to $1000 more than the present value by making improvements, the expense of which would hardly be felt at all.

Trees in the right place are always a good investment and cost next to nothing but the trouble of planting them. The city buyer is quite captivated to find one or two thrifty elms in front of the homestead, and a number of scattered chestnut, shellbark and sugar maple trees in the pastures; while any buyer, however practical, will pay more for a farm with a promising fruit orchard. Almost anything can be bought to order except full-grown trees, and the farm seeker is aware of the fact.

The selling value of the farm is greatly increased by keeping things in good repair. Begin with the front yard by fencing out the chickens, manuring the grass, and cutting it three or four times a year instead of once. Repair the fences and keep down all straggling bushes. If the buildings are not kept neat and in repair the place always looks run down, and is, therefore, hard to sell.

It has been found when good roads are built that the value of all farms in the section has increased. Hence it will pay for the farmer to agitate for good roads, and to keep the roads on his own farm in good working condition.

In general, the farmer who wishes to increase the value of his property should put himself in the place of the probable buyer, and ask himself what changes would make the place more desirable. It often happens that a small change, like draining a wet spot, or moving an outhouse, or repairing a bridge, will change the whole impression made by the first sight of a place. Indeed, when the work of home improvement is once begun the owner is likely to become so interested that his anxiety to sell at all is much decreased.

THE HORSE.

Breeders' Notes.

For farm work good grade draft or coach horses cannot be excelled and they sell readily, when matured, at good prices.

In deciding what type of horses to raise the farmer should consider the market in which he expects to sell and his opportunities for producing that style.

Punishment is rarely necessary for a horse unless he is vicious. Kindness and patience will accomplish much more than harsh treatment.

The farmer must raise horses that he can sell readily, not trade. Any horse will trade, but every one will not sell.

As a rule geldings will prove unprofitable to keep on the farm. Sell them when matured and either use good brood mares or growing colts to do the farm work.

Breed only from sound mares and to sound stallions is certainly sound advice. Practical breeders have learned from experience that an animal which has become unsound from accident, but whose ancestors were free from hereditary unsoundness, is much less liable to transmit the infirmity from which he or she has suffered than is a sound animal, some of whose ancestors suffered from the same form of unsoundness, which was hereditary. This may seem to a novice like a distinction without a difference, but it is not. The progeny is more liable to inherit the characteristics of the family than of the individual.—Horse Breeder.

After you have tried hot springs, sulphur baths, patent medicines, electricity, etc., bring your case to the Supreme Court of Rheumatism — Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. This is a powerful, penetrating oil, which as its name implies, acts directly on the bone or joint—the lodging seat of rheumatism. If you are troubled with rheumatism, sciatica, lame back or kindred troubles and have not been able to get anything to help you don't get discouraged and make up your mind that nothing can cure you until you have tried Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. It has cured hundreds of cases just as bad as yours. H. S. Brown, of Merrickville, Ont., writes as follows:—

Dear Sirs,—I am free from rheumatism to-day because I used Tuck's Bone Oil. I had rheumatism in my hands and feet and thought at one time that my life was going to be ruined by it. I consulted a doctor and tried various remedies, but while some of them that I took internally made me feel better for a time, none of them took the pain away. After I had suffered for six months or more, doctoring all the time, I was advised one day to try Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. I did and I never can be thankful enough to the man who told me to get it. I had not used a bottle until I was better and before the second one was done my joints were loosened up, the pain was gone and I was well. Tuck's Bone Oil did it. That was six years ago and I have not been bothered since.

H. S. BROWN,
Merrickville.

For all inflammation arising not only from rheumatism, but from colds, croup, bronchitis, quinsy, &c., Tuck's Bone Oil is a sure and speedy cure. Sold by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent by mail prepaid by the Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ontario.

DRAWN POULTRY.

Practically all dressed poultry should be shipped to market undrawn. Most commission men and dealers prefer to handle undrawn stock, claiming that it keeps much better. The basis for this claim is that the incision in a drawn fowl readily admits moulds and germs of different kinds into the body, where they find ideal conditions for rapid multiplication. The cavity is dark, damp, and not easily accessible, and frequently a drawn bird, which outwardly appears all right, is really unfit for food. As it requires considerable time to draw the birds contained in an ordinary shipment, and there is a decided loss in weight as well, stock should be shipped undrawn whenever the market will accept it.

When birds are to be drawn, the operation should be performed immediately after the pin-feathering is finished or after they have become slightly cooled, as it is more difficult after they are thoroughly chilled. A sharp knife is essential, although some dressers prefer to make the necessary incision with curved scissors similar to those used by surgeons. Drawn fowls usually have the head removed also, and this should be done first. Sever the neck close to the head, taking care not to cut the windpipe and gullet, which can be more easily pulled out if left attached to the head. Draw the neck skin back and remove a short section of the bone, thoroughly washing out any blood which may collect. Finally draw the skin forward and tie firmly. Remove the intestines through a small opening, as a large aperture is unsightly as well as unnecessary. Cut carefully through the walls of the abdomen, making the incision entirely around the vent, then hook the first finger into the loops of the intestines and thus pull them out. Usually the heart, liver, lungs and gizzard are left attached in their natural position, as ordinarily the removal of the intestines is considered sufficient. After this has been accomplished the cavity should be thoroughly rinsed to remove all blood and other secretions.

A select private trade often demands that poultry be even more carefully prepared, in which case the giblets should be removed and cleaned. Cut the gallsack from the liver, the blood vessels from the heart, and remove the contents of the gizzard. Cut off the shanks after first removing the sinews which run up through the leg and injures the quality of the "drum stick." To take out these sinews, run a knife blade down the back of the bone of the shank, between it and the sinews, and pull the latter out singly by means of a strong fork or skewer. A still easier way is to have a strong hook fastened to the wall at the proper height. Place the point of the hook under each sinew, which can then be easily drawn out. The bird is now ready for tying up. Replace the giblets in the body cavity, draw the end of the drum sticks down to the "pope's nose," and there tie firmly. Finally fold the wings behind the back. Birds so tied are unusually attractive, always appearing plump and chunky, due to the absence of sprawling legs and wings.

Broilers may be attractively prepared for private trade as follows: Pluck carefully and remove the legs and sinews as above. With a heavy, sharp knife make a cut each side and the entire length of the backbone, severing the ribs. Let these incisions meet in front of the neck and below the vent. This permits the removal of the head, neck, backbone and entire intestinal tract, and the bird opens out flat in most convenient form to be placed upon the broiler. The giblets should be cleaned and should accompany the remainder of the carcass.

PRACTICAL POULTRY POINTS.

Cleanliness is next to godliness in poultry culture as much as in anything else. Clean quarters keep down the lice, prevent sickness and add to the good returns.

Lice soon weaken the strongest fowls, check egg production and make the business unprofitable.

Warm houses, good roofs and clean runs pay for all the attention they require.

Good sharp grit prevents indigestion. A neglected case of indigestion will lead to liver trouble, then the fowls go light and die.

Corn is one of the very best fattening foods and the worst egg-producing grain that can be given. You cannot grow fat and eggs in the same carcass at the same time.

Regularity in feeding, watering and caring for the stock makes the work more easy and successful.

When buying an incubator, avoid the cheap makes and accept only such as are the most generally used by practical poulterers. The same with brooders and brooding systems.

Watch for the first symptoms of a cold. Five drops of tincture aconite in a quart of drinking water will generally effect a cure.

Green cut bone is the best animal food that can be given in winter, but if the fowls have a range in summer they will not need any. Never allow the drinking vessel to be exposed to the sun during hot weather. Put it in the coolest place possible.

THE CHICKENS.

When the chicks are hatched, remove to a good dry coop in a sunny exposure. After twenty-four hours give them a few flakes of rolled oats and grit and provide a dish of clean water and keep it before them at all times. After three or four days they will get tired of the rolled oats, when cracked or small wheat may be given in limited quantities, also fine cracked corn.

Better feed no mash until the chickens are three to four weeks old, when a mash composed of three parts wheat bran, one or two parts cornmeal, one part feed flour and one part of meat scraps, mixed quite dry, may be fed twice daily, morning and the last feed at night. The balance of the ration wheat and cracked corn. In other words, I put them on the same ration as my laying stock.

It is a good plan to keep the mother hen confined in the coop and let the chicks go as far as they wish. In this way I avoid many losses from the chicks being led about through the wet grass. If the hen is in the coop all the time the chicks have a dry place to go when they want to be hovered.

Have board floors in the coops to prevent rats from burrowing in, and at night set a wide board up in front to keep out stragglers.

WHAT'S A GOOD POTATO?

Most people, I suppose, take it for granted that the best potatoes are the ones that contain the most starch. On the contrary, it is the ones that contain the most gluten, because gluten is an albuminous food and starch is much cheaper than albumen.

First comes the skin of the potato. In a new potato it is thin and clear; while a corky skin indicates a mature potato, and one more likely to be mealy.

Second is a thin layer varying from one-eighth of an inch to one-half an inch in thickness. This is the gluten.

Third comes the largest part of the potato—the starch. If this is very dense the potato will be mealy, but if non-uniform the potato will be of poor quality.

Fourth is the very centre of the tuber, which contains little starch and a great deal of water. If this area branches out into the starch the potato will not be a good cooker.—Garden Magazine.

HOME DRESSMAKING.

Here are a few hints which the home dressmaker will appreciate and which, some of them, the professional would do well to store away for use:

To prevent the otherwise inevitable sagging of the circular skirt, hang it up by the binding, or better still, on the form, before the bottom is finished and allow it to remain three or four day or even longer. Then trim it off to the desired length and evenness and you may rest secure in the fact that it will remain a "good hanging skirt."

In sewing a lace frill on the stock don't attempt it German fashion, "over and over." It will stay "over" if you do. Hold it straight with the collar and run it on, then, even though closely gathered, it will stand up as it should.

If sleeves are too long or too full, don't rip them out. First take a tuck or fold in the tops, making them the desired length, and baste. Try on, and if right, then cut off the superfluous material.

Keep a tiny vial of powdered slippery elm in your work basket, and thrust the needle into it occasionally. It helps to make sewing a pleasure.

Make a proper selection of needles. That is, do not attempt to make a coarse needle do fine work nor a very fine needle carry coarse thread. The rule works both ways—wrongly.

Beyond and above these "hints," remember to sit properly and to take a "breathing spell," if only a couple of minutes, whenever there is a feeling of exhaustion.

HORTICULTURAL.

Apples for the North.

The originator of Dudley's winter apple is J. D. Dudley of Castle Hill, a location well up north in the State of Maine. In this latitude only hardy apples are profitable. The season of growth is a little shorter than elsewhere in New England, and a quick bearer is also desirable. Perhaps the favorite variety is the Wealthy. It bears young and in that latitude keeps long. The Dudley Winter somewhat resembles the Wealthy, but Mr. Dudley claims it is an earlier and better seller and keeper. In cultivating the apples on his farm, Mr. Dudley finds it necessary to avoid over-cultivation or too much manuring, both of which practices are liable to force a tender growth not able to withstand the severe winters. A medium growth of sound, healthy wood ripened quite early in the season is found most desirable. The Baldwin is too tender an apple for that locality, and grafts have never been made to live on the Dudley farm longer than three or four years.

A FEW POINTS.

A first-class goods — butter and cheese — can only be made from first class milk; the production of good milk is an important subject. To begin with, it needs a healthy and well-cared-for cow and sanitary yards and premises. As eighty-seven per cent. of milk is water, it is evident that the water supplied to the cows must be pure, and not that of stagnant pools of filthy surroundings. The food needs to be of good quality and abundant. Milk the cows in a good yard, or, better, in a clean shed. If cows are milked in the yard, as is customary in some districts, plenty of straw should be laid down to keep the dust from rising. Banish all wooden pails and things of that nature from the dairy, and have well-tinned utensils, so that fat soaked or rusty implements will not contaminate the milk. Always wash the pails first in cold water, and then thoroughly scald, and turn upside down to dry, where the air can circulate under them. An upright, with side pegs on which to hang the cans and pails, is an excellent arrangement. If the milk is to be run through the separator, pass it through as soon as possible, after leaving the cow, better results being obtained than when it is allowed to stand about and get cold before treatment.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Farm Uses of Tar.

This substance is commonly used as a repellant by dissolving in water and sprinkling the plants with the solution. It is also sometimes smeared in and about the nostrils of sheep to prevent the bot fly from depositing its eggs. Painted on paper bands wrapped around the bases of fruit trees, and renewed before becoming dry, it will entrap the wingless female cankerworm moths in their attempts to ascend the trees for the purpose of depositing eggs. Pine tar is preferable to coal tar, but neither kind should be applied directly to the bark. A prepared grease, known as insect lime, is now generally employed instead of tar.

Is This a "Poultry" Farm.

A parrot ranch is a novel feature near Victoria, Mexico. Runs of wire netting extend over large areas and over the trees, making an immense outdoor apiary. The flock comprises several thousand birds and the more intelligent ones are taught by systematic methods to speak in the various languages demanded by customers. The owner finds by careful selection the intelligence of the birds may be considerably increased. It is asserted that most of the birds have been taught to carry on a dialogue several minutes in length.

A New Wheat Market.

The population of Mexico is reported fast taking up the use of wheat products in preference to corn. Mexican farmers realize this, and wheat growing has received a great impetus in the last few years. With this ever growing demand for wheat, more will be produced every year, but the demand has increased so greatly in the last few years that it does not appear that it can be satisfied by the Mexican supply. Last year's crop was a poor one, and as a result American grain firms have placed many orders in Mexico, and the demand is still increasing.

A Fresh Egg Scheme.

The latest get-rich-quick scheme in poultry is that of a Chicago woman, who started an alleged poultry farm on the lake shore and did an immense business in supplying fresh-laid eggs, the greater part of which, it is estimated, were obtained from regular dealers out of cold storage. As might be anticipated, this scheme quickly came to grief as soon as buyers discovered the fraud.

The Seedless Apple Room.

The seedless, coreless apple scheme is not dead yet, notwithstanding the disagreeable things which have been said about it in the papers. One of the nurseries, it is stated, has just set about three hundred thousand apple trees which are to be grafted next year with the seedless variety.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Instead of cleaning the windows with soap and water try rubbing them with a cloth dipped in a mixture of ammonia and whiting and then polish with a clean chamois. This makes them much brighter than if soap and water are used.

An unusually thrifty mother suggests that when holes in the heels or toes of the children's stockings are too big to darn, a good plan is to cut out the worn parts entirely, then with a crochet needle and some Saxony wool or darning cotton to go round and round the hole, gradually diminishing the number of stitches until the hole is completely filled up.

When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk, or water, is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

It always seems a pity to have to string pictures up on wires or cords. The question is whether it is not more of a pity than to drive small nails into the wall paper. The latter procedure defaces the walls, to be sure, but so do the picture wires deface the walls. Small pictures can be hung on very slender nails, which, when withdrawn, leave a scarcely visible hole. If wires must be used, let them be as fine as possible, and the pictures should be so hung as to rest perfectly flat against the wall. Anything more hideous than a picture titled at an angle of forty-five degrees is unimaginable.

Remove the scratches from varnished furniture by going over them carefully with a camel's hair brush that has been dipped in shellac varnish until they disappear. Nothing should touch the places until they are quite dry.

Have your refrigerator sweet and clean and ready for use by burning in it a small disinfectant—such as a sulphur candle; then leave the doors wide open, allowing it to air thoroughly.

If mothers, when buying new shoes for the children, would adopt the following hint they would find that they would last twice as long and also resist the damp. Procure some boiled linseed oil, pour it onto a large flat dish or tin and allow the shoes to stand in it for about twelve hours, or until the soles are well soaked. This does not, however, apply to brown shoes.

For a dangerous wound made by a rusty nail or a jagged knife, the best remedy is to apply pork rind. It should be changed often for several days, when the poison will be entirely drawn out and there will be no inflammation.

Mustard and horseradish mixed make an excellent relish for cold meats. Mix yellow mustard and add to it an equal quantity of grated horseradish, which has been boiled ten minutes in water. Thin the mixture with a little of this water.

Activity, out-of-door exercise, and early rising, with moderation in diet, seem to be the most important factors of longevity. Few things tend to promote health and vigor more than activity — activity without excitement — an activity which does not wear the body out. The candle ought to burn briskly, and, as a general rule, at both ends, regarding the head or brain as one and the limbs or locomotory agents as the other; but it should not burn too fast.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can re-paper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

He Laughed Last.

A certain lady who wished to have some fun at the expense of an agent who had ofttimes solicited her to insure herself and family, asked him on one occasion if he would insure the cat. The agent, to the astonishment and no small amusement of some friends promptly offered to do so, provided she paid the first premium down. The lady, still thinking to hoax him, expressed her willingness to do so, and placed a shilling on the table. The agent quickly produced a proposal, filled it in and obtained her signature while those present were on the tiptoe of expectancy as to what was to follow.

"Now, madam, with your permission, may I see the cat?"

"Certainly," she replied, at the same time pointing to a glass case which contained the stuffed remains of the poor defunct cat.

A chorus of derisive laughter burst from all present, but to their dismay the agent turned, bowed politely, at the same time picking up the shilling, and exclaimed:

"When that cat dies, madam, kindly call at our office and claim the insurance money. Good morning."—London Telegraph.

The First Stove.

The most important uses of fire were taught by fire itself. As the primitive man stood near the flames of the burning tree and felt their pleasant glow he learned that fire may add to bodily comfort, and when the flames swept through a forest and overtook a deer and baked it he learned that fire might be used to improve the quality of his food. The hint was not lost. He took a burning torch to his cave or hut and kindled him a fire on his floor of earth. His dwelling filled with smoke, but he could endure the discomfort for the sake of the fire's warmth and for the sake of the toothsomeness of the cooked meats. After a time a hole was made in the roof of the hut, and through this hole the smoke passed out. Here was the first stove. The primitive stove was the entire house, the floor was the fireplace and the hole in the roof was the chimney. The word "stove" originally meant "a heated room." So that if we should say that at first people lived in their stoves we would say that which is literally true. —St. Nicholas.

Practical Diagnostic Sign of Death.

Dr. Ott of Lillebonne (through Journal des sciences medicales de Lille) suggests the following practical and simple method of ascertaining whether or not life is present: The point selected is the forearm, which is quickly accessible, is free from hair and is easily exposed. The arm is extended horizontally from the body and the forearm pronated. If the test is made in the open air a cloak is held so as to shield the part from all motion of the atmosphere. The flame of a candle is now directly applied to a spot on the forearm, which is closely watched by the observer. At the end of a few seconds a swelling rapidly forms and bursts. If it contains air or gas the tissues are lifeless. If it contains liquid or exudation life is present.

"Man In the Street."

Emerson was not the first to use this phrase in his "Conduct of Life," which was published in 1860. In the first series of the "Greville Memoirs," under date March 22, 1830, occurs the following passage:

"Then will come the question of a dissolution, which one side affirms will take place directly, and the other that the king will not consent to it, knowing, as 'the man in the street' (as we call him at Newmarket) always does, the greatest secrets of kings and being the confidant of their most hidden thoughts."

It would appear from this that the expression was in common use among racing men in 1830.—Notes and Queries.

The Drama of the Sunset.

We never tire of the drama of sunset. I go forth each afternoon and look into the west a quarter of an hour before sunset with fresh curiosity to see what new picture will be painted there, what new phenomenon exhibited, what new dissolving views. Every day a new picture is painted and framed, held up for half an hour in such lights as the great artist chooses and then withdrawn and the curtain falls. The sun goes down, long the afterglow gives light, the damask curtains glow along the western window, the first star is lit, and I go home.—From Thoreau's "Winter."

Power of Words.

Words have not their import from the natural power of particular combinations of characters or from the real efficacy of certain sounds, but from the consent of those who use them and arbitrarily annex certain ideas to them, which might have signified with equal propriety by any other.—Oliver Cromwell.

Persistence.

The way to reach or to attain to anything is to bend oneself toward it with all one's might, and we approximate it just in proportion to the intensity and the persistency of our effort to attain it.—Success Magazine.

A Hard Cut.

Mrs. Newcast—I am thinking of taking a short holiday and visiting some of the scenes associated with my ancestors. Mrs. De Bleu Blood-Cutting—Oh, but slumming is so horribly out of date nowadays!

Where to Have a Boil.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich, commenting once upon the trials of Job, remarked that the only proper place to have a boil was between "John" and "O'Reilly."

Woman's Rights In Burma.

The Burmese woman must make an excellent wife. A Singapore paper says that her highest ambition is to maintain her husband in lordly idleness and to supply him with abundant funds for cockfighting, bullock cart racing and gambling. And many of the Burmese women do big deals in timber, buying up in advance the "paddy" crops of a whole district, and so on, on a scale that requires big financiering.

"Talking" In England.

English people are not only the worst talkers in the world, but they have, in addition, a natural suspicion of any one who can string half a dozen sentences together without stammering—in fact, to have any degree of fluency of speech lays a man open at once to the charge of not being "sound," while a woman who can talk at all inspires universal terror.

Why They Left.

A comedian appeared in a four act comedy in a western mining town, according to the Buffalo Commercial. At the end of the third act the miners rose in a body, gathered up their belongings and started to depart. The comedian, in dismay, rushed before the curtain. "Gentlemen," he said, "there is another act yet." "Yes; that's why we are going," said the miners.

Won by Failing.

"What books have benefited you most?" the young reporter inquired of the fabulously rich man.

"Law books," the Croesus promptly replied. "My father intended me for a lawyer, but I failed to pass my examination, and now I'm worth fifty millions."

Afternoon Calls.

The afternoon call is a survival of an age when nobody had anything to do except visit friends. The bitter part of the whole sad business is that, unless one pays calls, one does not get asked to dinner.—London Globe.

Progress, the growth of intelligence and power, is the end and boon of liberty, and without this a people may have the name, but want the substance and spirit of freedom.—Channing.

Dying Is Only to Sleep.

The Bishop of London is taken to task by the British Medical Journal for some remarks he recently made professing to describe how it feels to die. Indeed the Journal asks if there is any sensation at all.

"Fanciful persons," the Journal says, "speak as if the soul violently wrenched itself asunder from the body. Those, however, who have stood by many deathbeds know that most people pass into the silent land as peacefully as if they were going to sleep.

"Even when great pain has been suffered in the last struggle for life, when death finally claims the victim for his own he mercifully lulls him into insensibility or indifference. Whatever fear of the unknown there may previously have been seems to pass away with the ebbing tide of life."

Help for the Kidneys Through Gin Pills.

A GUARANTEED CURE.

Read this letter. Read it twice. You have never heard such good news before—if your kidneys are sick. It tells how to be free of pain—how to have all your old-time health and vigor.

"I have been for years a sufferer with pain in the back and across the kidneys. There was scarcely a minute, day or night, that I was free of pain, and when I attempted to pass urine, the pain was almost unbearable. A friend of mine in Portage la Prairie, who was similarly afflicted, strongly advised me to try Gin Pills, as they had cured him. I bought a box of Gin Pills, and in less than a week, to my great delight, found myself without pain. I have had to go as often as every 20 minutes to urinate and several times during the night. Since taking Gin Pills, I sleep through the entire night and am not more than ordinarily inconvenienced during the day. I can earnestly recommend Gin Pills to anyone suffering from pain in the back, kidneys or bladder.

Mr. G. O. C. Gowler, Portage la Prairie."

Your druggist has Gin Pills, or will get them for you. 50c box—6 for $2.50.

If you will send us your name and address and tell us the paper in which you have read this we send you a trial box of Gin Pills absolutely free. You will get such relief that you will gladly continue the treatment until cured. Do it to-day—now—and start to cure yourself. —Address The Bole Drug Co., Winnipeg, Man.

Satisfied Them All.

Aunt Panthea Brooks lived in a little New Hampshire village very many years without quarreling with any one, and was so thoroughly liked by every one for miles round that her popularity excited the interest of a summer visitor.

"Aunt Panthea," he asked, "how is it that you keep on such good terms with every one, while they are all quarreling among themselves?"

"Well," said Aunt Panthea, "being as you aren't to stay here long I'll tell you. When I go down the street I meet Jason Purdy, and he says, 'Why, Panthea, how well you look!'

"'I'm glad you think so, Jason,' I say, smiling at him.

"Next minute up comes Ezry Dracut.

"'Well, now, Panthea,' he says, 'how porely you are looking this year.'

"'My land, Ezry,' I say, 'how quick you are to notice those things!'

"So it is with everything. Those who like to think one way, I let 'em think it, and those who like to think the other, I let 'em think it."

Who can deny that Aunt Panthea had discovered a comfortable philosophy of life?—Youth's Companion.

Laconic.

As Napoleon was one day passing in review some of his troops he came in front of an old and faithful officer, who, perhaps from want of brilliancy on the man's part, had never been advanced beyond the grade of captain, though he was well enough known to the emperor. The emperor was passing at a slow trot. As he came directly in front of the old captain the officer saluted and said loudly, but without any apparent movement of the muscles of his face:

"Fifteen campaigns, private, captain!"

And the emperor, without turning his head or slackening his pace, said:

"Colonel, brigadier, baron!"

Then he was gone. There had, indeed, been no time for a word more than had been passed, but these had sufficed for the captain to communicate a long story and a reproachful complaint and for the emperor to set matters right with a military and social promotion.

A Wise Father.

When Sherman Hoar, a lawyer of recognized ability, left the law school and opened an office in Boston, his father, Judge Hoar, was at the height of his legal reputation. The young man's first client was an Irishman, and the case, though only some small matter of a boundary line, was one that required the examination of a number of deeds and records. Mr. Hoar accordingly told his client to come back in two days for his opinion. The Irishman left the office, evidently very reluctant at the delay. Turning at the door, he asked, "Couldn't ye give me the answer tomorrow, Misther Hoar?"

"No, no," was the reply; "come on Thursday."

The client went as far as the stairs. Then he turned and tiptoed back to the door and put his head inside, with a finger at his lips.

"Whist!" he whispered. "Couldn't ye get to see your father tonight, Misther Hoar?"

Can Animals Blush?

It is hard to tell whether animals blush, for their faces are covered so thickly with fur or hair or feathers that we do not know what may be going on beneath. Were they as barefaced as man it is more than likely we should see them blush, especially the more bashful sort and those with some sense of shame. It is a fact that the faces of vultures flush, and several of the monkeys become purple with rage, which may be considered as a kind of blushing. This may be proved any day in the monkey house in the London zoological gardens, where the baboons seem to fly into a passion on the smallest provocation.—London Mail.

For a Change.

"You don't mean to tell me that you have named your baby 'Ananias?'"

"Yessuh," answered Uncle Ben. "Dat's his name."

"But Ananias was the most untruthful man in history."

"Dat's de reason. We's gwinter put dat boy in politics. We's been namin' children 'George Washington' foh years an' it didn't do no good. Now we's gwinter try de other feller."

Origin of Alcohol.

A scientist says that when people were cave dwellers their diet consisted entirely of roots and fruits and that it is not unnatural to suppose that the food was often stored away. In course of time the fruit fermented, the sugar in it was turned into pure alcohol and the cave dwellers drank it and got to like it. This was the beginning of the use of alcohol.

Medical.

A young doctor said to a girl:

"Do you know, my dear, I have a heart affection for you?"

"Have you had it long?" she coyly required.

"Oh, yes. I feel I will liver troubled life without you," he responded.

"Then you had better asthma," she softly murmured.

The Voice of Experience.

Soulful Person—Ah, yes; the instruction of the young must indeed be a delightful occupation! Is it not, professor? The Professor—Yes, madam; it is not.

the room. Two others motioned me to follow, and in a few moments we were ushered into the room where I had had my interview with the Emperor.

Valcour was standing by the fireplace when we entered, and eyeing the Mexican with indifference he said to the captain:

"This is the man you found secreted in the out-building?"

"It is, senhor," answered the captain.

"Have you searched him?"

"Only partially. We took from him this revolver, a knife, and this purse. There were no papers."

Valcour took the weapons in his hands and examined them. The revolver, I could see as he threw back the barrel, was loaded in all six chambers. The knife he glanced at and turned to place upon the mantel when a second thought seemingly induced him to open the blades. It was a large, two-bladed affair, and the bright steel showed that it was sharpened as finely as a razor. As I watched the Emperor's spy I chanced to look toward the Mexican and surprised an expression that near-resembled terror upon his haggard face. Perhaps Valcour saw it, too, for he drew a handkerchief from his pocket and carefully wiped out the seats in the handles where the blades lay when the knife was closed. A small stain appeared upon the linen, and the spy carried the handkerchief to the window and inspected the stain with interest. While he was thus engaged the Emperor entered the room, followed by his ministers, and seating himself at the table calmly proceeded to light a cigar. Evidently he had just breakfasted, for he had an appearance of content that indicated a comfortable condition.

Valcour, returning from the window, first saluted the Emperor with great deference, and then addressed the Mexican.

"Why did you kill that man last evening and sever his hand with your knife?"

The Mexican gazed at him in horror.

"I—senor, as God hears me, I—"

"Tell me why!" said Valcour calmly.

The fellow glared at him as if fascinated. Then he threw his hands, all manacled as they were, high above his head, and with a scream that caused even the Emperor to start, fell upon the floor in a swoon.

Valcour turned him over with his foot.

"Search him!" he commanded.

The men were thorough. Not a shred of clothing escaped their eyes. And after they had finished the detective himself made an examination.

Dom Pedro was evidently much interested. Without any explanation further than Valcour's accusation, all present understood that the Mexican was charged with the murder of the man found in the shrubbery and therefore he must either have the ring upon his person or had deposited it in some secret place.

He lay unconscious after the search had ended, and Valcour, after a moment's reflection, ordered the men to carry him back to the room where he had passed the night, to guard him well, and to send a physician.

The Emperor relighted his cigar, which had gone out, and in the interval I heard the sound of a troup of horse galloping up the drive. There was no mistaking the clank of sabers, and Dom Pedro leaned forward with an expectant look upon his face, in which the others joined.

Then the door burst open and a man entered and knelt before the Emperor. I could scarcely restrain a cry of surprise as I saw him.

It was Francisco Paola.

CHAPTER XV.

Not since I parted with him in the road on the morning of Dom Miguel's murder had I seen Paola or heard from him directly.

At that time, after giving me two men who had proved faithful both to me and the Cause, he had ridden on to the house of death—"to breakfast with his sister." From that moment his actions had been a mystery not only to me but to all his fellow-conspirators.

But now it seemed easy to understand that the Minister of Police had been attending to the Emperor's business, and that he had also been playing a double game from the beginning, and promoting the revolution that he might the more easily crush it.

As he rose to his feet after saluting the Emperor, Paola glanced around the room and noted my presence. I could not well disguise the scorn I felt for this treacherous fellow, and as he met my eyes he smiled and twirled his small moustache with a satisfied air.

"Well?" demanded the Emperor.

"All is indeed well, your Majesty," returned the minister, lightly. "The leaders of the conspiracy, with one exception, are now under arrest."

"And that one?"

"Sanchez Bastro, a coffee-planter with a ranch near by. He has crossed the border. But it is unimportant."

"And Mendez?"

"Imprisoned in the citadel."

"Barros?"

"He is comforting Mendez, in the same cell."

"Treverot?"

"Unfortunately we were obliged to shoot him. He chose to resist."

"Hm! And Piexoto?"

"Is below, under arrest."

"Have him brought here." The captain left the room, and again the Emperor turned to Paola.

"You have done well, senhor; and your reward shall be adequate. It was a far-reaching plot, and dangerous." And Dom Pedro sighed as if greatly relieved.

Paola brushed a speck of dust from his sleeve and laughed in his silly fashion.

"The serpent is only dangerous, your Majesty, until its fangs are pulled," he drawled, and strolled away toward Valcour, while the soldiers brought in Senhor Floriano Piexoto.

The famous patriot was not only handcuffed, but his elbows were bound together by cords across his back. But despite his bonds he walked proudly and scowled into Dom Pedro's face as he confronted him. Indeed, I was filled with admiration to find that this man whom Fonseca had called "croaker" could be brave when occasion demanded it.

"So, my clever statesman has seen fit to turn traitor," began the Emperor, sternly regarding the prisoner.

"A champion of Liberty must needs be a traitor to Dom Pedro," replied Piexoto, with equal sternness.

"But the conspiracy is at an end, and I am inclined to be merciful," resumed the Emperor. "I am told you were the trusted friend of Miguel de Pintra, and knew his secrets. If you will inform us how to unlock the secret vault, I will promise to regard your offense lightly."

Piexoto stared at him a moment indignantly. Then he turned with a frown upon Paola.

"Ask of your Minister of Police," he retorted; "for there stands a double traitor! It was he who stood closest to de Pintra, winning his confidence only to betray it. It was Francisco Paola who planned the secret vault. Who should know better than he how to open it?"

The Emperor turned to Paola with suspicion written visibly upon his stern features.

"Did you plan the vault?" he demanded.

"Truly, your Majesty. Otherwise the records would have been scattered in many places. I planned the vault that all might be concentrated in one place—where we should find them when we were ready to explode the conspiracy. Records—plans—money—all are now at our hand."

"But we have not the key. Why did you plan so complicated a lock?"

"Nothing else would have satisfied de Pintra. As for the lock, it is nothing. A drill through one of the steel panels would have admitted us easily. But—"

"But what, sir? Why do we not drill now, instead of seeking this cursed ring?"

The Minister smiled and again twirled his moustaches.

"Because Dom Miguel suddenly developed inventive genius on his own part. I was absent when the work was completed, and too late I discovered that de Pintra had made pockets everywhere between the steel plates, and filled every pocket with nitro-glycerine."

"Well?"

"That is all. To drill into the vault is to explode a pocket of nitro-glycerine, which in turn will explode all the other pockets through concussion."

"And then?"

"And then the contents of the vault would be blown to atoms. Of the mansion itself not one stone would remain upon another. The records we seek would be lost irrevocably."

Valcour, pale with fear, uttered a cry and dashed through the door, while the Emperor rose to his feet with a look of terror upon his face.

"They are drilling now!" he gasped.

Silently we stood, none daring to move; and into our drawn faces Piexoto gazed with a grim and derisive smile.

Paola, more composed than any of the others, except Piexoto, began rolling a cigarette, but remembering the Emperor's presence he ceased.

And so we stood, motionless and silent, until footsteps were again heard and Valcour re-entered wiping the perspiration from his forehead with an embroidered handkerchief. His face wore a look of relief, but there was a slight tremor in his voice as he said:

"I have ordered the drilling stopped."

"I have ordered the drilling stopped, your Majesty."

Dom Pedro, thus reassured, strode back and forth in evident perplexity.

"We must have the key!" he said, angrily. "There is no other way. And the key cannot be far off. Has your prisoner, the Mexican, recovered?"

"I will go and see," answered the detective, and again left the room.

I caught a look of surprise upon the face of the Minister of Police. It was fleeting, but I was sure it had been there.

"May I inquire who this prisoner is?" he asked. One of the men who acted as secretary to the Emperor, receiving a nod from Dom Pedro, informed Paola of the finding of the dead body in the shrubbery, and of the consequent arrest of the Mexican.

"And the key was not found in his possession?" he inquired, eagerly.

"No."

"Then he secreted it, fearing arrest. Have the out-buildings been searched?"

"Not yet."

"Let it be done at once."

Valcour, entering in time to hear this, flushed angrily.

"That is my business, Senhor Paola. I will brook no interference from the police."

"Ah! had it not been for the police, Senhor Valcour would have blown his Emperor into eternity," returned Paola, smiling blandly into the spy's disturbed countenance.

"Enough of this!" cried the Emperor. "Let the grounds and out-buildings be carefully searched. Is your prisoner recovered, Valcour?"

"He is raving mad," returned the detective, in a surly tone. "It requires two soldiers to control him."

I breathed a sigh of relief, for I had feared the Mexican, in his terror, would betray the fact that he had given me the ring.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Emperor retired while the search of the grounds was being conducted, and Piexoto and I were escorted to another room upon the ground floor and locked in. There were two unbarred windows looking upon the grounds, but a sentry was posted at each of these, and as we were still hand-cuffed, our escape was impossible.

For a time my companion did nothing but curse Paola in the most hearty and diversified manner, and I made no effort to stop him. But finally this amusement grew monotonous even to its author, and he asked me how I had allowed myself to be captured.

I therefore related my adventures, but said nothing about the ring.

"I have always suspected Paola," he told me, "and often warned Dom Miguel against him. The man's very nature is frivolous. He could not be expected to keep faith. Yet it is surprising he did not choose to betray the Emperor, rather than us; for the Revolution is too powerful and too far advanced to be quelled by the arrest of a few of its leaders."

"But what of Fonseca?" I asked curiously. "Why was he not arrested also? Why was not his name mentioned to the Emperor?"

"I confess the fact puzzles me," returned Piexoto, thoughtfully. "Fonseca is even more compromised than I am myself, and unless he had a secret understanding with Paola, and purchased immunity, I cannot account for his escaping arrest."

"But the general will not forsake the cause, I am sure," I said, earnestly. "And it seems that Senhor Bastro, also, has succeeded in eluding arrest. Therefore, should the royalists fail to find the key to the vault, all may yet be well, in spite of Paola's treachery."

"There is another perplexing matter," returned Piexoto, pacing the room in deep thought. "Miguel de Pintra never told me the vault was sheathed with nitro-glycerine. Did you know it?"

"Yes," I answered. "But the secret was revealed to me by Lesba Paola, the Minister's sister."

"I can scarcely believe it, nevertheless," he resumed. "Yet what object could the traitor have in preventing their reaching the records, unless he knew the attempt to drill through the walls would destroy us all—himself included?"

"Perhaps he has fear that the records would incriminate him with the Emperor," I suggested.

"Bah! He has made his terms, evidently. That he worked faithfully in our interests for a time is quite believable; but either the Emperor's bribes were too tempting or he lost faith in the Cause."

I was about to reply when the door opened to admit Paola. Piexoto paused in his walk to glare at the Minister, and I was myself no less surprised at the inopportune visit.

But Paola, with the old, smirking smile upon his face that nothing ever seemed to banish, nodded pleasantly at us and sat down in an easy-chair. He rolled a cigarette and carefully lighted it before he addressed us.

"Senhors, you are about to denounce me as a traitor to the Cause," said he; "but you may both spare your words. Before the Cause existed I was Minister to the Emperor. A policeman walks in devious paths. If I am true to the oath I gave the Emperor, how dare you, Floriano Piexoto, who have violated yours, condemn me?"

"I don't," answered the other. "It is absurd to condemn a man like you. Treachery is written on every line of your false face. My only regret is that I did not kill you long ago."

"Yet the chief, Dom Miguel de Pintra, trusted me," remarked Paola, in a musing tone, at the some time flicking the ash from his cigarette with a deliberate gesture. "He was, it seems, the only one."

"Not so," said I, angry at his insolent bearing. "Your sister, sir, had faith in you."

He looked at me with a quizzical expression and laughed. I had ventured the remark in an endeavor to pierce his shield of conceit and indifference. But it seemed that even Lesba's misplaced confidence failed to shame him, for at that moment the girl's loyalty to the Cause seemed to me beyond a doubt.

"My sister was, I believe, an ardent republican. Poor little girl! How could she judge the merits of a political controversy? But there, senhors, let us have done with chidings. I am come for the key."

Piexoto and I stared at each other aghast. The key! Could the Minister suspect either of us of possessing it?

"Quite prettily acted, gentlemen," he resumed, "but it is useless to oppose my request. I suppose our friend Harcliffe has passed it on to you, senhor? No? Then he must have it on his person."

"Are you mad?" I asked, with well-assumed contempt.

"No; but the Mexican is. I have just left his room, and he raves perpetually of a ring he has give to Robert Harcliffe, of New Orleans. A ring that must be restored to him on demand."

"He raves," said I, coolly; although my heart was beating wildly.

"He does, indeed," acknowledged Paola. "And he tells exactly where the ring was placed—in the outer pocket of your jacket. Will you pardon me, senhor, if I prove the truth of his assertion?"

He rose and advanced to me with a soft, stealthy tread, and I backed away until I stood fairly against the wall, vainly endeavoring to find some way to circumvent him.

"Hold!" cried a clear voice, and as Paola swung around upon his heel I saw beyond him the form of Valcour outlined by the dark doorway.

"You were doubtless about to search the prisoner, senhor," said the spy, calmly, as he approached us. "I have myself just come from the Mexican's room and heard his ravings. But the task must be mine, since the Emperor has placed the search for the key in my hands."

"Good God! the vault is empty."

Paola turned with a slight shrug and resumed his seat.

"I have searched the prisoner already," he announced, "but failed to find the ring. Doubtless he has passed it to Piexoto, or secreted it. Or, it may be, the Mexican's words are mere ravings."

The detective hesitated.

"Who is this Mexican, Senhor Paola?" he asked.

"Frankly, I do not know. Not a conspirator, I am sure, and evidently not a royalist."

"Then how came he to know of the existence of the ring?"

"A mystery, my dear Valcour. Have you yet identified the man this Mexican murdered?"

"Not yet."

"I myself have not had a good look at the body. If you will take me to him I will endeavor to locate the fellow. It was doubtless he who murdered Madam Izabel."

As he spoke he rose and walked quietly toward the door, as if he expected Valcour to follow. But the spy, suddenly suspicious, cast a shrewd glance at me and replied:

"One moment, Senhor Paola. I must satisfy myself that neither Harcliffe nor Piexoto has the ring, in order that I may report to the Emperor."

"As you like," returned the Minister, indifferently, and resumed his chair.

Valcour came straight to my side, thrust his hand within my pocket, and drew out the ring.

"Ah!" he cried, his face lighting with joy, "your search must have been a careless one, my dear Paola! Here is news for the Emperor, at last."

He hurried from the room, and Paola, still smiling, rose and faced us.

"It is a great pity," said he, pleasantly, with his eyes on my face, "that God permits any man to be a fool."

Before I could reply he had followed Valcour from the room, and Piexoto, regarding me with a sullen frown, exclaimed:

"I can say amen to that! Why did you not tell me you had the ring?"

I did not reply. The taunts and the loss of the ring had dazed me and I sank into a chair and covered my eyes with my hands.

Pacing the room with furious energy, Piexoto growled a string of laments and reproaches into my unwilling ears.

"My poor comrades It is their death-warrant. These records will condemn to punishment half the great families of Brazil. And now when the battle is almost won, to have them fall into the Emperor's hands. Thank God, de Pintra is dead! This blow would be worse to him than death itself."

"However," said I, somewhat recovering myself, "we shall now secure his body from that grim vault. That is one satisfaction, at least."

He did not see fit to reply to this, but paced the floor in as great agitation as before.

Captain de Souza entered with two of his guards.

"The Emperor commands you to unlock the vault," he said to me. "Be good enough to follow, senhor. And Senhor Piexoto is also requested to be present."

"Tell the Emperor I refuse to unlock the vault," I returned, firmly.

"And why?" demanded Piexoto, scornfully. "It is merely a question of time, now that they have the key, when they will find the right indentation in the door."

"True," I answered. Then, to the captain: "Lead on, I will follow."

They escorted us to the library and down the winding stair until we stood in the well-known chamber at the end of the passage. The outer door of the vault lay open, displaying the steel surface of the inner door, with its countless indentations.

The Emperor and his secretary, together with Paola and Valcour, were awaiting us. The latter handed me the ring.

"His Majesty commands you to open the door, senhor Americano," he said.

"I believe the Minister of Police designed this vault. Let him open it himself," I replied, my resolution halting at the thought of what the open door would reveal.

"Yes, I designed it," said the Minister, "but I did not execute the work. Doubtless in time I could open the door; but the Emperor is impatient."

I saw that further resistance was useless. Bending over, I fitted the stone of the ring into the proper indentation, and shot the bolts. The great door was swung upward, a whiff of the damp, confined air entered my nostrils and made me shiver.

Reaching my hand within the vault I turned the switch that threw on the electric light, and then withdrew that the others might enter.

But no one moved. The light illuminated the full interior of the great vault, and every eye gazed eagerly with-

YARDS ARE REVOLTING

President on Conditions of Chicago Packing Houses.

Urges Need of Immediate Action by Congress For Drastic Inspection, as the Present Law is Useless to Effect Reform—Gen. Nelson A. Miles Says Rotten Meat Has Killed 3,000 Soldiers—Has Barrel of Testimony. ...

Washington, June 5.—President Roosevelt yesterday submitted to Congress a message transmitting the report of the special committee appointed to investigate into the conditions in the stock yards of Chicago.

"This report," says the President, "is of a preliminary nature. I submit it to you now because it shows the urgent need of immediate action by the Congress in the direction of providing a drastic and thorough-going inspection by the Federal Government of all stock yards and packing houses, and of their products, so far as the later enter into interstate or foreign commerce. The conditions shown by even this short inspection to exist in the Chicago stock yards are revolting. It is imperatively necessary in the interest of health and of decency that they should be radically changed. Under the existing law it is wholly impossible to secure satisfactory results."

The Packers' Reply.

Chicago, June 5.—Eight meat packing establishments of Chicago last night issued a joint statement making a wholesale denial of the charges made in the Neill and Reynolds' report of their investigation of the packing plants, and President Roosevelt's message to Congress.

Rotten Meat Kills 3,000 Soldiers.

Kansas City, June 5.—Gen. Nelson A. Miles, on his way to Colorado Sunday night, said: "The disclosures about packing house products now being exploited is no news to me. I knew it seven years ago. I told what I knew then. Had the matter been taken up at that time thousands of live would have been saved.

"I believe that 3,000 United States soldiers lost their lives because of adulterated, impure, poisonous meat. There is no way of estimating the number of soldiers whose health was ruined by eating impure meat.

"I have a barrel of testimony on the subject in the way of affidavits that I collected when I made my investigation seven years ago. The investigating committee closed the case and refused to hear 2,000 witnesses whom I had ready. At that time I could have secured the testimony of 100,000 men that the canned beef sold to the army was impure, adulterated and unwholesome."

AUSTRALIA HOPES

To Offset Canadian Advantages Through Owning the Railways.

London, June 5.—(C. A. P.)—Postmaster-General Smith of the Commonwealth says: "The Canadian emigration boom awakened us to the needs of doing something to push Australia. Australia can offer as satisfactory prospects to the emigrant from Great Britain as Canada. Canada is nearer, but it must be remembered the railways of Canada are in private hands, while the railways of Australia are in the hands of the state. The result of this is that when the emigrant arrives in Canada the cost of transit to destination in the interior to the individual or country is greater than if he had gone to Australia, where special facilities are afforded immigrants on railways. These things ought to be known, and preparations are being made with a view to placing the facts before intending emigrants."

Little Girl At Bowmanville Assaulted—Young Man Arrested.

Bowmanville, June 5.—The trial of William Cole, a farm hand in the employ of William J. Snowden, Darlington, charged with a serious offence on the little six-year-old daughter of William Tordiff, comes up to-day, before Police Magistrate Horsey.

While on her way to Sunday school, it is alleged, the little tot was seized by the young man and carried into a bush and assaulted. She told the story to her mother, and the arrest of Cole followed.

The young man has lived in the vicinity for nearly a year.

Horse Wrecks a Train.

Fergus, June 5.—At 2 a. m., yesterday, a double-header south-bound freight with 28 cars, left the track one mile north of here. A horse belonging to Mr. Byers jumped the fence at the track and got in front of the train. Both engines are badly wrecked and 13 cars, heavily loaded, are smashed into pieces. Engineers Jeffrey and Munro and Fireman Muirhead, together with a brakeman, all of Palmerston, were slightly injured and were removed to the hospital here.

Senator Gorman Is Dead.

Washington, June 5.—Arthur Pue Gorman, United States Senator from Maryland, died suddenly at his residence here at 9.20 yesterday morning. Heart trouble was the immediate cause of death. Senator Gorman first took his seat in 1881, and served continuously for 13 years, and nearly all of that time he was the leader of his party in the Senate. He managed the campaign that resulted in the election of Cleveland in 1884.

PRESTON NEEDN'T TELL

House Backs the Premier in Maintaining Secrecy.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, However, Offered to Break Pledge of Secrecy if Mr Borden Would Receive the Information in Confidence, But the Leader of the Opposition Would Have None of It—The People's Right.

Ottawa, June 5.—In the House yesterday, Mr. Monk (Jacques Cartier) moved a resolution reciting W. T. R. Preston's refusal to answer questions addressed to him by the committee respecting the persons who composed the North Atlantic Trading Co., and ordering his appearance, for contempt, at the bar of the House on Wednesday afternoon. He quoted many authorities in support of the motion.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier admitted that there was no doubt about the power of the House. But was it advisable to exercise it? The policy of the Government was to support the rulings of the various standing committees. But apart from that, what was the issue? Mr. Preston had received certain information in confidence. He had pledged his word not to reveal this information. Should we compel him to violate his pledge? In making this bargain with the promoters of the North Atlantic Trading Co., secrecy had been insisted upon and promised. He challenged some member of the Opposition to put his seat in jeopardy by making a formal charge.

He finally offered an amendment to Mr. Monk's resolution reciting that secrecy was justified in the case of this contract by reason of the exceptional circumstances and conditions surrounding it.

Apple Offered Borden, Who Won't Bite

The Premier offered to furnish the list of names to R. L. Borden in confidence.

Mr. Borden waived this offer. If the Premeir was bound in honor not to reveal these names, how could he offer to make an exception?

At any rate, the country, who paid the money, was entitled to the information.

As to a charge, had not Mr. Jury, an officer of the Government, insisted that Preston was interested in the North Atlantic Trading Co? If this company was not violating the laws of these foreign countries, its members need not fear publicity. If they were violating these laws, then surely they deserved no protection from Parliament.

There was nothing in the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Co. which obligated the Government to secrecy.

Mr. Fielding repeated his argument, that the honor of Canada was at stake. It was immaterial what were the merits or demerits of this contract. Whether wisely or foolishly the sacred word of this nation had been pledged by a Minister of the Crown.

"A Fraudulent Myth?"

Mr. Northrup (East Hastings) recalled the House to the pending question. What were the undisputed facts? In 1889 a contract was made with parties unknown. We were asked to believe that Mr. Sifton stipulated and the contract should be kept secret. Since then this contract had been changed repeatedly and always in favor of the company and to the disadvantage of the Government.

Why these changes? Who were the "beneficiaries? Does not one question suggest the other? Is it not suspicious that this "company" turns out to be a fraudulent myth?"

"What would be accomplished," Mr. Northup asked, "by giving these names to the leader o fthe Opposition? He would be bound in honor not to reveal them. How would this advance the enquiry?"

$300,000 Disappears.

Dr. Sproule (East Grey) resumed the debate at the evening session. He declared that Preston's sworn denial was not conclusive. Jury, who knew all about him, declared that he would not believe him under oath.

At any rate, Preston was our hired man; $300,000 of our money had disappeared. He knew where it had gone, and yet he was protected by the Government in defying the Parliament and people of Canada. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.), Colonel Sam Hughes, Mr. Miller (South Grey) and Hon. John Haggart continued the debate.

Sifton's Pledge.

Hon. Clifford Sifton said the entire matter had been referred to the Speaker as Minister of the Interior. He had approved the contract and agreed to treat as confidential the identity of the agents who were to constitute the company. He considered himself and the Government bound by that pledge.

Mr. Bourassa (Labelle) considered that this was a matter upon which the House was entitled to information.

Upon division, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's amendment sustaining the Government's position of secrecy was sustained. Yeas 95, nays 47. Mr. Bourassa, Armand Lavergne (Montmagny) and Mr. Verville voted with the Opposition.

In response to a question by Mr. Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that the Government intended to amend the pension grab of last session.

LOANS TO EMPLOYES

One Canada Life Servant Still Carries $17,000 Debt.

Senator Cox Admits He Knew the Employe Was Playing Stocks on Margin—Does Not Approve of Such Methods and Canada Life Has Now Stopped Them—Gave Rebates While an Agent, But Considers Practice Wrong—Waste's Court's Time.

Toronto, June 5.—If "Cox can't wait" the Royal Commission on Insurance can. Not only that, but yesterday morning the Royal Commission on Insurance did—for half an hour, until the president of the Canada Life hove in sight and into the witness box. He lost 15 minutes at the afternoon session; pretty expensive waiting at $140 an hour, which the commission costs the country.

Why Cost Has Gone Up.

At the morning session, Senator Cox explained to Dominion Counsel Shepley why the ratio of expenses had grown so large. Twenty or thirty years ago agents used to get ten per cent. commission and seven and a half on renewals. Now their commission goes as high as 65 per cent. The hunt for business is so keen that agents have to be paid that. One of the reasons for the keenness of the hunt for business was the invasion of the Canadian field by American companies. He modestly disclaimed the honor for the Canada Life of leading the van against the Yankee invasion.

Rebating Wrong.

Rebating Senator Cox considered wrong; so wrong that it ought to be punished, although he pleaded guilty to it as an agent.

This "rebate" is the throwing off, by the agent, of part of the first year's premium, when he is inducing a new man to come on in.

Suppose the premium is $100, and the agent is getting 65 per cent. on it. He says to the insured-to-be, "We'll make it $75 if you let me write the policy now."

He has to turn over $35 to the company. He does that, and has $40 himself instead of $65. Maybe he has lost $25, you think. No, for Mr. Agent only gives the rebate when he finds he can't make the grade any other way. Instead of losing $25 he has made $40, where he would have made nothing.

Why They Dont' Like It.

But the "evil" of it? That the company feels in this way: Mr. Insured "comes on in," tickled at saving $25. But next year his premium is $100. The agent can't give him rebates for ever. Mr. Insured feels the thing as an increased expense, and perhaps he drops his policy altogether. And the life insurance people say there is no profit at all on first year policies, the expense of getting them is so high. So if the insurance lapses at the end of the first year, the only man who is making money out of it is the agent.

The Kind They Want.

"Persistent" insurance — the kind where the insured goes on handing over his money year after year, paying salaries and running expenses, and, indirectly, the loss on other fellows' lapses and rebates, until he dies — is the only kind that pays the life insurance companies. That is the kind they want. Senator Cox said he preferred the Canada Life's growth, from $4,000,000 of business to $12,000,000, because the most of this was persistent. If strenuous method had been adopted, $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 of business might have been corralled—temporarily.

Senator Cox denied that, even with voluntary insurance, contrasting with the strenuously hunted business of this continent, insurance was cheaper in England than in Canada.

The bulk of Mr. Shepley's examination yesterday morning was based on Senator Cox's speech at the last annual meeting of the company.

In the Afternoon.

At the afternoon session Senator Cox said he had conceded to arbitration Imperial Co. shares owned by the Central Canada L. & S. Co. and Messrs. Ames & Bradshaw, under an agreement between the latter and the witness.

Mr. Shepley asked if this arrangement did not make the 7,300 shares practically one vote, and Mr. Cox admitted that it did.

"It might result in the control of a joint stock company by an arbitration which strikes me as being rather unusual," commented Mr. Shepley, and the Senator admitted that such was practically the case.

Then there was an interesting discussion as to how the agreement mentioned was disposed of. Mr. Cox said Mr. Bradshaw was anxious to get rid of the agreement on account of other financial matters.

"What was paid to get rid of it?" Mr. Shepley asked, "and how did it come about?"

Senator Cox: "They got over $66,000 for it." He had no doubt whatever the agreement could have been forfeited without that payment. The stock has not advanced, but it is well worth the money.

Wanted to Help Them.

"There was $7,750 really paid on the purchase money?" asked Mr. Shepley, and the Senator said, "Yes."

"The repayment of that would have meant the repayment of the actual purchase money?" the examiner urged, and again Mr. Cox agreed.

Mr. Shepley asked, "Why it was Mr. Cox paid the larger sum, and for their benefit when they wanted him to take back his shares and could not carry out their agreement? Why didn't you drive a harder bargain?" he asked.

"I wanted them both to get out of their financial difficulties. I was dealing with two men. I was not trying to drive a hard bargain with them. I wanted to help them. I wanted to retain Mr. Bradshaw's services when he was entirely relieved from embarrassment. If he wanted a thousand shares of that stock he could get it at what it cost me," replied Mr. Cox.

Mr. Shepley: It was not that Bradshaw refused to hand over the stock unless you paid him that sum?

Mr. Cox: The cancellation of that agreement was entirely satisfactory to everybody concerned.

When Mr. Shepley broached upon the call loan to the Dominion Securities Co., Mr. Cox produced a document which he announced was the statement of all the facts and that it gave information as to all of his personal holdings, but he was adverse to it going to the public. "I would like you read it," he said, to Mr. Shepley, "and if you think it is necessary the information should go to the public, I am willing. But it is not fair to other institutions. However, it is for you to decided."

"This is a public body, Mr. Cox," said Mr. Shepley.

"I know that," agreed the Senator.

Commissioner Kent: Let Mr. Shepley see the statement.

Wallace Nesbitt: It is Mr. Cox's personal affairs."

After a little further argument Mr. Shepley accepted the document.

After several minutes' conversation with Mr. Nesbitt, the Dominion counsel said that in the meantime he would read over the statement and see what should be made public.

Mr. Nesbitt addressed the commission. He said: "I submit that the statement is not public interest, and that my learned friend has no right to make it public. I take all responsibility for the Senator's hesitation in answering."

"Please let me read it. I brought it here to read it," said the Senator, "I have nothing to hide."

"That is for you and your counsel to decide," answered Mr. Shepley.

"If the press want it you had better read it," said Mr. Nesbitt.

"Yes, yes, let me read it," again asked the Senator.

"No; I'd rather not," suggested Mr. Shepley. I think I would like to ask these question and let you answer them."

To Clear Up Things.

Senator Cox again asked the Dominion counsel to read it himself and examine it.

"I wanted to read it at my leisure," said Mr. Shepley. "But I think, with that in your hands, Senator Cox, you ought to be able to answer the questions I am going to put to you."

The examination proceeded. Mr. Shepley stated that the Provident Loan and Savings Co. had purchased 3,000 shares of Dominion Coal at 48 1-2. "Can you find that on your paper?" asked Mr. Shepley.

The Senator said that he was not a director of the Provident at the time of this purchase of stock.

Mr. Shepley then took up an agreement between the Dominion Securities as vendor, Central Canada as purchaser, and Canada Life as lender, with this result.

The loans made by the Canada Life enabling transactions of this stock to be handled were as follows: $4,850 on 100 share on Feb. 14, 1902; $20,000 on 200 shares on Sept. 2, 1902; $11,000 on 100 shares on Sept. 19, 1902; $50,000 on 500 shares on March 2, 1902; $11,000 on 100 shares on March 3, 1902; $2,000 on 25 shares on June 3, 1903; $7,500 on 100 shares on June 16, 1903; $700 on 700 shares on April 23, 1903; $9,260.25 on 700 shares on April 23, 1903; $7,339.35 on 100 shares on June 17, 1903. From March 18 to Aug. 4 $318,600 on 3,030 shares, and on Mrach 27, $15,000 on 1,458 shares.

Loans to Employes.

"Was there any loans made to officers or employes of the company?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"Oh! yes, there were some small loans made, and are entered in the statements which you have."

"What were these?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"On June 3, 1903, we lent $2,000 on 25 shares; on June 15, $17,083.50 on 210 shares, and $7,339.85 on 100 shares sespectively to servants of the company," was the answer.

"Do you know whether these same servants had been margining these holdings elsewhere?"

"I think they had," said Mr. Watt, answering for the Senator.

"Was it a common thing to lend to employes?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"This was the only time it ever occurred," said the Senator.

"The larger loan is still being carried," said Mr. Watt, "but the others have been paid off."

To Strengthen the Market.

Going back to stock transactions it devolved that following up the purchase of Twin City stock, Mr. Cox, assisted by Mr. Watt, said the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Canada Life had jointly purchased 2,000 shares of Twin City, and 2,000 shares of Dominion Coal.

"Tell me the circumstances?" requested Mr. Shepley.

Mr. Cox said the stocks had been bought at good prices.

"Didn't you buy the stock to strengthen the market?" he was asked, and Mr. Cox replied in the affirmative.

"Do you look upon the strengthening of the share market as legitimate for a life insurance company?" Mr. Shepley asked.

"We were quite justified in protecting our holdings, and the market generally," answered Mr. Cox.

"You could still have sold at a profit, but you wanted to sustain the market?"

"We had 1,000 shares of Twin City already," explained Mr. Cox, who said that it had been sold in deference to the Insurance Department.

"Read that statement," asked Mr. Cox, referring again to the list of transactions. "It will show you that the Canada Life has never been misused. It's a statement of the facts we are going over, and it gives dates and detail I cannot give just from memory."

The Making of Investments.

In 1904 the Canada Life purchased a holding of stock in the Sao Paulo Railway, of which Mr. Cox is a director. When the Canada Life bought the stock it was paying 6 per cent., and it is now paying 8 per cent.

"We have heard you had got rid of the bonds, but did not find that you had disposed of the common stock?" submitted Mr. Shepley.

"The stock went with the bonds. I showed that on Saturday to Mr. Edwards," explained Mr. Morrow for Mr. Cox.

"A general question, please," said Mr. Shepley. "In the case of your financial transactions, which you undertake from time to time by way of indemnity, are you, apart from what the market may develop, remunerated for financing large matters? Do you get any advantage in respect to that indemnity?"

Mr. Cox: Our share in the indemnity.

Mr. Shepley: No commission?

Mr. Cox: There may be half a dozen parties get commission. I think there have been cases where big responsibilities were taken that a commission has been paid for the guarantee.

He said there were no cases where the Canada Life got any.

In Michigan.

Then Mr. Shepley launched into the history of the Michigan branch. Mr. Cox said that with Mr. Ramsay's consent he had purchased the interest in the branch for about $5,000, which had been placed as a debit against the branch, and profits accruing since had been applied on that debt to reduce it. Profits had been shown for a few days, but became a debt again in 1905.

Numerous cases were cited where officials of the company had been retired on substantial annuities. The cost of running the concern was taken up by Mr. Shepley.

Mr. Cox's Salary.

When you became president you took a salary of $20,000 a year? "Yes."

"And in some instances, directors' fees?" added Mr. Shepley.

"I'm not sure, but I think I did," replied the Senator, but Mr. Watts corrected him, and he said there had been one case of $100.

He had purchased interests in branches and had given his son, H. C. Cox, $40,000. Mr. Ramsay was retired on an annuity of $20,000 a year after forty years' service. In 1895 H. C. Cox got $40 a month. He was raised to $50 in 1897, and in 1898 to $54.50. Then he acquired his large interest in the business.

"The net result of your becoming president was to add $26,000 a year for your own family?" said Mr. Shepley.

"We took up the additional duties," said Mr. Cox. There had been no assistant general manager before an office made for Senator Cox's son. The Senator had taken $5,000 off his own salary, and it was now $27,500 for president, general manager and assistant general manager.

STRIKERS AMBUSH GUARDS.

500 Shots Were Exchanged But Only Four Were Injured.

Steubenville, Ohio, June 5.—The armed guard on duty at the mines of the United States Coal Co. were ambushed by striking miners about 12.30 o'clock yesterday morning while marching over the hills from Glens Run to Coal Hollow. About 500 shots were fired and four persons were wounded, but as far as known no one was killed. The miners were foreigners.

The guard was finally routed, and forced to seek shelter, leaving two wounded on the field.

Two miners were also injured in the battle. It is said the miners were officered by former soldiers from the Polish and Austrian armies.

There was another conflict between the striking miners and guards at Plum Run during the night. About 75 shots were exchanged, and T. E. Young, manager of the mines, was slightly wounded. No one else was hurt. All is now quiet.

SPRING CATARRH.

DISEASE PREVALENT NOW, BUT CAN BE QUICKLY CURED WITH HYOMEI.

A great many people suffer more with catarrh during the spring months than at any other season of the year, the changes in weather seeming to have a bad effect upon the disease

Some of the cures made by Hyomei seem marvelous when one remembers that the patients had suffered from catarrh since childhood and that for years they had been unable to get a good night's sleep, on account of the disagreeable tickling and dropping at the back of the throat caused by this offensive disease. A few days' treatment with Hyomei brought quick relief, and its continued use made a complete and lasting cure.

The complete outfit costs but $1.00, extra bottle 50 cents. Compare this small expense with the fees charged by specialists.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for consultation blank that will entitle you to services of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company.

NICE HAIR FOR ALL.

Once Destroy the Dandruff Germ, and Hair Grows Luxuriantly.

Any one can have nice hair if he or she has not dandruff, which causes brittle, dry hair, falling hair and baldness. To cure dandruff it is necessary to kill the germ that causes it, and that is just what Newbro's Herpicide does. — Cornelius Grew, Colfax, Wash., says;

"One bottle of Newbro's Herpicide completely cured me of dandruff, which was very thick; and it has stopped my hair from falling out." It makes hair soft and glossy as silk, delightful odor, and refreshing hair dressing. It permits the hair to grow abundantly, and kills the dandruff germ.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. Fruit And Vinegar Company Held First Annual Meeting.

The first annual meeting of shareholders of the Belleville Fruit and Vinegar Company, Limited, was held on the premises, head of Henry St., West Belleville, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The object of the meeting was to receive reports, elect officers and transact general business.

The directors elected were. H. J. Graham, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, S. Burrows, W. J. Magrath, W. C. Springer, Mayor Sulman, F. Dolan, sr., John Taylor and W. B. Robinson. The directors elected the following officers;

President—R. J. Graham.

First Vice-President—W. B. Robinson.

Secretary and Manager — E. P. Frederick.

Solicitor—W. S. Morden.

Auditors — H. W. Ackerman and H. C. Hunt.

THE TREASURER'S REPORT.

The treasurer's report showed that, so far, $6,100 has been subscribed for stock, of which $2,400 has been taken in common stock and $3,700 in preferred stock. Of this amount 25 per cent. has been paid up. The outlay, so far, for wages, repairs, machinery, etc., has been about $3000.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

The President's report was voluminous and exhaustive. He described how, after much effort, he had succeeded in getting local men to take hold of the matter and organize the Belleville Fruit & Vinegar Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $40,000 $20,000 of which is preferred, carrying 7 per cent., and $20,000 of common stock. The company, he considered, was extremely fortunate in securing the services of Mr. E. P. Frederick as sec.-treas. and manager. The property, with improvements up to the time of transfer, was turned over to the Company for $1000 in common stock. The building had been remodeled on plans furnished by Mr. L'Amereaux, of Schoharie, N.Y., an expert in cider and vinegar making, whose services, the president thought, would be very valuable to the company. Mr. Graham said they had had extensive correspondence with English manufacturers in regard to jellies and jams, with the result that they have offers of several competent men to come and teach their methods Mr McCaskey will learn, at the Oshawa Canning Factory, their process of canning apples.

Pickles will also be manufactured by the company, but possibly not for another year.

It is believed that there is a splendid opening for the company's lines, particularly in the Northwest.

The expert, Mr. L'Amereaux, says he has never seen a finer site for a cider and vinegar business than the company's quarters.

In the president's opinion it would be advisable to build a solid brick chimney instead of a steel smoke stack.

In conclusion the president said he had every confidence in the success of the business, and believed the shareholders would be well reimbursed for their investment, and that when the company has been in existence as long as the Belleville Hardware Co. its stock will stand fully as well as the stock of that company does to-day.

Both reports were received and adopted. complimentary addresses to the president and secretary made and votes of thanks to both gentlemen passed.

The shareholders were shown over the premises, and expressed themselves as gratified with what they saw.

Mr. Colden Could Not Qualify Under Age Limit

A special meeting of the Fire Committee was held last evening.

Ald. Cooper, chairman, presided.

The object of the meeting was to consider the appointment of Mr. John Colden on the Fire department. It appears that when Mr. Colden was appointed to take Mr. H. Demarsh's place on the waterworks department he was promised that he would be placed upon the Fire department. As this had not been done the matter was brought up at the last meeting of the Council and referred to the Fire Committee. In addition to the members of the committee present last night, Chief Campbell, Assistant Chief Cummins and other members of the Fire brigade were there. The question of the appointment of Mr. Colden upon the brigade was discussed at some length, but it was found that he was beyond the age limit of the By-law, which states that the applicant must not exceed 40 years of age. This settled the matter. and Mr. Colden will not be appointed.

A Good Many Went On The N.W. Excursion

A large number from this city and vicinity left for the Northwest this morning on the "Homeseekers' excursion,' run by the C.P.R. Railway. Those who left this district were mostly booked for Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Following are some of the parties who have gone from this city and vicinity.

For Calgary — Mr. S. Symons, Mr. W. J. Magrath, Mr. J. W. Mallory. Mr. and Mrs. Leslie, Miss Minnie Keith, Mr. and Mrs. Sayers (Thurlow.)

For Edmonton — Messrs. A. Henry, W. Rose, A. E. Bailey, A. Luscombe, W. Waldron, Mr. C. Bonisteel and daughter. R. W. Watt, G. Vandewater, Messrs. Mullett and Baker.

For Stella — Mr. F. White.

For Moosejaw — Mr. C. McDonald.

JIM REYNOLDS WON HIS WAGER.

PORT HOPE TONSORIAL ARTIST HAD OVER THREE HOURS TO SPARE IN HIS WALK TO TORONTO.

Great interest was excited throughout this section of the province over the wager of "Jimmy" Reynolds, the 50-year-old Port Hope barber, who bet $100 that he would walk from Port Hope to the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, in 24 hours or less. He started yesterday morning, and the Port Hope Guide thus describes the start;

"Jimmy arose bright and early this morning and it is safe to say he had slept very little last night. He remarked, however, that he was as fresh as a daisy and just before leaving he offered to bet $10 more that he would accomplish the trip. A large crowd were in waiting at the Queen's Hotel to see the start and when Jimmy appeared on the scene there was great handshaking and everybody wished him success. He had discarded his coat and vest and his sleeves were rolled high above his elbows. He wore long trousers and his boots were fitted for the occasion. He carried a large cane in one hand and an orange in the other. By ten minutes to seven fully two hundred persons had gathered and as the town clock commenced to strike seven he was away. Numerous cannon crackers were set off and Jimmy was given a rousing cheer as he hustled up Walton street."

"Jimmy" arrived at Newtonville, 11 miles, at 10.05 a.m., and reached Newcastle, 17 miles, at 11.15. He got to Pickering at 8.50 last evening, and struck the limits of Toronto, fresh as a daisy, shortly after 3 o'clock this morning, reaching the King Edward about 4 o'clock, having beaten his time limit by over three hours. The pedestrian was accompanied by a bunch of jubilant friends, and offered to bet $500 to $1000 that he would, after 24 hours rest, make the return journey inside of 24 hours. His average was about 3 1-8 miles an hour,

A Beautiful Hymn.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir,—It is to be hoped that this beautiful guild hymn of "The Girls' Own Guild of Sympathy," will find a place in the new hymn-book of the Anglican Church. The Bishop of London is President of this guild. The words of the hymn are by Mary Ann Hearne.

J. W. FORSTER.

BISHOP OF LONDON'S GUILD HYMN.

Just as I am, Thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come,
In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve and no delay
With all my heart I come.

I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right,
I would serve Thee with all my might,
Therefore to Thee I come.
Just as I am, young, strong and free
To be the best that I can be,
For truth and righteousness and Thee,
Lord of my life I come.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Rocked in the cradle of the deep,

Secure I rest upon the wave,
For thou, O Lord, hast power to save.

I know thou wilt not slight my call,
For thou dost mark the sparrow's fall,
And calm and peaceful is my sleep
Rocked in the cradle of the deep.

And such the trust that still were mine,
Though stormy winds swept o'er the brine
Or though the tempest's fiery breath
Roused me from sleep to wreck and death.

In ocean's caves still safe with thee,
The germ of immortality.
And calm and peaceful is my sleep,

AUSTRALIA'S NAVY.

A Torpedo Flotilla to Be Formed—Localizing Defence.

The long-discussed project of a local navy for the Australian Commonwealth is about to materialize.

Capt. W. R. Cresswell, director of naval forces to the Australian Government, has been spending some time in England, obtaining provisional tenders for torpedo craft.

He has made the rounds of the important naval building yards on the Tyne and Clyde, and has now forwarded specifications and estimates for the construction of four destroyers and four torpedo boats to Senator Thomas Playford, with whom rests the responsibility of definitely placing the orders.

It is not suggested that this force should in any way be a substitute for the British Australian squadron. It will be merely supplementary to it.

Capt. Cresswell, in the course of an interview, very clearly explained the views of the Australian authorities upon the subject of the proposed local navy.

"Our idea," he said, "is to assist the imperial fleet, and not to supersede it. Our little navy will stand in the same light to the British fleet that a solitary watchman does to the organized police system.

"We propose to begin by building up a torpedo flotilla. I am due back in Melbourne by the middle of June. The estimates will then come on for discussion, and I think I may say that the scheme I propose will be adopted. The additional expenditure incumbent upon the Commonwealth will be about £100,000 per annum."

Sir George S. Clarke of the Imperial Defence Council, with whom Capt. Cresswell has been in consultation, is understood to favor the scheme.

At the Admiralty, however, the idea of a local Australian navy is not regarded with a very friendly eye.

"The colonial authorities would do much better to spend money they wish to lay out upon naval defence in the form of a contribution to the imperial fleet," said a well-known flag officer yesterday.

"Australia must be defended in European waters. The Atlantic fleet and the Mediterranean fleet form the real bulwarks of those far-off shores. Let these forces be defeated and what is a local fleet going to do against an enemy? Any aggression against the Commonwealth must have come from Europe. The colonists themselves scarcely seem to realize this.

"Their naval reserves are a very useful force, trained under the British Admiralty, but a few torpedo craft, which they may call their own by right of purchase, cannot render them less dependent upon our battle squadrons than they are at present.

"Nor can imperial naval defence ever be localized, for it means the mastery of all the seas."

Way to Solve House Problem.

New Zealand, the colony of Socialistic, even radical, legislation, has found a remedy for the housing problem in the enactment of the Workmen's Homes Act. According to Mr. A. A. Brown of Dunedin, New Zealand, who is visiting in Canada, the remedy is proving a cure for the "high-rent" complaint.

Mr. Brown explained that under this Act a "workman" was a married man earning about £156 a year, or $15 a week. The Government dealt in two classes of houses—frame structures, at £350, and brick houses, at £450. These were leased to "workmen" at rental equaling 5 per cent. on the investment. That means about $7.30 per month for the frame houses and $8.80 for the more substantial class. The Government is secured by a twenty-year endowment policy on the life of the "workman," and if the insured dies within the twenty years the Government gets the proceeds of the policy. The widow receives a clear title deed to the property. If the workman lives till the end of that period the proceeds of the endowment go to the Government, and the man gets his deed. The Government has already commenced the erection of houses in Wellington and Dunedin on this principle.

New Zealand also has an "Advance to Settlers' Act," which provides for Government loans of money to farmers and others, at 5 per cent., to the value of two-fifths of security.

The colony's "radical" legislation also includes a State Fire Insurance Co., formed to fight the exorbitant rates which the English companies proposed to impose.

Schoolboy Definitions.

Here are a few "brand new" schoolboy definitions just come from the Emerald Isle. It would be wonderful if they were not original. The proud man must tremble. A Dublin boy says he will be turned into an animal, and gives as his reason "because the Bible tells us 'he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and he that exalteth himself shall be a baste.'" Was ever wiser definition of "a friend" given? "One who knows all about you and likes you all the same," and could anything be truer than the same boy's conception of most poetry? "Poetry is where every line begins with a capital letter." A youth from the North gave a new rendering of the parable of the sower: "A sower went forth to sow, and as he sowed he fell by the wayside and the thieves sprang up and choked him."

An Eye For an Eye.

A young lady friend of our acquaintance has recently received a shock. Among her extensive male acquaintances there is a blue eyed youth. He goes much into society and is a hot favorite among the nicer sex because of his eyes. Alack! One of them is glass. But there is no need, as he says, for every one to know that, and, really, it seems so much the counterpart of the other that not one in a hundred would detect it. On this occasion he escorted the young lady in question to a refreshment room. As they were taking tea and coffee he looked unutterable things at her, when all of a sudden she gave vent to a startled exclamation. Her eyes fixed on his with a mysterious intentness and horror. A fly had settled in the center of his glass eye and remained there, he, of course, unconscious of its presence. The sight of that eye looking at her with a fly on it and the owner making no attempt to brush it off, was too much for his companion. It overpowered her, and she shudders when she recalls the circumstance.—London Answers.

The Queer Chameleon.

There is nothing in the world will induce a chameleon to take even the slightest apparent interest in its surroundings unless it be the sight of what it considers a toothsome insect. The chameleon's method of taking its prey is very curious, being effected by shooting out an enormously long, wormlike tongue, the end of which is clubbed and covered with a viscid secretion, to which the insects stick and are thus drawn into its mouth. The actual projection of the tongue is made with marvelous rapidity. The eyes of the chameleon are very curious. They are very large, but, with the exception of a small opening in the center, are covered with skin. They are also entirely independent of each other, with the result that occasionally the creature is looking forward over its nose with one eye, while with the other it is intently watching something directly behind it.

A Bit of English Humor.

An English humorist many years ago hit upon a neat way of scoring against certain politicians of the times. A comic journal, not being a newspaper within the meaning of the act, was prohibited from giving news, and so in place of a parliamentary report the humorist in question reported a few "first lines" from speeches by prominent members: "Sir Charles Wetherell said he was not sensible"— "Mr. Hunt was entirely ignorant"— "Lord Ashley said he should take the earliest opportunity of moving"— "Mr. Perceval presented a petition praying"— "Colonel Sibthorpe never could understand"— "Lord Lyndhurst said he must entreat of every one to give him credit"— "Sir Edward Sugden was not one of those who thought"— "Mr. Croker said he had the fullest assurance"—

Glass Worth More Than Gold.

When is glass worth more than gold? When it is the lens of a microscope. The record increase in value of the manufactured article over the raw material is probably made by this variety of glass which multiplies itself 50,000,000 times. The front lens of a micro-objective costing about $5 weighs no more than about .0017 of a gram; hence the value of such lenses to the weight of a kilogram would be about $3,000,000. The cost of making this weight of glass is 3 to 6 cents, and thus when worked up into the shape of a lens the glass has increased in value about 50,000,000.

Trees That Form Islands.

In the course of great rivers, islands are generally formed by the stranding of trees, shrubs, plants and such things brought down by the current. In the Mackenzie river of Canada the whole process of island making in this way can be easily observed. Trees borne down from the banks by the undermining action of the current usually retain considerable mass of earth and stones entangled in their roots. They, therefore, readily sink, and by doing so form considerable shoals, which time converts into regular vegetable islands. Then a thicket of small willows covers the newly formed land and their fibrous roots serve to bind the whole firmly together. A peaty soil is formed by the gradual decay of the vegetation, including the trunks of the trees, and on this many new varieties of plants spring up. Sometimes the island clears its moorings and floats away down stream until it is again arrested by an obstacle, or it may become in a sense waterlogged and subside close to the bottom. In this latter case it often gets covered over with mud and sand, which form a new and more permanent land surface above it.

The Lobster's Birth Name.

"Did you ever see the name a lobster is born with?" asked a fish dealer the other day. "It is marked on his body. No? Well, I'll show you one."

The dealer took a live lobster out of a heap on the marble slab.

"Its name is Joe," the dealer said after he had inspected one of its legs. "Now, can you find it?"

The customer took the lobster gingerly by the back of the neck, where it could not reach his hand with its nippers. Turning it on its back so that the brown legs at its side flopped backward, a smooth streak half an inch long and nearly as wide was seen on the inside of the thigh. In this streak, like a mosaic, were short lines, as though some one had printed on it with indelible brown ink in backhand the characters J-O-E.

"Some lobsters are named Jim," the dealer said, "some Jack, others John, and I once clearly made out the name Julia."

A Stag and a Ladder.

Stories of deer with rain barrels or water pails on their heads are common enough among Maine and Adirondack guides, but it is left for Europe to come to the fore with a variant. Some huntsmen near Innsbruck came upon a stag with a ladder on its antlers. In spite of this handicap it made off at great speed on seeing the man, leaping hedges and dashing through the undergrowth as if quite unimpeded. Its mad career was stopped, however, when the ends of the ladder caught between two trees. Its struggles were so frantic at the approach of the huntsman's dog that it broke off part of its antlers and, thus freed, made good its escape. The ladder proved to belong to a farmer who had left it standing against one of his haystacks. While stealing the hay the stag had evidently upset the ladder, which had thus become fixed on its horns.

A Word With a Strange History.

"Treacle," or molasses, is a word with an interesting history. The earliest "treacle" was an antidote against the viper's bite and probably was made of viper's flesh itself. It is a word with a strange history, descending from the Greek "ther," a wild beast, whence came the adjective "theriakos," pertaining to a wild beast, which was eventually specialized to mean serving as an antidote against a wild beast's bite. In English "treacle" then came to mean anything soothing or comforting. Chaucer even speaks of Christ as "treacle of all harm." And as so many soothing remedies were sirups, "treacle" at length meant simply sirups of various kinds.

The Temple of Diana.

The most noted fire which involved the burning of a single edifice was the destruction of the great temple of Diana at Ephesus in B. C. 356 on the night Alexander the Great was born. The fire was kindled by Herostratus, who when apprehended confessed that his only desire was to transmit his name to further ages. He was put to death with exquisite and prolonged tortures, and the Ephesian senate commanded that on pain of death his name should never be pronounced, hoping thus to disappoint his expectation.

To Keep Awake In Church.

A minister once told me a good way to keep awake in church when inclined to be drowsy. The way was this: Lift one foot a little way from the floor and hold it there. It is impossible to go to sleep when your foot is poised in the air. This remedy, though simple, is very effectual and never fails to keep a person awake.

Because It Was True.

City Editor (to reporter)—Look here, what do you mean by writing, "Among the prettiest girls at the dance was Lieutenant Rogers?" The lieutenant is a man, I believe. Reporter Cubb—Yes, I understand that; but you see he spent the greater part of the evening among the prettiest girls there.

Fiction.

"What are you writing about, Hawley?"

"A story. I'm going in for fiction."

"Really? For a magazine?"

"No; for my tailor. He wants his money, and I'm telling him I'll send him a check next week."

The Man Under the Bed.

Mrs. Timid—Did you ever find a man under the bed? Mrs. Bluff—Yes; the night we thought there were burglars in the house. I found my husband there.

Not the body but the soul strikes the blow in which lives victory.—Maga.

Geese From Shellfish.

Everybody in the whole civilized world between the eleventh and the seventeenth centuries believed that the "barnacle goose" hatched from that species of shellfish called the barnacle. The story was first told by Cambrensis and was devoutly believed by all Christendom for more than half a thousand years. A well known scientific writer, reviewing the opinions of Cambrensis, says: "According to our venerable authority, the barnacle goose is generated from logs of wood allowed to decompose in the water. When decomposition has fairly begun, small bumps on the log may be observed. Little by little these increase in size, and finally assume the form and shape of a mass of barnacles, which is well known as a kind of shellfish. Soon after the shell, or husk, bursts open and a full grown goose may be seen in the water clinging to the log only by its bill. A few days longer it continues to draw its nourishment from the log, then breaks away in the form of a perfect goose, exercising all the functions of its kind."

Getting Quick Action.

"The gambling instinct, once aroused, will make the victim gamble with anything," said a Detroiter. "I saw two gamblers meet the other day and indulge in a quick gamble with 50 cent pieces. 'Odd or even?' asked the first. 'Odd,' said the second. And the man with the odd date on the coin won. His half dollar was dated 1879. The other was dated 1880. Another game is played with dollar bills. It is 'greenback poker,' and was hatched in Washington. Each bill bears a series number—say, 99667634 or the like. In the number cited are two nines and three sixes—a 'full house.' The next man may have a bill numbered 72243899. He has, you observe, two pairs.

"'High wins,' the players say on meeting, each holding his bill out of sight. Then they compare and settle up. 'Greenback poker' is a good quick way to lose a whole lot of money."

Model Sickness.

The pretty girl had told the artist that she had posed before, and on the strength of that statement she got a job. She hadn't held the pose ten minutes before she turned deadly white and sank to the floor.

"Model sickness," said the experienced artist after she had gone. "I knew she was lying, for the first timers always get it. It is as well defined a complaint as seasickness and has to be treated the same way. It is a form of nausea and is caused as much by the nervous strain the new model is always under as by the unusual experience of standing in one position. I have had big, strong men, even negroes, go the same way. It is something every artist has to make allowances for, and only practice can cure it, although I know old models who still suffer from it, especially if they are in an awkward pose."—Exchange.

Some Words Beginning With H.

Most persons aspirate the initial letter of "humble" nowadays and write "a humble" just as they write "a humbug" or "a humming bird." But there are very many who would not naturally sound an h in "humble," or in "herb," "hospital," "homage," or even "humor." Before the nineteenth century nobody did, though it is clear that the aspirate had become regular by "David Copperfield's" time, from the fact that Dickens harps on Uriah Heap's "'umble." The insistence on the h is comparatively modern; mediaeval men not only said "abit" for "habit," but wrote it so and the Bible has "an Hebrew."

Literally Translated.

On visiting Ireland the great traveler Livingstone was much feted. In Dublin at a dinner party he happened to be placed next to a literary lady who was a very stout woman. She worried him greatly about the language of the savage cannibals among whom he had managed to live and wanted to know the sound of their language. He spoke a sentence of it to satisfy her, and she answered, "Being translated, what does that mean?" "It means," he replied, "there is great cutting on you."

Tobacco Penalties.

The shah of Persia, in the seventeenth century, proclaimed that every soldier in whose possession tobacco was found should have his lips cut; while in the same century Massachusetts ordered that "no person shall take tobacco publicly, and any one shall pay one penny for every time he is convicted of taking tobacco in any place."

Nerve.

"Bigbee has a nerve."

"Why so?"

"I threatened to sue him for the $100 he owes me."

"Yes?"

"And he asked me to sue him for $200 and give him the other hundred."

Friends and Enemies.

Be assured that those will be thy worst enemies not to whom thou hast done evil, but who have done evil to thee. And those will be thy best friends not to whom thou hast done good, but who have done good to thee.—Lavater.

In Short.

"Chumpleigh was down to the club last night and started telling us one of his long winded stories."

"About that horse of his, I suppose?"

"Yes, and we docked his tale."

Mother's Discipline.

This is the way a mother disciplines: She spanks her child for crying for a slice of cake, and then when it cries because of the spanking, she gives it the whole cake to comfort it.—Atchison Globe.

The Rise in the River.

It is little short of astonishing to see how little water is required to float the southern river steamers, a boat loaded with perhaps a thousand bales of cotton slipping along contentedly where a boy could wade across the stream. Once, however, the Chattahoochee got too low for even her light draft commerce, and at Gunboat shoals a steamer grounded. As the drinking water on board needed replenishing, a deck hand was sent ashore with a couple of water buckets. Just at this moment a northern traveler approached the captain of the boat, and asked him how long he thought they would have to stay there.

"Oh, only until that man gets back with a bucket of water to pour into the river," the captain replied. Presently the deck hand returned, and the stale water from the cooler was emptied overboard. Instantly, to the amazement of the traveler, the boat began to move.

"Well, if that doesn't beat thunder!" he gasped.

The fact was that the boat, touching the bottom, had acted as a dam, and there was soon backed up behind her enough water to lift her over the shoal and send her on down the stream.

JAVA'S ISLAND OF FIRE.

It Is Really a Lake of Boiling, Bubbling Mud and Slime.

The greatest natural wonder in Java, if not in the entire world, is the justly celebrated "Gheko Kamdka Gumko," or "Home of the Hot Devils," known to the world as the Island of Fire. This geological singularity is really a lake of boiling mud situated at about the center of the plains of Grobogana and is called an island because the great emerald sea of vegetation which surrounds it gives it that appearance. The "island" is about two miles in circumference, and is situated at a distance of almost exactly fifty miles from Solo. Near the center of this geological freak immense columns of soft, hot mud may be seen continually rising and falling like great timbers thrust through the boiling substratum by giant hands and the again quickly withdrawn. Besides the phenomenon of the boiling mud columns there are scores of gigantic bubbles of hot slime that fill up like huge balloons and keep up a series of constant explosions, the intensity of the detonations varying with the size of the bubble. In time past, so the Javanese authorities say, there was a tall spirelike column of baked mud on the west edge of the lake which constantly belched a pure stream of cold water, but this has long been obliterated, and everything is now a seething mass of bubbling mud and slime.

"The Queen of Sicily."

Syracuse calls itself the capital of the south, but it has no cause to dispute pride of place with Palermo. The metropolitan city is superior in population, wealth and much else, but it is deficient in what its ancient and glorious rival has in such abundance. For Syracuse has the supreme charm of Greece in a way that no other city except Athens has. Not even in Corinth, nowhere in Hellas from Messana or Sparta in the south to Thebes in the north, is there any Hellenic town to compare with "the queen of Sicily." As a sanctuary, Delphi is far more impressive than anything in Sicily, as a national meeting place Olympia has no rival, but nowhere except at Athens is a Greek city to be seen today which has the proud record of the marvelous metropolis of the Sicilian Greeks, a city as great in power and wealth and beauty as Athena herself, and victor at last in the long and fatal rivalry which indirectly involved the passing of the Hellenistic dominion of all the lands washed by the Ionian and Mediterranean seas.—Century.

Barefooted Waiting Maids In Japan.

Unless there are ladies among the guests the wife and daughters of the host do not appear at dinner in Japan. Before the meal begins it is customary for them to bring small cups of tea and dainty confectionery, when they take their survey of the party. If gentlemen only are present the Japanese hostess disappears after the greeting is over and does not return until the guests are taking their departure. At a signal from the host barefooted waiting maids, dressed in graceful and prettily tinted kimonos, bring in lacquer tray, bearing tiny covered bowls. Before setting the trays on the table the maids sink gracefully to their knees and bend forward till their foreheads touch the floor. Then they serve dinner, which is of several courses.

A Lively Paper Cutter.

Here is a little story which the English papers tell and any one is at liberty to believe if he will. No affidavits go with it. When Lord Dufferin was viceroy of India the maharajah of Indor paid him a visit and asked as a memento an ivory paper cutter belonging to Lord Dufferin. He consented, the Indian left, and the viceroy never saw him until some months later when the maharajah introduced a fine young elephant into the room. A pile of newspapers lay at Lord Dufferin's side. The animal went up to them, cut them neatly with his tusks, which had been purposely sharpened, and laid them in a neat heap on the floor, ready for perusal.

BOGUS ANTIQUES.

Collectors Constantly on Their Guard Against Fraud.

Collectors of antiques have to be all the time on their guard against fraud. Even then they are often deceived. Artists exist who can impose on the very elect. A well known collector had a precious box of rare enamel. He sent it to Vienna to be repaired, and the ingenious mender fitted it with a new lid. Then he put a new lower part to the original lid, and two collectors were made happy.

A gem cutter took a modern gold Greek ring, recut the stone with an intaglio of an important subject, made a turkey swallow the ring and after some time killed the turkey. The residence in the bird's crop had endowed the gem with all the marks of age.

A scholar in a little known part of Dalmatia was seeking gold coins and ornaments of the old Servian dynasty. A dealer came to him with a beautifully wrought crucifix, which he claimed to be a genuine antique. In examining the article with a glass the student came across a tiny inscription, and, better versed than the dealer gave him credit for being, he read it aloud, "This cross was made in 1893 by —," giving the name of the maker it said. The dealer stood not on the order of his going, but left at once.

Many a reputed article is its own undoing. At one time a number of lead coins were put on the market as antiques. It was discovered that the Arabic numerals with which they were dated were of the fashion not invented at the supposed time of their making.

Collectors, young and old, trained and untrained, are constantly being taken in. Even museums themselves are not free from fakes.

PUMICE STONE.

The Best Quality Comes From the Island of Lipari.

We often hear it remarked, and particularly after the eruption of a volcano, that pumice stone ought to be plentiful and cheap, as quantities must have been ejected during the volcanic disturbance. As a matter of fact, however, none of the white stone in general use is obtained from active volcanoes. It comes from the deposits of the article discovered in one or two quarters of the globe, the best of which is at present to be found in the island of Lipari, situated in the Tyrrhenian sea. The island is mountainous in character and consists of tuffs and lavas and of highly siliceous volcanic products. The district where the stone is found is called Campo Blanco or Monte Petale 1,500 feet above the level of the sea.

After riding a considerable distance partly along precipitous paths sufficiently dangerous to be interesting and partly through vineyards and over grassy plains, one almost comes suddenly upon a seemingly snow clad valley, inclosed by hills also quite white, and the whole glaringly bright on a sunny day. Into those hills workmen are unceasingly digging deep burrows, working within by candlelight. In their excavations they come across many lumps of pumice stone, which are placed in baskets, subsequently being conveyed along the valley to the seashore, where small boats are loaded and sail to the seaport near by, where the stone is sorted, packed and shipped to distant parts either by way of Messina or Leghorn.

Great Britain's Rainfall.

Rainfall is a condition which has much to do with our health. A wet district with a good deal of subsoil water, making houses damp, is a locality in which rheumatism and consumption are likely to prevail. Over England and Wales the average yearly rainfall is about thirty-four inches, in Scotland it reaches forty-six inches and in Ireland about thirty-eight inches. Possibly the wettest parts of Britain are in Cumberland, where the rainfall may attain 150 inches per year. One inch of rain on one acre of ground means a hundred tons of water.—London Graphic.

Heritages.

Leave children an accumulated fortune of memories and inspirations and examples and hopes, so that they are rich in brain and heart and soul and service. Then if you happen to leave them a fortune besides, if they have all these, the fortune will be shorn of its possibilities of evil and will become an instrument of higher and nobler good.—M. J. Savage.

Protection.

Mrs. Albee—Of course, you married Mr. Bebee for love? Mrs. Bebee—Well, yes, I suppose you would call it that. I married him to protect him from no less than three widows in our street. If I hadn't snapped him up one of them would have been sure to get him.

The Great Day.

Dreamy Youth—Have you noticed that there are days when we seem more in accord with the world—more in unison with nature? Practical Youth—Yes; it is always that way with me on pay day.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—George Washington.

Nothing Wrong With Canadian Meats.

The revelations concerning the meat packing business in Chicago, whether true or false, are likely to have an adverse effect in the markets of Europe, and unless early efforts are made to offset the impression thus created Canadian products may also suffer. On the other hand, the output of Canadian packing works will meet with increased favor if means are taken to establish clearly the superior methods and the better care exercised in this country. The first motto in the packing houses of the Dominion, is Cleanliness. Under the strict system of inspection by Government veterinaries and the officials of Boards of Health, no animal with a taint of disease can find admission to one of them, or a place on the general market. And the handling and preparation of all goods sent out are on a scale according to the most sanitary methods of Denmark and Germany. Hitherto no suspicion has ever gone abroad that these methods were below the highest standard of the markets catered to in Europe. Yet our trade in this direction has been to a large extent handicapped and overshadowed by the large operations of the great firms that are now brought into such serious question. Even the British Government has been caught in large contracts owing, as was thought, to the superior facilities possessed in the United States. Consignments for the army and navy have been much criticized and often condemned in those services. Yet army contractors have gone on supplying meat for active service from such sources to the neglect of colonial products of a better class. The British Government could not do anything better calculated to cement the trade interests of the empire than by encouraging the meat industries of the colonies by purchasing supplies from them for the army and navy. If this policy could be relied on, there would be no scarcity or failure in meeting such needs, no matter what the occasion or how urgent The present crisis in the packing trade of our neighbors affords sufficient reason for a change of policy in Britain, and if there is anything in the professions of the new Liberal regime looking to the further development of imperial trade connections, it is an occasion that should not escape.

New Ontario To-day.

Last week the members of the Ontario Legislature were afforded a glimpse of pioneer life in New Ontario They rode on Pullman cars into the very heart of the new settlement. They dined at the Height of Land as sumptuously, if not as elegantly, as at any ordinary table in the rural sections of older Ontario. This does not mean that the makers of New Ontario are exempt from the toil and hardship of combat with primeval conditions. But it does clearly, emphasize—what we all know—that the march of progress has made impossible a repetition of the labors and self-sacrifice and solitude that sanctified the lives of the fathers of Old Ontario, writes Mr. Joseph Downey, M.P.P., editor of the Guelph Herald.

Sturdy are the men who have embarked in the work of building up New Ontario. They are strong of arm and stout of heart. They have confidence and self reliance and enthusiasm. They look out upon a future as bright with promise as that of any people on this continent. Mineral deposits unapproached in extent and richness; great forests of pulpwood · large areas of pine, and sixteen million acres of clay land are natural resources sufficient surely to inspire the settler with courage and confidence.

Compared with the pioneer of Old Ontario the pathway of our Northern brother is rosy. The men who broke into the wilderness in these parts early in the last century bore on their backs the burden now carried by the iron horse into New Ontario. Twenty, thirty and even forty miles the pioneer of old Ontario carried his grist to the mill, happy if he accomplished his journey without interference from the packs of hungry wolves that roamed the forest. Papers by the noon mail!—why weeks and months went by and the doings of the outside world were to him as a sealed book. It was only after the clearing had widened into the settlement and from the settlement a town had risen, and the solitude of the past had given place to the comfort and happiness of neighbors and schools and churches, that the railway came.

The makers of New Ontario are a sterling people—worthy specimens of the greatest colonizing race that the world has ever seen. And they will succeed beyond all question, if in the performance of their great task they gather inspiration from the records of the heroes who cheerfully and silently sanctified their lives to the building of Old Ontario.

The County Council.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

County Council met at 2 p.m., Warden Lancaster in the chair.

After the Council had been called to order the Warden addressed the members briefly. He said the session they were about commencing would be an important one, as considerable business was before them. The matter of equalization would have to be dealt with, and the estimates would have to be struck. Some work had been done towards the building of the House of Refuge, and no doubt the Council would have some matters in this connection to deal with.

His Honor called attention to the dangerous condition of a County bridge within a mile and a half of Bancroft. This structure had been condemned, and it was unsafe to travel Something should be done about this bridge, as it was in a portion of the County quite extensively travelled.

The following communications, etc., were read by the Clerk;

From the Fruit Growers' Association. asking for a grant of $25 towards prizes to be given at the annual show at Toronto in November next.—Referred to Ways and Means committee

From J. S. Robertson, asking for a contribution towards the maintenance of the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives.—Referred to Ways and Means committee.

From the secretary of the Chief Constables' Association of Canada, stating that the annual meeting would be held in September and asking the Council to send its High County Constable. — Referred to Ways and Means committee.

From Mr. H. R. Bedford, of Deseronto, stating that he had been appointed Police Magistrate for Tyendinaga township, without salary. — Referred to the Committee of the Whole on communications.

From Robert Lyle, of Madoc, stating that a meadow belonging to him had been ruined owing to a county drain being cut of repair.—Referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

A petition was presented asking for the opening up of a road through certain lots in the Township of Tudor.— Referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

A petition was presented from the Hastings County Telephone Company, asking permission to erect poles upon certain county roads.—Referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

Mr. C. E. Guntor addressed the Council in reference to the petition from a number of ratepayers in the Township of Tudor, asking for a grant of $200 towards building a road in the Township. He hoped the Council would grant the request.

The matter was promised to be brought up in Council.

Mr. Drayeup, of Rawdon, addressed the Council in reference to asking permission to have the use of the crusher for two days to crush material for a road near his place. Those who would be benefited were willing to pay the expenses.

Mr. Rogers moved that the crusher be hired to the Township of Rawdon for the purpose asked for.

Mr Tumelty seconded the motion.

Mr. Macfarlane objected to the principle of loaning the crusher to any municipality or any individual. If it was loaned to one municipality there would be others asking for the same privilege. He moved in amendment that no action be taken.

Mr. Farley did not think the crusher should be hired out or loaned to any municipality.

After some discussion the matter was laid over for further consideration.

THE GIRL AND THE BEE.

A Story of the Ignorance of a City Girl.

The city girl coming down to breakfast at the farm house and observing a plate of honey on the table said, "Oh, I see you keep a bee."

That's about the way some people talk about the blight of baldness — just as if a bald head was something one got all at once instead of being the result of long depletion by an insidious germ which thrives upon the roots of the hair and succumbs to only one known remedy, Newbro's Herpicide.

Newbro's Herpicide is not a tonic any more than electricity is a fluid. It is an exterminator, pure and simple.

Perth Man Wanted To See King Edward.

London, June 5. — A man supposed to come from Canada presented himself at Windsor Castle to-day and demanded to see the King. He was arrested as a lunatic and had a good deal of money.

The man gave the name of George Gerald Allan, farmer, of Perth, Ont. He said he wanted to see the King to enquire for Mary Anderson. She would be Queen one day if she married him. He was a son of the King, charged with electricity. He tried unsuccessfully to see Sir Edward Grey, had £80 in a packet, and believed he had £1,000 when he left Canada last March.

Why everybody likes Abbey's Salt.

It is so pleasant to the taste that even children take it with pleasure.

It does not "cake" or flake on top of the water.

It effervesces slowly—may be drunk leisurely, without choking or blinding the user like seidlitz powders.

The granules all dissolve—thus the full benefit of the salt is obtained with every dose.

It is the ideal laxative and tonic to purify the blood—regulate stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels—and build up the system.

Mr. Northrup's Speech

ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The deputy minister was asked in the committee about this bill and about his visit to the office in Amsterdam, which visit was so vividly described by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other day, and the House will remember that the deputy minister visited Amsterdam on a tour of inspection, paid for, not out of his own pockets, but by the people of this country, because he went there to ascertain all about the company, and the House will remember that he wandered about Amsterdam until he found the office, but could not remember what storey the office was on. He did remember, however, when he reached it, the door was locked and there was no one about the premises. But on making subsequent inquiries it turned out that things were not quite so bad as they appeared, because every few days a boy did come to take the mail from the door. According to the then deputy minister, Mr. Smart, the expenses of that office from July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902, were as follows:

Office rent, salaries to clerks, postage and commissions, 32,529.15 marks.

And when he was asked an explanation of that, he said it was because postage was a very heavy item, and postage and all the other items would naturally be charged up against the head office. But his attention was called to the last item, remuneration to different subagencies for postage and propaganda, 12,325 marks. It is for the House to consider whether, in view of the evidence of Mr. Smart—not a statement made by a member of the opposition, not a canard published in the Conservative press, not a story that may have floated across the Atlantic coming no one knows whence and received by no one knows whom, but the sworn evidence of the ex-deputy himself, who made an official visit at the expense of the people to find out the state of affairs at Amsterdam — I say it is for the House to judge, in view of this, whether this contract has been duly carried out and whether these charges have been properly made.

There is another significant feature about that account. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads this House, may remember that in the year 1903 he received a letter from one Ennis, asking him to use his best endeavors with the Canadian Government to see that he, poor, unfortunate, unpaid Ennis, should receive the remuneration to which he was entitled under his contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company. It turned out that he had been the agent of this company in Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Finland, and though he had done their work, and done it well, the company refused to pay him. He was pressing them for payment, and there is a letter on file from the company showing that they had advised him to write to Ottawa because they had not been paid all that was coming to them from Ottawa. And so Ennis wrote to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister referred the matter to the Department of the Interior. The letter from Ennis is on file, showing that he feels grievously hurt because he has not been paid for his services as representative of the North Atlantic Trading Company in the four countries I have named. And what was the contract between Ennis and the North Atlantic Trading Company? The documents on file show that for every emigrant from Denmark, he was to be paid 4 kroner, or $1.04, and for every emigrant from Norway, Sweden or Finland, he was thankful to receive 2 kroner, 52c per head. Does it strike the members of this House that the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) made a business arrangement, that he acted with that sagacity with which he is credited, that he acted with that honesty which he ought to possess, when he made a bargain with this company, which they were able to sub-let so profitably that, whereas they received $5 per head for doing nothing, the man who did the work was to receive 52c for work in any of the three countries, and $1.04 for the other.?

Now, when the ex-deputy minister went to Amsterdam and visited this office, he knew of this letter from Ennis, for it had been in his possession for a year. That was enough, surely, to make him suspicious as to the manner in which the affairs of the company were being carried on. But, more than that, he had also this account for 105,000 marks, which I have just read. A report on that account had been sent to the department on that account by Mr. W. D. Scott. And, if I might be allowed to diverge for a moment from the strict line from the subject before us, I would like to say, in justice to the sub-ordinate officials of the department that, after a considerable time spent in reading the files in connection with this case, I am deeply impressed with the fact that, whatever the heads of the department may have done, or may not have done, the subordinate officers of the department have diligently, laboriously, and faithfully striven to do their duty in the positions in which they are placed. I say there is a report on this account from Mr. W. D. Scott. It is dated June 11, 1903. In this report Mr. Scott criticises pretty severely this bill of 105,000 marks which had been sent by this company. He criticised it so severely that Mr. Smart had to write to Mr. Preston on the subject, and, in writing, he repeats the figures given by Mr. Scott. And so we see that, at the very time when Mr. Smart visited this office in Amsterdam, in 1904, he had in his mind—or should have had — the apparent fraud that had been perpetrated by this company, as shown by the analysis of their account of the previous year made by Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott calls attention to the facts in this way:

"Of the whole 105,325.10 marks, which is equal to $25,067.37, I find that the main part of this account is for office rents, salaries of clerks, postage, commissions, sub-agencies, and that of this total 19,202.10 marks or $4,570.10 has been actually used for advertising."

And what kind of advertising?

"I find the large portion of the advertising is not of the character at all that the department could approve if it had been submitted in accordance with the agreement before the publications were made."

To be continued.

FRISCO MOVED SEVERAL FEET.

LATITUDE AND LONGITUDE OF THE GOLDEN GATE CITY CHANGED.

Sacramento, Cal., June 4.—The preliminary report of the State Earthquake Investigating Committee was received yesterday at the office of Governor Pardee. Under the heading of "The Result," the report says:

"One of the remarkable features of the coast range of California is a line of peculiar geomorphic construction which extends obliquely across the entire width of the mountainous belt from Mendocino county to Riverside county. The surface feature along this line has been formed by a dislocation of the earth's crust, or a series of dislocations in times past, with a differential movement of the parts on either side of the plane of rupture." The movements that produced the line are attributed to separate earthquakes extending back into the quaternary period. In general terms the causes of these movements are attributed to the theory that stresses are generated in the earth's crust and accumulate until they exceed the strength of the rocks composing the crust and find relief in a sudden rupture. The earthquake of April 18 is said to have been due to one of these movements, and the rift is described as extending from the vicinity of Point Arena to the neighborhood of San Juan, a distance of 185 miles. The evidence of the rupture and of the differential movement is clearly defined in a continuous furrow in the surface soil several feet wide. The average horizontal displacement is 20 feet wide. In Sonoma and Mendocino counties there is a different vertical movement not exceeding four feet.

"In consequence of this movement," the report goes on to say, "it is probable that the latitudes and longitudes of all points in the coast range have permanently changed a few feet. A complete study of the phenomena will undoubtedly contribute greatly, not only to our knowledge of the evolution of the earth's crust, but also to our knowledge of the means of minimizing the calamities which arise from the destruction of buildings and water pipes when such shocks occur in the future Modern classes of structures appear to have been relatively passive, while the 'made' ground in the vicinity was profoundly disturbed. The weak points in frame buildings were the faulty undermining, lack of bracing and the chimneys. Pipe lines on low, swampy ground, or 'made' ground are in greater danger of destruction than those on high ground underlaid.

"In San Francisco the most violent destruction of buildings was on 'made' ground, which behaved as jelly in a bowl. The minor shocks continued for many days after April 18, and in this respect the earthquake accords in behavior with other earthquakes in the past. The minor shocks which succeeded the main one are interpreted generally as due to subordinate adjustments of the earth's crust in the tendency to reach equilibrium after these chief movements."

WEAK KIDNEYS

RESTORED TO STRENGTH BY DR. WILLIAMS PINK PILLS.

Bad blood is the cause of weak kidneys. The impurities of the blood clog the kidneys so that they are unable to perform their work of separating the waste matter from the blood—the bad from good. The symptoms of diseased kidneys are numerous. The dull sunken eye, the coated tongue, the backache, weak shaky knees, sallow, swollen face all show what is wrong. This disease must not be neglected. Every day delayed in finding a cure is a day nearer "Bright's disease" — that trouble is incurable. Do not waste time and money on a medicine which acts only on the kidneys. It may relieve, but it cannot cure you. The trouble to be permanenty cured must be treated through the blood. Good blood makes healthy kidneys. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich, red blood—that's why they cure when other medicines fail. Thousands owe good health—some life itself—to this medicine. Among them is Roy Davidson, who resides with his uncle, Mr. C. B. Maclean, near Brockville, Ont. Mr. Maclean says: "My nephew, Roy, had weak kidneys. About a year ago he took the measles and this left him in a bad state. His kidneys were so weak that they were incapable of performing their functions. He suffered from backache, weakness and restlessness. For a time he had to leave school. Our family doctor was unable to help him. In fact he told me that Roy might never get better; that the disease would probably grow worse. I then procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had already used the Pills myself with great benefit and felt confident they would cure Roy. He began taking them, and continued their use until he had taken a half dozen boxes, which fully cured him. He is now stronger and better than he ever was and neither study nor work about the farm seem to fatigue him. I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved him from a life of misery."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do just one thing—but they do that thoroughly. They actually make new, rich, red blood, which feeds and strengthens every nerve and organ in the body. That is why this medicine cures such common ailments as anaemia, general weakness, headaches and backaches, indigestion, palpitation of the heart rheumatism, neuralgia, and the ailments which make the lives of so many women and young girls miserable. Don't take something else which the dealer may say is "just as good." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealer send to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

TRI-CITY RAILWAY & LIGHT COMPANY.

Among the companies recently formed, in which Canadian capital is a prominent factor, is the Tri-City Railway & Light Co., which is a consolidation of the Street Railway, Electric Lighting and Gas Companies in the cities of Davenport, Iowa, Moline and Rock Island, Illinois. This Company controls all the business in these three public utilities in the cities above mentioned. At the present time the earnings are sufficient to pay the preferred dividends twice over, and Messrs. J. G. White & Co. the well known engineers, estimate that on the completion of the contemplated improvements, and with the economies resulting from unified management, the earnings will show handsome returns upon the common stock. Application will shortly be made to list this security on the Toronto, Montreal and New York Stock Exchanges, and it will become one of the active issues. The dividends are payable quarterly at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

Freezing Food Before Eating.

In nearly all parts of the arctic regions food is frozen not only for purposes of preservation, but also to increase, as the natives believe, its nutritive properties. Their fish and seal flesh are frozen and eaten in thin slices cut off by ax or knife. Seal flesh half decomposed and then frozen is one of the Eskimos' greatest delicacies. Walrus liver, too, when frozen is held to possess great sustaining power, and it is considered that cooking deprives it of its delicacy of flavor. The natives of the Titicaca basin, in Peru, who inhabit a district 12,000 feet above the sea, prepare their potatoes by soaking them in water, then freezing them, then steeping them in water and mashing them to remove the soluble matter. After this they are dried and become an article of food. They will then keep any length of time and are extremely convenient for carrying on long journeys. The oka, another vegetable of the district, is prepared in the same way.

The Word "Bribery."

"Bribery" is a word with a curious history. In the old Geneva Bible it is said of the scribes and pharisees that they "make clean the outer side of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of bribery." The authorized version has "extortion," and there is no doubt that by "bribery" the Geneva Bible meant robbery. "Bribery" probably meant originally a morsel, a broken off piece, but it occurs first in old French, signifying a piece of bread given to a beggar; hence the Italian "birba," vagrancy, and the old French "bribeur," a beggar or greedy devourer. "Bribe" developed in two directions, in the senses of robbery and of a present. When Falstaff speaks of "a bribed buck" he means not one that had been corrupted, but one that had been stolen.

Getting Rid of the Old Folks.

A British official tells of the curious method adopted by the natives of the innermost regions of the Kongo Free State in the disposal of their aged members when they become a burden. The infirm and aged people are rendered unconscious by means of a narcotic and in this comatose condition are wrapped in a fresh antelope skin. In this garb they are then hurried by the members of the family to a point remote from the village and abandoned in the grass near a native track. The first native that passes the spot discovers what he imagines to be an antelope and promptly dispatches it with a spear. Then the members of the deceased aged one's family emerge from hiding near by and express their great horror and surprise at the unfortunate incident, though inwardly congratulating themselves upon their success.

Volcanoes and Earthquakes.

A remarkable example of the close connection of volcanoes and earthquakes was observed by the early Spanish settlers in San Salvador. When the water in the crater lake of Ilopango rose above a certain level earthquake shocks always followed, so they cut a channel to allow of the escape of the water and prevent its rising in the crater, and for a hundred years there was no earthquake in that district. Then the precaution was neglected, the water rose in the crater and presently a violent earthquake shook the country. At the same time the lake was blown out by a volcanic eruption.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Rubinstein

ANTON GREGOR RUBINSTEIN continues the line of the so-called "brilliant" pianists that began with Liszt and ends with Paderewski. He was born of Jewish parents in Russia, 1829, and died in 1894. Receiving instruction only from his mother and a teacher named Villoing, he progressed so rapidly that in 1839, at the age of 10, he made a concert tour as far as Paris, where he remained to study technic under Liszt, and later composition at Berlin.

As a composer Rubinstein wrote in every department of music. His compositions are full of pure and genial melody and natural harmony. But with the exception of his "Ocean Symphony," his chamber-music and songs are his only genuinely popular works. In particular, his setting to Heine's "Du Bist Wie Eine Blume" and his "Melodie" (in F.)—sometimes called the "Thumb Melodie"—besides other piano pieces like "Kamenoi-Ostrow," are universal favorites.

It was, however, as a concert pianist that he achieved marvellous success. After several tours in the European Continent and England, he came to America in 1873, where he was popularly appreciated as the "Lion Pianist." But while in technic the only rival of Liszt and the most remarkable virtuoso of his time, he was no mere technician. If he could make the piano roar, he could also play with such tenderness a simple piece from Haydn or Mozart as to bring forth the tears of pure joy and sympathy. All this was possible because at the time he had to hand an instrument that later reached the acme of perfection in

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

TINKER'S CRICK.

I'll bet you that the hills are green and that the sky is blue
Above the fields where Tinker's Crick goes ca'mly windin' through;
I'll bet the orchards on the slopes out there are pink and white
And that the blossom-scented air ain't blowin' just for spite,
And I can almost seem to hear the water roarin' still
The way it used to roar across the dam below the mill.

I'll bet the fish are bitin' where the old crick sort of rests
And lazes just before it makes the bend by Deacon West's;
And them old willows leanin' out, yet clingin' there as though
They'd like a swim but didn't have the courage to let go.
And, further down, the covered bridge —I see it in my mind
As plain as if 'twere yesterday I'd left it all behind.

The city's lively and it's big, and there's a lot to see,
And I'm not claimin' that it hain't been mighty good to me;
I like the chance it gives a man, I like the noise and crowd,
The boys are gettin' famous here—they make me mighty proud—
But 'long about this time of year it's kind of hard to stick,
When things are as you know they are out there by Tinker's Crick.

At Bremerhaven, Germany, there was launched recently the biggest sailing ship in the world. The length of the craft is 438 feet, her breadth is 54 feet, and she is of 8,000 tons burden. The vessel is constructed of steel, displaces 11,350 tons of water and is rigged as a five-masted ship. Heretofore the largest vessels of this class, called by marine men "wind jammers," were the German ships Preussen and Potosi. These ships exceeded greatly the bounds supposed to be the limit of size of wind driven vessels.

There is an aspect of Mr. J. J. Hill's project for the construction of some 1,300 miles of new railway in Canada that is attracting a good deal of attention, and is being discussed by those interested in railway finance as something of a novelty in modern capitalization. It is a fact that Mr. Hill proposes to build all this track on the cash-stock principle. The amount of stock required for the construction and equipment of the road is put down at $30,000,000. The Winnipeg terminals alone are estimated to cost $3,000,000. It will be interesting to see how far Mr. Hill's experiment, assuming that he carries it out as he has outlined it, will justify what looks like a return to the original and simpler method of railway finance.

United States fishermen have a wholesome respect for the cruiser Canada. Captain Goodwin, of the Ella M. Goodwin, reported having seen the Canadian cruiser, which is patrolling Nova Scotia waters to guard against infringement of the three-mile limit, and says that she is a very swift craft. This is the vessel which, in company with the tug Gladiator, captured the schooner Raymah, of Boston, and Parthia some weeks ago. He says she has three guns on each side, and is not unlike a torpedo boat destroyer. He judges she is capable of making twenty miles an hour. The Canada, lying in under the high bluffs of the shore, cannot very well be seen from seaward, and she finds it an easy matter to pounce out upon the unwary fisherman that might happen to drift within the three-mile limit. 'When she comes,' says Captain Goodwin, "she goes like a streak."

A clever farmer has discovered that four-leafed clovers may be grown as successfully as the ordinary three-leafed kind, the success for the four-leafed shamrock as a thing of the past. Just why that particular farmer was experimenting along that line is a splendid example of the spirit which is actuating all commerce to-day — the demand that every sort of thing be made to produce more than its original yield. He claims that by developing his clover to a four instead of three-leafed kind, he is increasing his product by a third. Such a scientific way of working plays havoc with charms and superstitions the world over — very good when it comes to dispelling some false fear which was really having a bad effect upon some one's mind, but rather sad, after all, when it comes to putting away belief in fairies, and in all the beautiful myths and legends, from Santa Claus down.

Several leading London physicians are now advocating the use of handkerchiefs made of paper. This is not only with the idea of preventing the spread of consumption, but a myriad of other diseases. It is argued that a linen handkerchief, which is carried in the pocket and becomes heated, is necessarily a disseminator of undesirable germs, and with the aid of the laundries, a constant circulation of deadly organism is kept up. It is customary in many English sanatoria to supply patients with paper handkerchiefs, which, after used are placed in receptacles, where they are immediately cremated.

In his budget speech the English Chancellor of the Exchequer astonished the House of Commons with the figures of the decline in the consumption of drink in the habits of the people of Great Britain. From the year 1900 to the year 1905, it appeared, the reduction of the amount of wine consumed was from 17,150,000 to 11,156,000 gallons; in the consumption of foreign and colonial spirits from 9,350,050 gallons to 6,180,090; in home-made spirits including whiskey and gin, from 36,716,000 gallons to 32,490,000; and in beer from 36,500,000 barrels to 33,580,000. He attributed this to the spread of temperance sentiment in the country.

Changes From a Fish to a Bird.

The story of the early life, transformation and final death of the Chinese quail is the most remarkable that is found in the ornithological literature of the world. The narrative in all its unreasonableness is found in the story of om chung, which is the name the Chinese quail is known by when at home in the Flowery Kingdom. Celestial authorities on bird lore declare that no specimen of om chung was ever known to live a year; that they do not lay eggs, as all other known species of birds do, and, finally, that their progenitor is a slimy, four jointed worm, which has a red head and a sting on the end of its tail. This queer seacoast worm, according to the curious legend of om chung, lays 100 eggs annually. Fifty of these become fish and the other fifty are worms of the same species as the parent. The fish that has come into existence in this curious manner also lays 100 eggs a year. Fifty of these become water denizens after the image of their parent, and the others become birds of the famed om chung family. These om chungs, or Chinese quails, never breed, and are only brought into existence as above related. We give the above not as a literal fact, but as a specimen of the Chinese idea of evolution.

The East Side.

"A city's slums," said a globe trotter, "are always in its eastern quarter. I wonder why? Take New York. Its east side is its slum side. So it is with London. The east end is the slum end. Of Philadelphia, Chicago, Canton and Madrid the same thing holds good, as I know from personal experience. The only possible ground I can give for a city's slums being invariably in its eastern quarter is that this quarter is the one that is exposed to the harsh and unpleasant rigors of the east wind."

"Tell me," requests the young person, entering the study of the gray bearded philosopher, "what is the difference between friendship and love?"

ANATOMY OF AN OYSTER.

The Bivalve's Organs and Where They Are Located.

Every oyster has a mouth, a heart, a liver, a stomach and other necessary internal organs, including a set of cunningly devised intestines. The mouth is at the small end of the oyster's body, near the hinge of the shell. It is oval in shape, and, though not readily discovered by an unpracticed eye, it may be easily located by gently pushing a blunt bodkin or similar instrument along the folds of the surface of the body at the place mentioned. Connected with the mouth is the canal which the oyster uses in conveying food to the stomach, from whence it passes into the curious little set of netted and twisted intestines referred to in the opening.

To discover the heart of an oyster the fold of flesh which oystermen call the "mantle" must be removed. This is fatal to the oyster, of course, but in the interest of science and for the benefit of the "curious" it is occasionally done. When the mantle has been removed the heart, shaped like a crescent or horned moon, is laid to the view. The oyster's heart is made up of two parts, just like that of a human being, one of which receives the blood from the gills and the other drives it out through the arteries. The liver is found in the immediate vicinity of the heart and stomach and is a queer shaped little organ, which is supposed to perform all the functions of a blood filter.

Biographies as a Stimulus.

We cannot help living in some degree the lives of heroes who are constantly in our minds. Our characters are constantly being modified, shaped and molded by the suggestions which are thus held. The most helpful life stories for the average youth are not the meteoric ones, the unaccountable ones, the astonishing ones, like those of Napoleon, Oliver Cromwell and Julius Caesar. The great stars of the race dazzle most boys. They admire, but they do not feel that they can imitate them. They like to read their lives, but they do not get the helpfulness and the encouragement from them that they do from reading the lives of those who have not startled the world so much. It is the triumph of the ordinary ability which is most helpful as an inspiration and encouragement. The life of Lincoln has been an infinitely greater inspiration to the world than the life of Napoleon or that of Julius Caesar.—O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

Bulldogs a Menace to Health.

The bulldog is a menace to health. We have this on the authority of a noted French physician, who says that because of his large mouth the bulldog is a great purveyor of disease, especially of consumption, diphtheria and the like, as the dribbling from the heavy, loose jaws is incessant. Those who fondle bulldogs do so at a great risk. He traces many cases of infectious disease, especially among young children, to households in which bulldogs are kept as pets. When we add to this the invariable ferocity of the beast, the danger to which children and other innocent and defenseless people are exposed whenever he roams the streets or highways, we have an argument in favor of his disposal that cannot be gainsaid. Away with bulldogs!

If City Noises Jar You.

Get some spermaceti, roll a wad large enough to fill the ear orifices, put it in a piece of fine cotton cloth tied with thread and insert into ears on retiring, pressing it quite firmly therein so that the ball of spermaceti will closely fill up all the air space in the ears. You will find it quite effective for barring noises, and hence inducing "nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," to get in its good work. This ear plug is harmless and cheap. It helped me out greatly years ago amid the city's din, my sense of hearing being intensely keen and temperament neurotic. It is worth a trial, and I have no patent on it.

SCHUYLER STAUNTON

Valcour uttered a groan of baffled rage; Piexoto swore horribly in a scarcely audible tone, and the Minister of Police laughed.

"Good God!" cried the Emperor, with staring eyeballs, "the vault is empty!"

CHAPTER XVII.

With a bound I stood within the grim vault and searched its confines with anxious eyes. True enough, the place was empty. Not a scrap of paper, a book, or a bank-note had been left there. The shelves that lined the walls were as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard.

The records of the Revolution were gone. The body of Miguel de Pintra was gone. Thank God, the great and glorious Cause was as yet safe!

Valcour was on his hands and knees, prying into the corners for some scrap t0hat might have been overlooked.

Paola stood beside me with the old aggravating simper upon his face, twirling one end of his moustache.

Suddenly Valcour stood up ahd faced him.

"Traitor!" he cried, with a passionate gesture, "it is you who have done this! It is you who have led us here only to humiliate us and laugh at us!"

"Your Majesty," said Paola, without moving his head, "will you kindly protect me from the insults of your servants?"

"Have peace, Valcour!" growled the Emperor. "Senhor Francisco has proved his loyalty, and doubtless shares our chagrin. Come, gentlemen, let us leave this dismal place."

I followed slowly in the train of the party as it wound its way through the narrow passage and up the iron stairs into the library. My hand-cuffs had been removed when I was brought to open the vault, and an idea came to me to lag behind and try to effect my escape from the house.

But Valcour was waiting for me at the trap door, and called Captain de Souza to guard me. I was taken to the large room on the ground floor, from whence they had brought me, thrust through the doorway, and the key turned upon me.

Piexoto had been taken elsewhere, and I found myself alone.

My thoughts were naturally confused by the amazing discovery we had just made, and I was so engaged in wondering what had become of Dom Miguel and the records that I scarcely looked up when the door opened to admit Francisco Paola.

He had in his hand a small parcel that looked like a box, which he placed upon a table near the open window.

Next he drew a note-book from his pocket, scribbled some lines upon three several leaves, and then, tearing them out, he reached within the box, taking care to lift but a portion of the cover, and busied himself some moments in a way that made me wonder what he could be doing. I had no suspicion of the truth until he carried the box to the window and quickly removed the cover. Then, although his back was toward me, I heard a rapid flutter of wings, followed by a strange silence, and I knew that Paola was following with his eyes the flight of the birds he had liberated.

"So, my dear Minister, I have at last discovered your secret!" said a sharp voice, and as Paola whirled about I noted that Valcour had entered the room and was standing with folded arms and eyes that sparkled triumphantly.

"Orders to my men," remarked the Minister, quietly, and brushed a small feather from his arm.

"True enough!" retorted Valcour, with a bitter smile. "Orders to General Fonseca, whom you strangely overlooked in making your decoy arrests. Orders to Sanchez Bastro, who is to distribute arms to the rebels! And where did the third pigeon go, my loyal and conscientious Minister of Police? To Mazanovitch, or to that Miguel de Pintra whom you falsely led us to believe had perished in yonder vault?"

He came close to the Minister.

"Traitor! In setting free these birds you have fired the torch of rebellion; that terrible flame which is liable to sweep the land, and consume royalist and republican alike!"

"Traitor! In setting free these birds you have fired the torch of rebellion."

Paola, the sneering smile for once gone from his face, gazed at his accuser with evident admiration.

"You are wonderfully clever, my dear Valcour," said he, slowly. "You have wit; you have a clear judgment; your equal is not in all Brazil. What a pity, my friend, that you are not one of us!"

Somehow, the words seemed to ring true.

Valcour flushed to the roots of his hair.

"I hate you," he cried, stamping his foot with passion. "You have thwarted me always. You have laughed at me—sneered at me—defied me! But at last I have you in the toils. Francisco Paola, I arrest you in the name of the Emperor."

"On what charge?"

"The charge of treason!"

Paola laughed softly, and in a tone denoting genuine amusement.

"Come, my brave detective," said he; "we will go to the Emperor together, and accuse each other to our hearts' content!"

He attempted to take Valcour's arm, in his inimitable jaunty fashion; but the spy shook him off and followed Paola from the room, trembling with suppressed rage.

For my part, I knew not what to make of the scene, except that these men were bitter enemies, and each endeavoring to destroy the other. But could Valcour's accusation be true? Had the torch of revolution really been fired?

God forbid that I should ever meet with such another man as Francisco Paola again! Deep or shallow, coxcomb or clever conspirator, true man or traitor—it was as impossible to read him or to judge his real character as to solve the mighty, unfathomable secrets of Nature.

One moment I called him traitor; the next I was sure he was faithful to the Cause. But who could judge the man aright? Not I, indeed!

Thus reflecting, I approached the window and looked out. Eight feet below me one of the Uruguayan guards paced back and forth upon the green lawn, his short carbine underneath his arm, and a poniard swinging at his side.

The fellow looked up and saw me.

"Close that window!" he commanded, with a scowl.

I obeyed, sliding the sash to its place. But still I gazed through the glass at the labyrinth of walks and hedges defining the extensive gardens at this side of the house. I knew every inch of these grounds, having wandered there many hours during my sojourn at the mansion. And the thought came to me that it would not be difficult to escape in that maze of hedge and shrubbery, had I once a fair start of my pursuers.

Within my range of vision was a portion of the driveway, and presently I saw the Emperor's carriage roll away, followed by several others. Piexoto was seated in the last of the carriages, but only a small portion of the Uruguayan guard accompanied the cortege.

I tried to see if the Minister of Police was among those who were returning to Rio, but was unable to note his presence in the brief time the carriages were in view. Nor did Valcour seem to be with them. Captain de Souza evidently remained in charge of the guards left at the mansion.

Well, I longed to leave the place myself, now that the emptiness of the secret vault had been disclosed; but for some reason my captors desired me to remain a prisoner.

The day dragged wearily away. One of the Uruguayans brought me food at noontime, and I ate with good appetite. The room grew close, but when I attempted to raise the window the surly guard outside presented his carbine, and I respected his wish to leave the sash lowered.

During this time I had ample opportunity to speculate upon the astonishing events of the morning; but my attempt to solve the problem of what had become of Dom Miguel and the records seemed absolutely futile. That the body of the chief had been removed by some friendly hand—the same that had saved the funds and papers—there was no doubt whatever. But when had this removal taken place?

At one time a fleeting hope animated me that the vault had been entered in time to save Dom Miguel from suffocation; but a little reflection soon caused me to abandon that notion. Allowing that the slayer of Madam Izabel had been a patriot, and left the train at the first station beyond Cruz, he could not possibly have returned to de Pintra's mansion on the swiftest horse within eight hours of the time my friend had been entombed alive, and long before that Dom Miguel would have succumbed to the confined atmosphere of his prison.

Moreover, none of the conspirators who knew of the ring or was competent to recognize it had been on the train at the time of Izabel de Mar's death. Therefore the patriot who finally secured the key to the vault and saved the records must have obtained the ring long after any hope of saving the life of the imprisoned chief had been abandoned.

Somehow, it occurred to me that the man in the shrubbery had not been murdered by the Mexican, but by some one of our band who had promptly cleared the vault and escaped with the contents—even while the Emperor and his party were in possession of the house. The ring might have been dropped during the escape and found by the Mexican—this being the only plausible way to account for its being in his possession.

Although these speculations were to some extent a diversion, and served to occupy my thoughts during my tedious confinement, there were many details to contradict their probability, and I was not at all positive that I had discovered the right explanation of the mystery.

It must have been near evening when the door was again opened. This time a man was thrust into the room and the door quickly locked upon us.

I started from my chair with an exclamation of dismay. My fellow-prisoner was the mad Mexican!

CHAPTER XVIII.

The man did not seem to notice my presence at first. For a time he remained motionless in the position the guards had left him, his vacant eyes fixed steadily upon the opposite wall.

Then, with a long-drawn sigh, his gaze fell and wandered to the table where stood the remains of my luncheon. With a wolf-like avidity he pounced upon the tray, eagerly consuming every scrap that I had left, and draining a small bottle of wine of the last dregs it contained.

When he had finished he still continued to fumble about the tray, and presently picked up a large, two-tined steel fork and examined it with careful attention. They had brought no knife into the room, and I had scarcely noticed the fork before; yet now, as the Mexican held it firmly in his clinched fist, and passed it to and fro with a serpent-like motion, I realized with a thrill of anxiety that it might prove a terrible weapon in the hands of a desperate man.

Evidently my fellow-prisoner had the same thought, for after a time he concealed the fork in his bosom, and then turned to examine the room more carefully. His first act was to approach the window, and when he started and shrank I knew our ever-vigilant guard had warned him not to consider that avenue of escape.

Next he swung around and faced the place where I sat slightly in the shadow. The day was drawing to its close, and he had not noticed me before. A swift motion toward his breast was followed by a smile, and he advanced close to me and said, in his stumbling English:

"Aha! My American frien' to which I gave the ring! It is safe, senor? It is safe?"

I nodded, thinking to humor him. Indeed, I could not determine at that moment whether the man was still insane or not.

He drew a chair to my side and sat down.

"Listen, then, my frien'. Together we will find riches—riches very great! Why? Because we Mexicans—Careno and myself—we build the door of the big vault under this house. So? They bring us here blindfold. We work many days on the big plate with strange device cut in the steel. Careno was expert. Only one place, cut with great cunning, shot the bolts in their sockets. For myself, I am clockmaker and gem-cutter. They tell me to cut emerald so it fit the plate, and mount it in ring. Yes, it was I, Senor Americano, who do that fine work—I, Manuel Pesta!

"Then they carry us away, blindfold again, to the border of Uruguay. We do not know this house—we cannot find it again ever. So they think. But to make sure they hire men to assassinate us—to stab us to the heart in those Uruguay Mountain. Fine pay for our work—eh, senor? But, peste! Careno and I—we stab our assassins—we escape—we swear vengeance! For two year we wander in Brazil—seeking, ever seeking for the house with the vault.

"How clever they are! But we, are we not also clever? On a railway train one day we see a lady with the ring! We cannot mistake—I made it, and I know my work. It is key to the big vault! Careno cannot wait. He sit beside lady and put his knife in her heart. The train rattle along and the lady make no noise. But the ring sticks, so Careno cuts off finger and puts in pocket. Are we not clever, senor? Now we have ring, but yet know not of the house with the vault. We keep quiet and ride on to Rio. There the dead lady is carried out and all is excitement. She is Senora Izabel de Mar, daughter of Dom Miguel de Pintra. She come from her father's house at Cuyaba. This we hear and remember. Then a man they call Valcour he rush up and cry, 'Her finger is gone! The ring—where is the ring?' Aha! we know now we are right.

"So we go away and find out about Miguel de Pintra—the head of great rebellion with millions of gold and notes to pay the soldiers when they fight. Good! We know now of the vault. We know we have key. We know we are now rich! Careno and I we go to Cuyaba—we find this house—we hide in the bushes till night. Then Careno get mad for the money—he want it all, not half—and he try to murder me. Ah, well! my pistol is quicker than his knife, that is all. He is wearing ring, and it stick like it stick on lady's hand. Bah! I cut off Careno's hand and carve away the ring. It is simple, is it not?

"But now the soldiers gallop up. The house is fill with people. So I must wait. I hide in secret place, but soon they drag me out make me prisoner. What! must I lose all now—millions—millions of gold—and no Careno to share it? No! I am still clever. I keep ring in mouth until I meet you, and I give it to you to keep. When they search me, there is no ring."

He sprang up, chuckling and rubbing his hands together in great delight. He danced a step or two and then drew the steel fork from his breast and struck it fiercely into the table-top, standing silently to watch it while the prongs quivered and came to rest.

"Am I not clever?" he again asked, drawing out the fork from the wood and returning it to his breast. But I am generous, too. You shall divide with me. But not half! I won all from Careno, but you shall have some—enough to be rich, senor Americano. And now, give me the ring!"

By this time his eyes were glittering with insanity, and at his abrupt demand I shifted uneasily in my seat, not knowing how to reply.

"Give me the ring!" he repeated, a tone of menace creeping into his high-pitched voice.

I arose and walked toward the window, getting the table between us. Then I turned and faced him.

"They have taken the ring from me." I said.

He stood as if turned to stone, his fierce eyes fixed upon my own.

"They have opened the vault with it," I continued, "and found it bare and empty."

He gave a shrill scream at this, and began trembling in every limb.

"You lie!" he shouted, wildly. "You try to cheat me—to get all! And the vault has millions—millions in gold and notes. Give me the ring!"

I made no reply. To reiterate my assertion would do no good, and the man was incompetent to consider the matter calmly. Indeed, he once more drew that ugly fork from his breast and, grasping it as one would a dagger, began creeping toward me with a stealthy, cat-like tread.

I approached the edge of the round center-table, alert to keep its breadth between me and my companion. The Mexican paused opposite me, and whispered between his clinched teeth:

"Give it me! Give me the ring!"

"The guard will be here presently," said I, fervently hoping I spoke the truth, "and he will tell you of the ring. I am quite sure Senhor Valcour has it."

"Ah, I am betrayed! You wish to take all—you and this Valcour! But see, my Americano—I will kill you. I will kill you now, and then you have nothing for your treachery!"

Slowly he edged his way around the table, menacing me with his strange weapon, and with my eyes fixed upon his I moved in the opposite direction, retaining the table as my shield.

First in one direction and then in the other he moved, swiftly at times, then with deliberate caution, striving ever to take me unawares and reach me with his improvised dagger.

This situation could not stand the tension for long; I realized that sooner or later the game must have an abrupt ending.

So, as I dodged my persistent enemy, I set my wits working to devise a means of escape. The window seemed my only hope, and I had lost all fear of the sentry in the more terrible danger that confronted me.

Suddenly I exerted my strength and thrust the table against the Mexican so forcibly that he staggered backward. Then I caught up a chair and after a swing around my head hurled it toward him like a catapult. It crushed him to the floor, and e'er he could rise again I had thrown up the sash of the window and leaped out.

"Quirk! for your life—drive [illegible]"

Fortune often favors the desperate. I alighted full upon the form of the unsuspecting sentry, bearing him to the ground by my weight, where we both rolled in the grass.

Quickly I regained my feet and darted away into the flower-garden, seeking to reach the hedges before my guard could recover himself.

Over my shoulder I saw him kneeling and deliberately pointing at me his carbine. Before he could fire the flying form of the Mexican descended upon him from the window. There was a flash and a report, but the ball went wide its mark, and instantly the two men were struggling in a death-grapple upon the lawn.

Away I ran through the maze of hedge and shrubbery, threading the well-known paths unerringly. I heard excited shouts as the guardsmen, aroused by their comrade's shot, poured from the mansion and plunged into the gardens to follow me. But it was dusk by this time, and I had little fear of being overtaken.

The estate was bounded upon this side by an impenetrable thick-set hedge, but it was broken in one place

Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD)

Oven Perfection.

If you are a woman, you would revel in the huge ovens that cook Orange Meat. Much of the crisp deliciousness of Orange Meat is due to their matchless baking.

After the wheat has been cleaned, steam cooked, malted and flaked—the moist flakes are conveyed by automatic carriers to the ovens.

Endless steel screens carry the flakes back and forth, toasting each flake to a rich, golden brown—the final stage in our peerless process of converting a grain of wheat into the most perfect food known to science.

As the major part of every meal for thin people—dyspeptics—"bloodless" folk—those whose systems are "all run down"—and especially for children—Orange Meat has a place that nothing else can satisfy.

A lady in Walkerton says:—"Orange Meat is very wholesome. My brother at 81 years old, has taken a great liking to it, and I am glad, as it seems such a light wholesome food. I would recommend to those afflicted with stomach trouble."

At all grocers in 15c. and 25c. packages. Every 15c. package contains a coupon, good for premiums. 25c. or "Jumbo" package contains 2½ times the quantity of 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

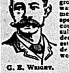
STRICTURE AND KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.



G. E. WRIGHT.

"I had stricture for eleven years. It finally brought on Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I had an uncomfortable shooting pain in the groin and feeling as though something was in the urethra. My back was weak and I could scarcely stoop over. Urine was full of sediment. Had a desire to urinate frequently. Family doctors, so-called specialists, patent medicines, electric belts, all failed. I was discouraged. I had spent hundreds of dollars in vain. Finally I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as the last resort. I had heard a great deal about them and concluded from the fact that they had been established over 25 years that they understood their business. I am delighted with the results. In one week I felt better and in a few weeks was entirely cured. Have gained sixteen pounds in weight."

A SWITCHED OVER LOAN

Mr. Ames Borrowed, Paid and Borrowed Back Again.

Senator Cox Concludes His Evidence Before the Insurance Commission—Canada Life Proceeded at Livelier Gait Under His Management—President Says He Advised Company to Increase Its Expenses.

Toronto, June 6.—The lawyers are through with Senator Cox for a little while in the investigations before the Insurance Commission. Mr. Shepley finished with the Senator before noon after a recapitulation of the examination of the day before.

Mr. Shepley's examination had brought out a fine collection of items of loans, investments and stock dealings. The biggest loan was $782,451 to A. E. Ames & Co. The securities, Metropolitan Bank stock and Sao Paulo, were recalled and a cheque was given. This was just from Dec. 31 to Jan. 2, the loan being renewed and Treasurer Watt insisted that it was not to keep these securities off the books at the end of the year.

Throughout the afternoon, Mr. Cox was examined at length on his statement that the present business of the company on a 3 per cent. basis was practically a new concern, and Mr. Hellmuth wanted to know what it would be in 1915.

A Straight Question.

Mr. Hellmuth asked: "Do you approve of life insurance companies being holders of stock in ordinary railroad companies, coal companies, etc.?"

Mr. Cox said that investments were profitable, but most of the purchases discussed were made before he was on the board at all. The company did not invest in industrials.

"Do you think it is right for a life insurance company to be a partner in a stock company?" Mr. Hellmuth insisted.

"Our own experience has been that we have lost more through investing in real estate than any other source," replied the Senator.

A "Profit and Loss" Exhibit.

Mr. Hellmuth said that in the annual statement of the Canada Life, published in Minnesota, there was a "profit and loss exhibit" not appearing in the Canadian statement. Mr. Cox explained this by saying that it was according to the Minnesota laws. It was required there, but not in Canada, but he thought perhaps this commission might consider the advisability of such a statement being required here in the future.

Why Cost Is Higher.

Mr. Hellmuth: "You explained the low ratio of the English companies by saying that their new business was inconsiderable as compared with the old companies. The ratio of old business to the new is increasing every day in the Canada Life, while the expense ratio is increasing."

"The increased cost is due to the opening up of new districts as well as writing new business," replied Senator Cox. "The excess of expense and loading would continue as long as the company went after new business."

When Mr. Hellmuth asked if any company had reached that stage, Mr. Cox replied, "Not in the Canada Life."

"It is a question where a difference of opinion is permitted. Even Mr. Sanderson, our actuary, differs with me, wanting me to go slow."

Mr. Cox stood out for branching out after new business.

Valuation of Assets.

Mr. Hellmuth slashed at that $548,000 surplus and asked if $156,000 of it was not used for making up the reserve, and further, he went into the way that the Government adjudged value as stocks. "The Government does not allow you to take the market value," Mr. Hellmuth said.

Mr. Cox protested, and said, "It would not be fair to show our assets at less than actual value."

"But," said Mr. Hellmuth, "your assets fluctuate from day to day, don't they? You might make a million dollars in a year, but your rate of interest would not change, and then you might drop a million in a day or so?"

"Wait," said Mr. Cox. "It all depends upon the market value of assets. Some of the Scotch covenants, British consols and other securities manifestly showing large profits, are seriously affected sometimes by reason of decreasing value."

Mr. Hellmuth said that these securities coming back to value left the Canada Life no worse off financially.

"It's just the reverse case," said Mr. Cox.

"You have to show your book value to the Government, don't you?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes, sir, and we do."

His Responsibility.

Mr. Hellmuth touched again on Mr. Cox's policy of strenuous development, and the Senator said he took all the responsibility of developing the business, and that the old policyholders did not have to pay for it. It was the new policyholders, who came in on a three per cent. basis, and they had to settle.

"But the actual expenses of the Canada Life have doubled in a few years," urged Mr. Hellmuth.

"I hope to see it double again,"—(laughter)—in which Mr. Cox enjoyed his own business joke.

"You don't want to see it double in percentage, do you?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

"Up to 1905 our business increased from $4,000,000 to $13,000,000," said the Senator.

"Your expenses of the company, although it was increasing its business, were not increasing themselves, on that basis. In 1895 they were $479,000; 1896, $381,000; 1897, $423,000; 1898, $439,000," said Mr. Hellmuth.

Mr. Cox: The expense rates of a life company doesn't mean very much. It might be 10 per cent. in one case or 30 per cent. in another.

His Policy.

"Now, when you came into control after the company had been going ahead without increasing its expenditure, how do you account for increase since you took charge?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

Mr. Cox: "My policy right along has been to make a more substantial increase in the business."

Mr. Hellmuth: "From 1899 to 1900 the expenses were $653,000 against $477,000. How's that?"

Mr. Cox: "The difference was to provide for an annuity for the retiring president."

"So Mr. Ramsay's annuity is provided for," said Mr. Hellmuth.

"Was provided for that year," replied the Senator.

Mr. Cox continued, in explanation, that against the increase in expenses the company had a much larger income in commissions.

"What right have you to use their money for it?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

"I want to make clear to you that it is practically a new company starting out on a three per cent. basis, and all the expenses are charged to this company," said the Senator.

"Is it to be kept entirely distinct as to reserves and otherwise from the business before 1900?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

A Prediction.

"The time will come soon when the new business will be of benefit to all connected with it," predicted the man at the head of it.

"The company never paid any profits it didn't earn?" queried Mr. Hellmuth.

"It paid most of the profits it did earn," vouched the president.

"In talking about writing down the reserve of the old company for that new business, some of your policyholders will be struck off the books unless you insure long life with your policy. In 1904 you had your entire business on a 3 1-2 per cent. basis?"

"Yes, in 1904," said Mr. Cox.

"No, in 1901," (producing a statement).

"We were then just at an end of a distribution of profits," explained Mr. Cox.

"You had to take money belonging to your policyholders to strengthen your reserve?"

The Quinquennial Profits.

Mr. Cox: Temporarily, yes sir.

Mr. Hellmuth: I am told that policyholders for quinquennial periods say from 1900 to 1910, are the losers in the profits.

Mr. Cox: My defence is this, if that man had have been a policyholder for thirty or forty years he would have received sufficient of his profits.

Then Mr. Cox read the letter, which was advice that the 3 1-2 per cent. rate was the one that would make the companies greater. While it would affect the profits of the policyholders it would enhance the safety of the insurance. This letter was from ex-President Ramsay.

Good Endorsation.

"One of the largest policyholders, and one of our cleanest and intelligent men advocated our policy," exclaimed Mr. Cox.

"How about the others?" asked the lawyer.

"They endorsed the policy which met with my approval. I take the responsibility. I am not shirking criticism."

Mr. Cox went on to say that the old policyholders could not complain because they had got out of the company more money than they paid in.

"That's what I want to get at. What right has the policyholder to complain?"

"The approval of the old policyholders is shown by increased insurance from them to the company," said the Senator.

"But they are entitled to profits if they are earned?"

"Yes, within reasonable lines," stated Mr. Cox.

Mr. Hellmuth continued by producing a sample minimum policy declared some years previous to 1895. He quoted that he had seen a number of policies where the first value had been reduced owing to the change in reserve. The policyholders had looked for profits in cash, but these profits had been wiped out to provide for the reserve.

"Have you a minimum policy with our company?" asked the Senator.

"Yes," answered the Ontario counsel.

"At what age?" (Laughter.)

"I decline to answer that," said Mr. Hellmuth.

Mr. Hellmuth wanted to know why the profits from 1901, 1894 to 1901, had been put toward the accumulation of this reserve of 265 millions, and not spread over the fifteen years. Senator Cox tried to impress the fact that, although the profits had been taken for six years only; they had been taken from three quinquennial periods. He would not deviate in the slightest from this answer.

Extricated.

Mr. Hellmuth then advanced the idea that the policyholders had profits coming since 1901 after the reserve had all been taken out, but the Senator explained that the third quinquennial period was still being paid on.

Senator Cox told the commission that he would prepare a statement showing the reason for the high rates.

Commissioner B. L. Kent tackled the Senator after Mr. Hellmuth had concluded, and the answers amounted to "The solution of the 'rebate' evil is punishment by law."

Commissioner Kent asked of the prospects of a new company.

"With the proper business management and energy a new company would certainly succeed," said Senator Cox. "If I was thirty years younger I would start another one, but I would be up against hard, anxious, faithful work for considerable time."

Senator Cox stepped down out of the box, his evidence before the royal enquiry having been completed.

Policyholders Organize.

Toronto, June 6.—Judge Winchester yesterday granted a charter to the Policyholders' Association of Canada. The objects of the association are to "organize holders of life and accident insurance policies and benefit certificates throughout Canada into an association for the mutual protection and benefit of the members thereof," and to obtain "legislation for the protection of holders of policies and all matters in relation to the same."

Bookmakers Fined.

Toronto, June 6.—A fine of $50 and costs or 30 days in jail was registered against J. Saunders, Arch McDonald, Jerry Jones, Alex Mitchell and John Sullivan, in the bookmakers cases, by Magistrate Denison yesterday. The judgment will be appealed and the cases against 16 others were therefore allowed to stand until October.

A STARTLING PROGRAM

Nationalize All Land and Industries of Russia.

Workmen Group of the Douma Come Out With a Most Radical Proposal—How They Propose to Bring It About—Agrarian Agitation and Fear of Possible Outrages Compel Owners to Sell for What They Can Get.

St. Petersburg, June 6.—The extent to which Socialistic theories have taken possession of the proletariat is evidenced by the agrarian program adopted by the radical peasant-workmen group in the Lower House, which aims ultimately not only at the complete nationalization of land with its attendant total abolition of private property, but the socialization of industry.

The program provides for the creation of a national land fund from the crown, church and private property exceeding a certain amount in value, the state to pay for expropriated property, and in the cities and factories and mills to be gradually transferred to the state for the benefit of the workmen.

After taking such land as needed for state and public needs, the remainder would be distributable to anybody desiring to till it, preference being given to the local agriculturists. The workers of the soil would pay an occupation tax, varying in accordance with the character and amount of ground taken.

Persons without means to purchase agricultural implements would be entitled to receive credit from the land fund.

Selling Out in a Hurry.

Yekaterinoslav, South Russia, June 6.—Owing to the agitation among the peasants in this province, the landlords are hastily selling their estates for anything they will bring.

Mohileff, Russia, June 6.—In many places in this vicinity the rural guards, who are in sympathy with the peasants, are refusing to obey the orders of their superiors.

Tula, Russia, June 6.—The agrarian movement in this province is spreading, and is assuming a threatening phase.

Veronezh, Russia, June 6.—A collision occurred here Monday between rural guards and peasants who were annexing land belonging to local proprietors. Two guards were killed.

Rides 8,700 Miles Home.

St. Petersburg, June 6.—Capt. Byleff, who left the front in Manchuria shortly after the peace treaty was signed, arrived in St. Petersburg yesterday. He rode the entire distance, about 8,700 miles, in eight months and four days. His horse, which was of English breed, was in good condition when the journey was finished. The captain's orderly, who was his sole companion, had a Mongolian mount.

Abundant Harvest in South Russia.

Odessa, June 6.—The South Russian harvest promises to be the most abundant in the last twenty years.

NEARLY WENT OVER FALLS.

Sutton Man Rescued by Daring Fireman and Policeman.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 6.—Yesterday morning at 1 o'clock a man who gives his name as Amos Sweltzer of Toronto, or St. Catharines, was discovered in the river 500 feet up from the brink of the American falls. An officer offered to rescue him with a pole, but he refused all help and was carried to within 15 feet of the falls and 35 feet out from shore.

At 2.06 a. m. he was rescued from this point by Patrolman Batts and Fireman Conroy, who went out on a 40-foot extension ladder brought to the scene from fire headquarters.

Disappeared May 31.

Toronto, June 6.—Amos Sweltzer was brought to the General Hospital from Sutton, Ont., on May 10, suffering with nervous trouble. He was put in the nervous trouble ward, but on May 31 disappeared. Sweltzer is 28 years old and a married man.

THE ARCTIC SUPPLIES

No Tenders Asked Says Deputy Minister Gourdeau.

But Witnesses Before Investigating Committee Declare They Were Quite Proper—Mr. Gourdeau Said All Supplies Purchased Can Be Accounted For Satisfactorily — Story of Capt. Bernier, Master of the Arctic.

Ottawa, June 6.—The committee to enquire into the purchase of supplies for the steamer Arctic for her trip to Hudson's Bay commenced work yesterday morning and called Col. Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who said that four expeditions had been sent north in four years to explore and patrol Hudson Bay and other northern waters to establish Canadian authority. Col. Gourdeau read the statement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the House on July 27, 1904, when $200,000 was voted to cover the voyage of the Arctic.

The vessel was to sail Aug. 15, 1904, but did not get away till Sept. 11. She returned in October, 1905. Major Moodie was in charge, and Captain Bernier was sailing master.

After the purchase of the supplies he sent H. B. Bourdeau of the Marine and Fisheries Department, to Quebec to check them off. His instructions were definite to open every parcel, except the barrels of pork, and see that the contents corresponded with a duplicate set of the orders with which he was supplied.

No Tenders Asked.

To Mr. Northrup witness said that in the purchase of supplies no tenders were called. The only stipulation made was that market prices should be paid. Captain Bernier had furnished the department with a list of the supplies wanted. Witness considered that for a three years' cruise the supplies asked for were not excessive. Captain Bernier had been asked by the department to send in this list. A quantity of the goods purchased is still on board the Arctic. Some which would not keep had been sold, but all could be accounted for satisfactorily. Only a small quantity of supplies would be necessary for this year's expedition.

Doctor Ordered Champagne.

Captain Spain, commander of the Canadian protective service, was called and said no supplies had been made under his supervision except some nautical instruments. The Minister, the deputy and himself had at first objected to the purchase of a quantity of champagne, but the ship's physician, Dr. Flood, had insisted that it was necessary. The quantity of supplies asked for seemed to be reasonable. He figured that they would last 40 men for 1,200 days.

He thought that ten cent cigars might be regarded as a little extravagant, but there was not too much tobacco. The British navy would issue a larger supply for a similar cruise. The quantity of 1,200 gallons of lime juice was not excessive. It allowed three-quarters of a gallon per month for each man. Neither was $22,000 for clothes or $55,000 for food excessive in view of conditions.

Col. Fred White, comptroller of the N.W.M.P., did not consider the aggregate order as being extravagant. The quality of the goods was of the highest. When the police were sent into the Yukon they were not supplied gratis with cigars, thirty year old ports and other luxuries. Cigars and tobacco were kept in stock, but the men had to pay for them. A reasonable supply of liquor was not only necessary, but desirable. Tobacco was a necessity.

Capt. Bernier's Story.

Capt. Bernier was examined yesterday afternoon. On June 22, 1904, he received instructions from Capt. Spain to send a requisition for food on a basis of for one man for 1,200 days. He did not know that the Arctic had become a mounted police boat, and made his requisition simply as for a ship going north. He said that he could not carry on the ship all the supplies in the requisition. In Quebec they had to repack a great many things, such as apples, flour, etc. They were repacked in tins covered with shellac. This was an added expense.

In August, 1904, Capt. Bernier said he received a further request from Capt. Spain to send a requisition for furs, clothing, boots, etc., for one man for 1,200 days. The cost would be $2,000.

In storing supplies he put the cargo in three different holds.

He left Quebec Sept. 17 and arrived at Port Burrow Oct. 1. At Port Burrow they met the Neptune and took from her a few things required for the depot. They also took on board a native and twelve dogs. There were forty-seven men on board, and one lady, Mrs. Moody, and the native. The witness said that they gave no stores to the Neptune in 1904, but gave stores to her in September, 1905, on the way back. The average number of crew and police they had to feed was fifty-four. Vessels adapted for such navigation would sail for four months of the year.

The captain said that liquor "was given out at the proper time and in the proper places." They issued liquor on Thanksgiving Day, on Christmas Day and on New Year's Day, also on St. Patrick's Day, but not on St. Jean Baptiste Day.

Capt. Bernier said that in the north men eat half as much again as they do farther south. He figured his estimates on that basis. On a long trip they had to allow also 10 per cent. for waste.

THE LANDS DEBATE.

Closed By the Defeat of Mr. Borden's Motion For a Committee.

Ottawa, June 6.—Mr. Crawford (Portage la Prairie) resumed the debate adjourned from Friday last upon R. L. Borden's motion for a special committee to investigate the abuses of the Land Department.

The Conservatives had decidedly the best of the debate. Mr. Roche (Marquette), Mr. Ames (Montreal), Mr. Sifton (Brandon) and Mr. Burrows (Dauphin) were the debaters.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier defended Mr. Oliver's right to "edit" the reports of his subordinates.

Mr. Borden's motion for a committee was lost on division—yeas 52, nays 99.

Senator Ferguson's New Senate.

Ottawa, June 6.—In the Senate yesterday Hon. Senator Ferguson resumed the debate on Senate reform, and proposed a scheme of reorganization, fixing the age limit at sixty and giving the leader of the Opposition power to select Senators in proportion to the voting strength of his party at the preceding general election.

JIM REYNOLDS, PEDESTRIAN.

Walked From Port Hope to Toronto in 21.34 and Won His Bet.

Toronto, June 6.—James Reynolds, the 55-year-old Port Hope barber, arrived at the King Edward Hotel yesterday morning at 4.34, walking from his home in 21 hours 34 minutes, on a $135 wager that he would cover the 65 miles in 24 hours. He left Port Hope at 7 o'clock Tuesday morning. His overage was 3 3-4 miles per hour.

Reynolds was accompanied on his walk by two men in a rig. One refereed and the other held the stakes. The horse gave out at the Half-Way House.

Reception at Port Hope.

Port Hope, June 6.—The reception to the junior Ontario champions of the O. H. A. last winter was tame compared with that tendered to James Reynolds last evening on his arrival from Toronto after having walked from Port Hope to the Queen City for the wager of $135. Reynolds arrived on the 7.31 train and fully 1,000 citizens turned out to greet the veteran barber. As the train pulled into the Union Station the band played "See the Conquering Hero Comes!" When Reynolds appeared on the platform cheer after cheer went forth, and a triumphal tour of the town was then made.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK TRAIN.

Engineer's Watchfulness Saved Big Soo Train Full of Passengers.

Almonte, June 6.—One of the most dastardly attempts was made one and a quarter miles west of here to wreck a C. P. R. train yesterday morning. The train was a heavily loaded passenger train, and passed through Almonte nearly on time at 3.30.

Nearing the obstruction the engineer, by the aid of the electric searchlight, say that there was an obstacle of some sort on the track, and brought the train to a standstill only a few feet from the bunch of railway ties which had been placed in a V shape across the track.

A more diabolical attempt at train-wrecking has never been attempted in Canada. The train was running 35 miles an hour.

ALTERED SAFE COMBINATION.

Young Bank Clerk Gets Away With a Big Sum.

Ottawa, June 6.—A young bank clerk named Ross, employed as teller at the branch of the Union Bank at Winchester, has been missing since May 23. He altered the combination of the safe at the bank, and a Montreal expert was required to open it.

It is said a large sum was found to be missing. It is variously stated at from $12,000 to $30,000, but sureties have covered liabilities.

Ross is but 19 years old, and had the reputation of being a quiet, steady young fellow.

Turner Drops Out of Sight.

Detroit, June 6.—S. E. Turner, chief representative in Detroit of the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Co., is missing, and numerous prominent Detroit citizens with financial claims declare that he has deliberately fled to defraud them. Col. Davidson, of Toronto, who is heavily interested in the company, has come to Detroit to pay off obligations contracted by the missing agent in the name of the company.

Municipal Slaughter House.

Chicago, June 6.—Impelled by disclosures at the stock yards, Mayor Dunne announced a new municipal ownership project Monday night. He declared himself in favor of the city owning a slaughtering plant where the packers would be compelled to kill their cattle and prepare the meat for sale to the public under strict municipal supervision.

Mail Clerk Arrested.

Winnipeg, June 6.—There have been no further developments in the mail robbery at Winnipeg Beach, although the detectives are busy on the case. Joseph E. D. Amer, mail clerk on the Calgary-Edmonton run, has been arrested on a charge of having stolen $2,000 from the mails in transit.

Teamsters' Strike Ends.

Montreal, June 6.—The teamsters of the Dominion Transport Co., who have been on strike since Monday, will return to work to-day. They have accepted the company's offer to make the overtime begin at 6 p. m., instead of 6.30. They get the old rate of $1.60 per day.

Connaught Not Coming.

London, June 6.—(C. A. P.)—Yesterday Sir John Maxwell said that the Duke of Connaught had not the slightest intention of visiting Canada. Sir John Maxwell is the inspector general of the forces and the Duke of Connaught's chief officer.

Woman Suffrage Swamped.

Portland, Ore., June 6.—George E. Chamberlain, Democrat, has been reelected Governor of Oregon by a majority of not less than 1,000. Woman suffrage was defeated by a large majority.

Woman Killed by Stone.

Montreal, June 6.—Mrs. Antoine Courtemanche, while sitting on her doorstep last night, was instantly killed by a stone falling on her head, as the result of a blast nearby.

Falls to Death.

Moosejaw, Sask., June 6.—Joseph Kerr, while assisting in boring a well near Spasqua, fell to the bottom, 110 feet, and was killed.

Chieftain Died 15 Years Ago.

THIS WAS DAN CUPID'S BUSY DAY.

BLUSHING JUNE BRIDES BOBBED UP IN PROFUSION— WEDNESDAY STILL CONTINUES THE FAVORITE DAY FOR WEDDINGS.

"Happy is the bride the sun shines on" is an old adage, but old adages, like old eggs, are not always the best. It looked rather threatening this morning, and there was a possibility that the June brides might have to be married in raincoats. Many young people of this city had their sorrows halved and joys doubled to-day. Sweet good luck to them all, and all the other brides of "leafy June," not forgetting those married in the other eleven months of the year.

ARNOLD — WEBSTER.

At 11.30 this morning the residence of Mr. Wm. Webster, Collector of Customs, situated at the corner of Bridge and Albert streets, was the scene of a pretty home wedding. The bride was his eldest daughter, Miss Grace Webster, and the groom Mr. Henry M. Arnold, who is connected with the Bank of Montreal at Brandon. The drawing-room, where the ceremony took place, was very prettily decorated with flowers for the occasion. Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, Pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, officiated. The bride was attired in a gown of cream lace, over taffeta, and wore a veil. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids were Misses Margaret Webster, sister of the bride, and Miss May Arnold, of Boston, sister of the groom. They wore dresses of pale blue organdie and carried bouquets of pink carnations. Mr. John Sargent, of this city, was groomsman. At the conclusion of the ceremony a wedding dejeuner was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of many costly and handsome gifts, among which was a mahogany table from the choir of St. Andrew's Church, of which she was a member, and a purse of gold from a number of the members of St. Andrew's congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold left on the afternoon train for a trip westward, and will then proceed to their home at Brandon. The many friends of the bride in this city will unite with The Intelligencer in wishing the young couple happiness and prosperity.

EMPSON — ORMOND.

A quiet home wedding took place at 10 o'clock this morning at the residence of Mrs. L. Ormond, Charles street, when her daughter, Miss Alice G., became the wife of Mr. Charles R. Empson, of Thurlow. The couple were unattended. Rev. R. S. Laidlaw was the officiating minister. The bride was married in a travelling suit of blue cloth, and wore a light hat. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present to witness the ceremony, at the conclusion of which the wedding repast was partaken of. The bride received many presents. The young couple left at noon for Montreal and Quebec. Upon their return they will take up their residence in the village of Foxboro.

MUMFORD—FAIRBORN.

A very pretty home wedding took place at 1.30 this afternoon at the residence of Mr. R S. Young, in Sidney township just west of the city limits. The bride was his stepdaughter, Miss Maud E. Fairborn, youngest daughter of the late Richard Fairborn, of this city, and the groom Mr Arthur J. Mumford, of Toronto. The interior of the house was tastefully decorated with flags and bunting and the couple, whilst being married, stood beneath a canopy formed of Union Jacks. Rev. R. C. Blagrave, Rector of Christ Church, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Edna Mumford, of Toronto, a sister of the groom, and the groomsman Mr. Harry Cluff, also of Toronto. The bride looked very pretty in a gown of white silk mulle, embroidered with silk, chiffon trimmings over taffeta. The bridesmaid's dress was dotted white Swiss muslin. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. Benjamin Mayo, of this city. Guests were present from Cleveland, O., Toronto, Barrie, and other places. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Mumford left on the evening train for the west.

WILLS — LYCETT.

The Rochester Democrat thus records the marriage of a former popular Belleville boy:

Miss Isabelle Lycett, of this city, on Saturday noon became the bride of Alfred Edward Wills, of Belleville, Canada. They were married at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. Charles Richards, No. 26 Phelps avenue, Rev. Charles Allison, of Trinity Episcopal Church, officiating. The bridal party was within a bower of palms and roses. Miss Lycett wore a travelling suit of blue broadcloth. The only jewels she wore were in a necklace of pearls and diamonds, presented by the groom. After the luncheon Mr. and Mrs. Wills left for the East. The journey will include New York, Boston, Providence and Portland.

GIBSON — RATHBUN.

The marriage took place in Toronto to-day of Dr. William Gibson, of this city, and Mrs. Rathbun, daughter of the late John Bell, Esq., of Belleville. Dr. and Mrs. Gibson will, it is said, go on an extended wedding tour, and will not return to this city till about the 19th inst.

DUNBAR — SILLS.

Miss Helen L. Sills, daughter of Mrs. A. Sills, who resides on Forin street, was married at 2 o'clock this afternoon, at the family residence, to Mr. Alfred C. Dunbar, of Kingston. The couple were unattended. Rev. Mr. Peake, of this city, was the officiating minister. The bride's wedding dress was of point d'esprit, over silk, and she carried a bouquet of white roses. Her going away gown was blue silk, with hat to match. After the wedding repast had been partaken of the couple left on the evening train for the east. They will take up their residence in the Limestone City.

WHYTOCK — ROLLINS.

A wedding of a quiet nature was solemnized at 10.30 this morning at the residence of Mr. Robt Rollins, West Bridge street. The bride was Miss Margaret Rollins, and the groom Mr. Walter Whytock, of Madoc Village, son of Mr. James Whytock, ex-Reeve of the village. Rev. Mr. McKay, Presbyterian minister at Madoc village, performed the ceremony. The couple were unattended. The bride's dress was of white silk, with lace insertion and lace trimmings. Her going away gown was of navy blue eton cloth. gown was of navy blue Eton cloth. handsome wedding gifts. After the guests had partaken of a bountiful repast, the couple left for the west and will visit several places of interest before returning to take up their residence in Madoc.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

RECITAL AT ST. THOMAS'.

A highly enjoyable recital was given in St. Thomas' Church last evening, in connection with the annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, now going on in this city. Mr. Spooner, A.T.C.M. organist of St. Thomas', presided at the organ, and the vocalists were Miss Maysel Stork and Mr. Milburn. Mr. Spooner, who was in splendid form, played the following programme;

"Offertoire"	Hewlett
"Andantino"	Chauvet
"Capriccio"	Lemaigre
"Andante" (Reformation Symphony)	Mendelssohn
"Marche Funebre et Chant Seraphique"	Guilmant
"Gavotte Ancienne"	Driffield

Introduction and Church Music from Wagner's "Lohengrin."

Mr. Spooner came to Belleville heralded as a fine organist. He fully lived up to that reputation last night. No more accomplished performer on that queen of instruments has ever been heard here, his pedal work being exceptionally fine. The 'Marche Funebre" and the Lohengrin music, in particular, were played in a manner par excellence.

Miss Maysel Stork, in splendid voice sang two numbers, her interpretation of "The Lost Chord" being delightful.

Mr. Milburn sang "The Way of Peace," by Lloyd, and "The Holy City," giving very sympathetic renditions of each number.

The recital was a treat to music-lovers.

An Addition To the Belleville Fleet.

Capt. Henry Smith, of the schooner Wilfrid Plunkett, who went to St. Clair a few days ago, has purchased the steambarge C. Hickox, of St. Clair. Capt. Smith will arrive here in a few days with the Hickox, coal loaded, which will be a creditable addition to our Belleville fleet.

SAMUEL GILLETT BROKE HIS NECK.

TRAGEDY IN SIDNEY TOWNSHIP YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr Samuel Gillett, a yeoman who resided in the Front of Sidney township, near White's Church, some time yesterday afternoon met with an untimely death. It appears that Gillett was in the Town of Trenton during the day and left there about 3.30 for his home. An hour later his body was found on the roadside not far from his place of abode. It was evident that the unfortunate man was in some manner, thrown out of the vehicle and in falling struck upon his head in such a manner as to break his neck, and death resulted immediately. The horses were found not far from where the body lay, and there was no indication of them having run away. The body had evidently not lain upon the roadside very long before it was found.

The victim of the accident was a man about 65 years of age and had resided in Sidney for many years. He leaves a wife and a grown-up family.

Bishop's Chaplain Resigns His Office

AS A CONSEQUENCE OF THE STRICTURES PASSED UPON HIS CONGREGATION.

Anglican circles in Kingston have been much disturbed in consequence of the vote of censure passed upon the congregation of St. Luke's Church by the Executive Committee of the Diocese, it having been alleged that they had sold the chancel of All Saints' Church to be put to anything but reverential uses. As a result of the trouble in connection with the sale of All Saints' Church building to St. Luke's, the pastor of the latter, Rev. R. S. Forneri, formerly of Belleville, has resigned the office of chaplain to the bishop. In his letter of resignation he expresses himself as mortified beyond expression by the cruel indignity put upon an innocent congregation by His Lordship's committee.

The Kingston News publishes the following correspondence in connection with the matter:

To the Editor of The News;

Kingston, June 4, 1906.

Dear Sir,—I have procured from our rector a copy of the letter which he addressed to the Bishop on the subject of the alleged desecration of the chancel of All Saints' Church. You and its readers will see from its contents, if you will kindly publish it, how undeserved was the censure passed upon St. Luke's congregation by the Executive Committee of the Diocese, at which the Bishop presided.

Yours truly,
WM. CARROLL.

Kingston, April 12, 1906.

My Lord,—Immediately after leaving Your Lordship I went to see what had become of the chancel portion of All Saints' Church. I found the building in question on a side street, nearly opposite the site of All Saints'. I was glad to see that the cross had been removed. I went next to see Mr. Carroll, one of the building committee. I found that he was also uneasy on account of a rumor he had heard that the chancel of All Saints' was being used as a cow stable. I asked him why it had not been taken to pieces.? He replied that that was the understanding with the contractor, and he did not know why it had not been carried out. He proposed then to see the contractor in the evening. He explained then that he had intended to take it to pieces and remove it, but that a man had come and made an offer for it, and he had accepted it, not imagining that it would make any difference to us how it was disposed of. From the contractor was ascertained the name of the purchaser, whom we then went to interview. He stated that he had no intention of making a cow stable of the building, but a shelter for his buggy and wagon. He said that all there was of it were the two sides and the roof. The two ends were open. He would board one of the ends up and put a window in it; the other end would be fixed for the doors. Enquiring further he told us he would remove the flooring and the flooring joists, so that his conveyances would stand on the bare ground. I told him that I would be at the expense of getting the walls of the interior washed over, so as to obliterate any sacred emblem that was there. The purchaser was willing to relinquish his claim on the property, if we would build him a drive house. But as that would cost one hundred and fifty dollars at least, we could not see how we could take that way of remedying matters. I am sorry the chancel was not taken to pieces, but Your Lordship will be glad to know that the case is not as bad as it has been represented.

I am, etc.,
R. S. FORNERI.

SELECTIONS

DEBTORS' PARADISE.

The Fine Art of Living on Credit In England.

Judge Emden's latest dictum that England is the best country in the world for people who want to get into debt is borne out by business experts, says the London Mail, who emphasize the ease with which it is possible to obtain credit in that country.

The manager of Messrs. Stubbs' debt collecting agency recently expressed entire agreement with Judge Emden. "One reason why debtors find England so profitable a place," he said, "is because of the facilities they have for evading payment. The county court procedure here is slow and cumbrous compared with the more summary methods of other countries. A man who makes up his mind to do so can often avoid payment altogether.

"A man can obtain the necessary credit with ease. Keen business competition has much to do with this. The great advertising firms, who sell everything from furniture to jewelry on the installment plan, are partly responsible. The man who wants goods on credit goes to the local tradesmen, who needs must supply him or be cut out by the installment firms. Eventually come the county court proceedings and the knowledge that there are no goods to distrain on.

"Many advertising firms sell on credit, merely asking for a small deposit and making little or no inquiries about the customer. I know a man now staying in Kent who has provided himself with both the necessities and comforts of life for years on credit.

"The upper and lower classes find it easier to get into debt than the middle classes. An army of peddling travelers sell goods, varying from tea to jewelry, to the poorer people on credit, while in the west end nearly every great business is conducted largely on the credit system. Aristocratic customers must not be offended by requests for cash.

"The businesses that suffer most in the west end are those of jewelers, tailors, dressmakers, wine merchants, hatters and provision dealers, while every firm that advertises extensively is victimized."

Another business expert bore out this view. "A professional debtor," he said, "can make quite a decent living if he is prepared to take some risk and knows the ropes. As to the west end credit system, its full extent is well nigh incredible to those not in the swim."

More Gold In the Sea.

The subject of gold in sea water and the possibility of profitably extracting it is a fascinating one. A professor in the University of Brussels, M. P. de Wilde, has taken up the subject and proposes a new method of getting out the precious metal. Sea water is treated with a strong acid solution of chloride of tin at the rate of five cubic centimeters (about one-third cubic inch) to the ton. The gold forms with the tin the compound known as purple of cassius, and when limewater is added this is fixed on the flaky precipitate of magnesium hydrate, which falls to the bottom. From this the gold is set free by the addition of potassium cyanide and can then be recovered by the usual well known methods. Professor de Wilde considers that much of the gold in sea water is thrown down to the bottom. Whether the gold can be profitably extracted by the above method does not yet appear.—London Globe.

Two Rare Books.

The National library of Belgium has just acquired two old books of great rarity. The curator had long been endeavoring to procure a copy of the first book ever printed in the Balearic isles, the "Tractatus de Regulis Mandatorum." The only copy hitherto known to exist was in the Spanish National library in Madrid. The author is the famous Gerson, and the book was printed in the Carthusian Monastery of the Trinity in Majorca. After much searching success has at last crowned the curator's efforts, though whence the treasure has been unearthed is prudently kept from public knowledge. The other book, not less rare, is a collection of the writings in prose and verse of the Catalan pler, Francesh Prats.—London Globe.

Paris Exposition For 1916.

In spite of the fact that the last Paris exposition was not a financial success and the statement that there would not be another "show" for many years, it now appears, according to Le Figaro of Paris, that a parliamentary committee has quietly planned one for 1916. The committee has been directed to draw up another report on the subject. Under the old scheme of expositions originated in 1855 the next exposition should be held after an interval of eleven years, or in 1911.

Too Much Oil on the Waters.

Oil was poured on troubled waters at Dunkirk recently with dire results. There was a violent sea, and the captain of the ship Cowrie, stranded outside the harbor, pumped 375 quarts of petroleum upon the waves. The oil unhappily stayed in the harbor, and for weeks afterward the passage of vessels was clogged with greasy water, fish were poisoned in shoals and the whole town smelled of the oil.

Relic of Old Time Surgery.

When the floor of the operating theater of the old hospital at Canterbury, England, was torn up the other day, the rings were discovered through which were passed the cords for tying patients down on the operating table prior to the discovery of anaesthetics.

George Eliot and "Romola."

George Eliot's first arrangement with the publisher of "Romola" was for no less a sum than 10,000 guineas. "As that is so very large a figure," he said, "I must run it through fifteen numbers of the Cornhill." "No," she answered; "it must finish in twelve numbers or the artistic effect of the story will be lost. I quite understand the necessity for its prolongation from a commercial point of view, so we'll say 7,000 guineas instead of the 10,000." And 7,000 guineas was accordingly paid for the copyright. Three thousand guineas seem a large sum to give up for an artistic scruple, but she did it.

Bad For Creditors.

In the faraway, benighted community of Damen, in Africa, the old fashioned method of throwing a debtor into prison, where he is safe from the tormenting visits of his creditors, is not followed. Instead, he is practically turned over to the mercy of the creditors in a literal sense. A heavy tree log is attached to his bare leg, and this he is obliged to drag after him wherever he goes. There is no escaping the creditors now, and the log remains bound to his ankle until his debts are paid.

Curiosities of Women.

Women pin from left to right; men from right to left. Women button from right to left; men from left to right. Women stir from left to right (their tea, for instance); men from right to left. Women seldom know the difference between a right and a left shoe, and if a housemaid brings up a man's boots she will nine times out of ten place them so that the points will diverge. Can these peculiarities be explained?—London Truth.

Mary, the Contrary

By HELENA SMITH DAYTON

Copyright, 1906, by K. A. Whitehead

"If it takes two to make a quarrel, we're the two," Mary Gale declared.

"Because you make mountains of golf tees, dear," Carlyle explained in a superior tone.

"How fortunate you have discovered in time what a disagreeable person I am," flashed Mary. "But let me assure you that since our engagement my diary reads like the history of a South American republic."

Frequent misunderstandings resulted in Mary declining to step into the frail craft of matrimony and selecting instead an ocean liner, remaining abroad five years.

At a reception in Mary's honor upon her return there was no one she welcomed more graciously than Carlyle. Hers was disarming cordiality.

"It's good to see you again," Carlyle repeated between laughs, for Mary's experiences were breezy.

"And it's good to see you," she echoed. "A wise woman doesn't lose her best friend by marrying him!"

"Mary," he reproved, "Paris has made you flippant; also very wonderful and awe inspiring." He glanced at her triumphant toilet.

"No; only extravagant," she corrected. "Bobbie, you should see the shops! The dear, little"—

"I'm not interested in the Paris shops," he said severely. "I want to tell you how foolish we were to let a few feathers of the imagination part us."

"They were firm facts," said Mary coldly. "I have them all down in my diary."

"Mary! Doesn't your diary bring back any delightful memories? All mine are charming."

"Your memory must be of the eliminating variety—like that of the surviving relatives of wicked persons. John's widow thinks of his nice eyes and forgets he ever brought them home blackened!" she retorted.

"YOU THINK YOU DO, BUT YOU DON'T," SHE QUOTED.

"Those were my happiest days," persisted Carlyle. "Can't we bring them back again?"

"To prove our decision of five years ago was a wise one?" sniffed Mary.

"I'd be willing to try it," he dared her.

"Very well," assented Mary. "Like veterans around a stove, we'll refight the battles of the glorious past."

The plan was made to go from place to place in Carlyle's motor and visit the scenes of old quarrels.

"Where first?" asked Carlyle as they were speeding down the avenue the next morning in his car. "Have you your guidebook?"

Mary promptly drew forth a red diary.

"Country club," she directed.

"The quarrel?" he smiled when they were seated in comfortable chairs on the piazza.

"Because I was pleasant to Bertie Hillard," she blushed, "to punish you for being late."

"Unreasonable of you to be angry because I was late, Mary. In those days business kept me tied down."

"You were always late," defended Mary. "I spent most of my time waiting for you."

"There's Bertie now," said Carlyle. "But we won't quarrel about him any more. He's married."

"There are," admitted Mary, "worse faults than being late."

"I'm not so busy now, so you see our quarrels haven't stood the test of time," hinted Carlyle.

"It takes more than two quarrels to break an engagement," said Mary, flipping the pages in her diary. "Our next one occurred beneath the tree near the fourth green." There was something businesslike in her manner as she led the way across the links.

"Like old times," commented Carlyle.

"I haven't arrived at an age to enjoy living in the past," said Mary crisply.

"The present is good enough," agreed Carlyle, as they sat down on a rustic bench. "I'm glad you are willing to bury the past."

"I meant nothing of the kind," stormed Mary. "We will now take up the quarrel that marks this spot."

"Why, this is where I told you I loved you!" declared Carlyle. "Let me see that book." He extended his hand, but Mary shook her head.

"You can't!" she said.

"Little girl, don't you suppose I remember distinctly what happened here? Instead of reviving old quarrels let's start all over again beneath this dear old tree." Carlyle's voice was compelling.

Mary's face was averted as she answered.

"There would be new quarrels. I make mountains of golf tees!"

"I'll agree to be compatible to all your incompatibilities," he smiled. "I love Mary when she's contrary."

"You think you do, but you don't," she quoted. Then, with a scream of terror, she jumped on the bench, for coming toward them was an amiable looking cow. Mary's terror was not affected, for she made no distinctions in bovines.

"Mary," said Carlyle, with a solemn air, "we are in peril. Here, that red book would divert the animal." Before Mary could protest, her diary was thrown as a hostage to the enemy. Carlyle followed her as she fled toward the clubhouse.

"We might have been killed!" gasped Mary, sinking into a chair.

Carlyle concealed with difficulty his elation at the fate of the volume which kept injuries fresh in Mary's mind. Then a disquieting thought struck him. Suppose Mary's diary were found?

"Mary," he said. "I'll go and find your book. Some one may read it."

"No, no, no!" cried Mary excitedly. "You mustn't!"

Unheeding, he moved off.

"Bobby, for my sake don't go!"

There was consternation in her face.

"Why, little girl," he exclaimed joyfully, "there's no danger. The creature has gone by this time."

At this instant a young man in white flannels came up.

"Pardon me—but does this book belong to either of you? It's brand new and had no name in it—but I thought"—

"Yes, it's mine, thank you," she interrupted.

"A—new—diary?" queried Carlyle, astonished.

"Yes. I burned the old one four years ago."

"Then why did you pretend"— began Carlyle.

"I wanted an excuse to visit our tree without seeming too sentimental," she confessed boldly. "You may think what you like of me."

"I think you are adorable," declared Carlyle.

"I'm glad I bought that diary," sighed Mary happily. "It will be so nice to keep golf scores in. But," as an afterthought, "we'll let the old scores go!"

The Eagle In Scotland.

The eagle has grown scarce in the British isles. An old record states that in the seasons 1831-34, inclusive, no fewer than 171 mature specimens of the eagle, together with fifty-three young and eggs, were destroyed in a single county of Scotland—Sutherland—from which statement one can well imagine the cruel havoc that has been wrought in the ranks of a once very common bird of prey. No one denies that the eagle is destructive to game and lambs, but it seems a pity that so noble a bird should be so utterly wiped out of existence, for the eagle has many interesting associations with the past. In Scotland a century or two back three eagle's feathers were the badge of a chief, two of a chieftain and one of a gentleman, but more interesting still is the fact that the flesh of the eagle was considered in the seventeenth century "a valuable medicine against the gout." The same authority also states that the bird was sometimes eaten by the hardy highlander as part of his ordinary diet.

What Elephants Eat.

All the elephants used in the Indian army as draft animals in the artillery or commissariat or as baggage animals in the transport department are very carefully attended to and in every way treated with the greatest consideration. They are rather expensive to keep, costing about £3 a day, including, of course, the wages of their mahout and grass cutter. They are fed principally on unhusked rice and grass. Of the former they get about 250 pounds and of the latter about 400 per diem. A very large female eats, after the first day or two, about 750 pounds of green fodder in eighteen hours. This is exceeded often by larger tuskers, so that 800 pounds is about the right amount to be placed before a full grown elephant, with a margin to allow for waste. As a good load for an elephant is about 800 pounds, it will be seen that the amount he will eat per day will be as much as he can carry, and this will also be the right proportion for the smaller ones.—London Surprise.

Going to the Theater In Venice.

Going to the theater in Venice is like a fantastic overture to the play and sets one's mood properly in tune. You step into the gondola, which darts at once across a space of half lighted water and turns down a narrow canal between walls which seem to reach more than halfway to the stars. The tiny lantern in the prow sheds no light, is indeed no more than a signal of approach, and you seem to be sliding straight into the darkness. Here and there a lamp shines from a bridge or at the water gate of a house, but with no more than enough light to make the darkness seen. The gondola sways, swerves and is round a sharp corner, and the water rushes against the oar as it swings the keel straight for another plunge forward. You see in flashes.—Arthur Symons in Scribner's.

SIR FREDERICK PEEL DEAD.

Held Office In Several British Cabinets Half a Century Ago.

London, June 7.—Sir Frederick Peel died here yesterday. He was born in 1823 and about fifty years ago held several important Government positions.

The Right Hon. Sir Frederick Peel, K. C. M. G., was the second son of Sir Robert Peel. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, winning first-class honors in classics. In 1849 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and in February of that year was elected as Liberal member for Leominster. In 1852 he was elected for Bury; was defeated in 1857 and was again elected in 1859, but was defeated in 1865. Sir Frederick was Under Secretary for the Colonies from November, 1851, until March, 1852, in Lord Russell's first administration, and held the same post in the coalition Ministry under Lord Aberdeen. He was Under Secretary for War in Lord Palmerston's first administration in 1855, resigned in 1857, and was Secretary to the Treasury from 1860 until 1865. In 1873 he was appointed president of the Railway Commission.

Lineman Electrocuted.

St. Catharines, June 7.—Louis Hyde, a lineman in the employ of the Bell Telephone Co., was electrocuted in the vicinity of Montebello Park yesterday afternoon, and Fred Franklin, also a lineman, was severely shocked, and is now in the hospital. Hyde, who lives in Trenton, was a single man.

TOOK OATH "TO OBLIGE."

Alf. Jury's Information Not Enough For Public Accounts Committee.

Ottawa, June 7.—At the public accounts committee yesterday the letter written by Alf. Jury and addressed to W. L. Griffith, secretary of the High Commissioner's office, as to how he obtained the Ennis letters, was received from Lord Strathcona and read by Chairman Belcourt. The letter was in terms the same as those described by Preston and Griffith.

Mr. Jury being in the committee room, Mr. Barker asked that he should be called to give evidence in regard to the letter.

Mr. Jury at once affirmed the same as he did at the agriculture committee. There was some comment as to his not taking the oath. Mr. Jury said that he was exempted by law. He did not believe in rewards or punishments after death.

Mr. Belcourt ordered a Bible, and the oath was taken in the usual way. Mr. Jury added that he did so to oblige them.

Mr. Jury then told the same story as he did before the agriculture committee, adding that Ennis had sent him a cable permitting him to say that he (Ennis) knew of his taking of the letters.

Dead At 102.

Stratford, June 7.—Mrs. Susanne Asken, the oldest pioneer in Mornington Township, is dead, aged 102.

Czar Has His Choice.

Douma's Attitude Is "Dismiss the Cabinet or Fight."

Lower House of Parliament Refuses to Listen to the Ministers and Practically Drove Them Off the Rostrum—Some Fiery Talk of Occurring Conflict—Strike at Odessa Is Assuming Menacing Proportions.

St. Petersburg, June 7—The Douma and the Government are rapidly coming to close quarters, and the inevitable conflict cannot be much longer delayed. Unrest throughout the country increases daily. The scene at Tuesday's session when the House refused to hear the Ministers and practically drove them from the rostrum clearly means that the Czar must dismiss the Cabinet or fight. The Douma yesterday was still in fighting spirit, and some of the deputies advocated extreme action. Moderate counsels prevailed, however, and the conflict is temporarily postponed.

Parliament's Duty.

Mm. Annitin and Alladin, the peasant party leaders, used the occasion to make violent speeches, in which they argued that it was useless for Parliament to proceed in the regular way. The Government intended to rely on bullets and bayonets, and it was Parliament's duty to recognize a banner under which the people would fight when the inevitable collision comes.

The debate on the agrarian question was then resumed. The Ministerial benches were empty yesterday.

Menacing at Odessa.

Odessa, June 7.—The strikers at this port are assuming such a menacing attitude that the authorities are acutely apprehensive of a repetition of the appalling conflagration of last June, the Russian shipping companies having announced their intention to import immediately 2,000 seamen from the Baltic ports, the local firemen, who are on strike, threaten to retaliate by blowing up the steamers and burning the port. Strong military guards were placed yesterday on board all the vessels tied up here. Fifteen hundred infantry, with machine guns, are stationed at the harbor in its vicinity. The strike, which is declared to be purely political, has paralyzed Russian navigation of the Black Sea.

T. & N. O. EARNINGS.

People's Road Keeps Right on and Accumulates Wealth.

North Bay, June 7.—An increase of $130,959.20 in its total earnings for five months from Jan. 1 to June 1, 1906, over a similar period in 1905, is the return made by the people's road, the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway.

In the month of May of the present year 11.652 passengers traveled on this line. In May, 1905, the number was only 1,107, and the earnings for May of this year were $12,338.85. For May, 1905, the receipts were only $4,143.60, and of this total freight and live stock produced a revenue of $2,620.80, and passenger returns were only $1,522.80.

The month of May, 1906, shows a marked change. The tolls collected from passengers amounted to $8,259.80, and freightage is responsible for only $5,079.05.

In the five months ending June 1, 1905, the passengers carried totalled 10,939. In the corresponding months of 1906 the aggregate is nearly ten times this amount, or, to be strictly accurate, 97,093.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, June 7.—Hon. Geo. E. Foster's motion respecting the correspondent of La Presse precipitated a running debate yesterday afternoon which, for a time, bade fair to revive the periodical clash of race and creed which so often distracts the country. Many members, however, refused to treat the matter seriously, and after two hours of rambling discussion respecting the Orange order the original motion was passed without dissent, and nobody lost his temper.

In committee the House considered Mr. Oliver's bill to amend the Rocky Mountain Park Act, and also the bill to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Co. The latter bill is reported, but stands over for the third reading.

In supply, the estimates of the Marine and Fisheries Department occupied the greater part of the evening.

Life Not Worth While.

Brockville, June 7.—Ralph Nemire, a young resident of Sandy Creek, committed suicide Tuesday. He bororwed a shotgun from his brother-in-law, Oren Brown, saying he intended hunting woodchucks. He left a note saying life was not worth the living without his sweetheart's affections, and that he would not trouble her longer.

Norwegians Sail for Coronation.

Chicago, June 7.—Three hundred Norwegians, who came from all over the middle west, left Chicago Tuesday for the fatherland, where they will attend the coronation of King Haakon VII., on June 22. At New York the party will be joined by an eastern contingent, and it is expected that more than 1,000 will go.

British Teachers For Canada.

London, June 7.—Arrangements have been completed under a plan outlined by Alfred Mosely to send between November and March 500 British teachers to the United States and Canada to study educational systems of the two countries. They will be chosen from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Winnipeg, June 7.—Mrs. Nagy, St. John's avenue, has entered action against The Free Press for $11,000 damages for publishing a story last October stating that her house on St. John's avenue was haunted. She claims she has since been unable to dispose of the property.

Ministers Debarred.

Ottawa, June 7.—The Montreal Methodist Conference yesterday passed the following resolution: "That no minister in active work shall be, or become, a member of the governing body or board of any trading, investment or insurance company."

Revolutionists Win Twice.

City of Mexico, June 7.—Gen. Toledo, in command of the revolutionists troops in Southern Guatemala, has won two engagements. The Government forces have been driven back, and Gen. Toledo is receiving heavy reinforcements of well-armed men.

A Train Wreck.

Atlanta, Ga., June 7.—An Atlanta and Westport excursion train was run into by a Central Georgia passenger train at the terminal station here last night. Roy Cook of Atlanta was killed and ten or more injured, some of them seriously.

German Philosopher Dies.

Berlin, June 7.—Charles Robert Eduard Von Hartmann, the German philosopher, died yesterday at Grosslichterfelde. He was in his 65th year.

Preston Has Triumphed.

The seal of secrecy still remains on the personnel of that odoriferous concern yclept the North Atlantic Trading Company. W. T. R. Preston refused to divulge to the committee on Agriculture and Colonization the names of the persons who constitute the company, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers on Monday defended the course the chief immigration agent had taken.

The people of Canada are thus brought face to face with a unique situation. A majority in Parliament denying to Parliament the names of those who received certain moneys voted by Parliament. The new Liberalism has been responsible for many astounding departures from the principles of responsible government but none has equalled in audacity the one in which W. T. R. Preston stands as the supreme dictator.

Why should there be any secrecy about the names of these gentlemen who have received nearly $300,000 of the money of the people of Canada? If it was a fair, honorable, business-like deal no harm can come from thorough publicity. If it was a graft then we are entitled to know the names of the grafters, or the names through which the grant was perpetrated. Jury told the committee that he was satisfied Preston was interested in the North Atlantic Trading Co., that Preston did all the business, and in one instance paid an account of the company with his personal cheque. This charge publicly made on oath by an official of the Government, should have impelled Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers to assist in a full and searching investigation. "Let no guilty man escape," would have been the watchword of a clean, honest administration. But the virus of corruption has so thoroughly permeated politics at Ottawa, the evil influences that dragged the Ross Government down have assumed such a complete mastery that the Premier and his colleagues are forced to draw closer the curtain of scenery, protect the wrong-doers, and cover up the wrong.

There is only one ending to such a course. The Ontario Government allowed Preston and his gang to get the upper hand. Things went smoothly for a while. Constituencies were debauched, the honest voice of the electorate was stifled, responsible Government became a mere farce. But the people at last arose in their might, asserted their freedom, and hurled from power the men who had betrayed a great public trust. What happened in Ontario is being repeated at Ottawa. Preston is again in the lime-light again he is being shielded and supported by a Government, over which he has obtained a mastery and again, as sure as to-morrow's sun rises, crushing defeat will be the penalty.

Automobile Regulation.

The regulations upon automobiles provided by the Act passed at the last session of the Ontario Legislature should be widely known. Owners of automobiles will probably keep informed of the law, but other people, and especially those who drive horses, should know what their rights are in order that they may insist upon them when necessary. One of the most important clauses is as follows:

"Every person having control or charge of a motor vehicle shall whenever upon any public street or highway and approaching any vehicle drawn by horse or horses or a horse upon which any person is riding, operate, manage and control such motor vehicle in such a manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of any such horse or horses, and to ensure the safety and protection of any person riding or driving the same, and outside the limits of any city or town shall not approach such horse or horses, within one hundred yards, or pass same going in an opposite direction at a greater speed than seven miles per hour, and if going in the same direction shall signal his desire to pass and give the rider or driver an opportunity to turn out so that he may be passed with safety, and if any such horse or horses appear frightened he shall reduce its speed and shall not proceed further towards such animal or animals unless such movement be necessary to avoid accident or injury, or until such animal or animals are under the control of the rider or driver, and if he approach any such person riding or driving any animal or horse upon the public highways outside the limits of any city or town he shall at once stop any such motor vehicle, when signalled by such rider or driver, to do so by raising his hand, or otherwise requested, and shall remain stationary so long as may be necessary to allow such rider or driver to pass, or until directed by such rider or driver to proceed; and in any case if any animal ridden or driven by such driver or driver appears to be frightened, the operator of such motor vehicle, and any occupants of the same, shall upon request render assistance to such rider or driver in control of such animal or animals."

In case of accident a motorist must give all assistance and also, if requested, write out his name and address. The penalties for infringement of the Act are severe.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The papers, these days, are full of weddings. Cupid seems to be ubiquitous and omnipotent.

It would hardly be correct to say that this rain would never be mist.

• • •

The county rate is four mills, and oh! but wouldn't the city people turn handsprings if theirs was only four times that!

• • •

However, the county people have no such delightfully smooth streets as we have, neither have they any steam road roller to show to visitors.

• • •

They were living the strenuous life in Hamilton yesterday. June weddings, the races, a circus and the County Council. That, as the Spec. man would say, is pretty near the pace that kills.

A Chicago man, who had been dumb for 21 years, suddenly recovered his voice. Then the first thing he did was to ask a man if it was hot enough for him. It seems a pity that a man who would ask such a question did not remain dumb.

People who saw the "sun-dogs" on Monday are wondering if Old Sol did not rather overdo things then. He seems to have pulled up rather more moisture than was strictly necessary.

• • •

If the rain had kept on much longer some of our fellow-citizens would never have wanted to see the water wagon again.

• • •

Just as quick as the weather attains a little permanent dryness, the strawberries should come on with a rush.

Only seven of the original seventeen members of the Laurier Cabinet are now left. Why do they leave Sir Wilfrid? Probably because they can't take him with them.

• • •

These be the days when the man on the next block arises at 5 a.m. and starts out to make a lawn mower record.

• • •

A Hamilton paper is preaching against expensive bridals. Weddings and funerals are two things people will please themselves about. And why, pray, shouldn't they. Her wedding is the biggest event of a woman's life, and his funeral is the biggest event in a man's. Why shouldn't each of them be done up in style?

THE AWFUL VIBRATO.

(Windsor Record.)

A tremolo, so-called, is generally false, as usually coming from a disordered larnyx, and is offensive even to the uncultured ear. It may always be set down as the sign of a crude and base art, and as such should be frowned down by the true musician.

Literary Notes.

CANADA FIRST.

The June number of "Canada First" contains a wealth of typically Canadian material. A strong feature is "A Straight Talk to Americans." This up-to-date magazine enters the financial arena also, by a continuation of its articles calling for an investigation of our Canadian banks. One serial story approaches its conclusion and there are also several complete short tales. There are some good illustrations, including views of Niagara and some interesting spots in the Rocky mountains, and altogether the number is an excellent one. The subscription to "Canada First" magazine, which is published monthly, is only one dollar per year. The offices are at 23 Scott St., Toronto.

The Designer for July is divided between midsummer fashions and patriotism. Catering to the first mentioned is a generous supply of up-to-date designs for warm-weather apparel and millinery, also two special articles on "Attractive Waists of Thin Material," and "Sunbonnets and Shadehats." All mothers will appreciate "An Outdoor Baby," with its charming illustrations, which advocates letting the wee folk get as close to nature as possible. "Bath-House Keeping" is given as a money-making occupation for women. In this number of The Designer are given the opening chapters of a droll continued story of country life, "The Village Improvement Society," by Della Lutz. Lessons in Dressmaking, Hat Making, Shadow and Coronation Embroidery and Drawnwork are made lucid by clear instruction and many illustrations.

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. Comfort, speed, safety and punctuality here have reached their highest development. Write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O.; or W. THE HOT WATER CURE.

When the world looks dark and dreary
And in heart and brain you're weary,
When you cannot see a prospect that invites you or is cheery,
Don't sit down and sadly mumble,
Don't let others hear you grumble,
Take a good hot bath.

When you think that all who meet you
Are evolving schemes to cheat you
And are practicing deceptions as with friendly words they greet you,
Do not stay to frown or fret there,
But go home and when you get there
Take a good hot bath.

Few men have the wish to hurt you;
Sin keeps yielding ground to virtue,
And you weaken your defenses when you let your hopes desert you.
Do not, nursing anger, frown—it
Doesn't pay; go home and drown it
In a good hot bath.

Beginning Early.

"There's the master and missus quarreling again, and they've only been married a month!"

"They are uncommonly eloquent for the little practice they've had, aren't they?"

A Modern Family.

"Where's Edythe?"

"She's up in her studio hand paintin' a snow shovel."

"Where's Gladys?"

"In the library writin' po'try."

"Where's Clarice?"

"She's in the parlor playin' the pianner."

"Where's Gwendoline?"

"Up in her boudoir curlin' her hair."

"And where's ma?"

"Maw? Oh, maw's down in the kitchen gettin' dinner for the bunch!"

Stale and Unprofitable.

One day a football player appeared in the class room during football season. The students were deeply shocked, yet they managed to preserve the outward forms of respect. But when, presently, it turned out that the fellow knew his lesson there was none so poor to do him reverence.

"He's gone stale!" was the sneering whisper which ran from lip to lip.

Trade Secret.

"Are you the little boy whose papa writes so many cute sayings of children?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I suppose your papa is always encouraging you to talk."

"No, ma'am. He threatens to whip me if I even whisper when he is writing his bright things the children have said."

The County Council.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Mr. Jennings, a representative of the Muskoka Consumptive Association, addressed the Council at considerable length in reference to aid from the County to the Muskoka Hospital. He stated that $300 endowed a cot and many cities and counties were doing so. He referred to the treatment of patients at the Muskoka Consumptive Sanitarium, and the good which was being done. It was a free institution and no one was refused admittance.

The Warden informed Mr. Jennings that the matter would be considered at the proper time.

THE EQUALIZATION.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on equalization, Mr. Denyes in the chair.

The assessment and equalization of the various municipalities for 1905 was presented, being as follows:

	Assessment.	Equalization
Sidney	$2,102,707	$2,165,000
Thurlow	2,119,250	1,975,000

Marmora & Lake	241,902	415,000
Madoc township	1,118,545	875,000
Elzevir and Grimthorpe	309,455	170,000

Monteagle & Herschel	109,933	70,000
Carlow	60,493	50,000
Bangor, Wicklow & McClune	55,590	60,000
Deseronto	1,093,903	500,000
Stirling	191,433	140,000
Madoc village	386,774	205,000
Tweed	293,469	110,000
Marmora	293,469	110,000
Bancroft	96,239	90,000
Total	$12,930,572

Mr. Macfarlane moved, seconded by Mr. Vandervoort, that the equalization remain the same as that of last year.

Mr. Best considered that the village of Bancroft was too highly equalized, namely, $90,000. He thought that the equalization should be lowered to $70,000. There had been some bad fires in the village, which reduced the assessment considerably.

Mr. Macfarlane thought the equalization should remain the same this year, and his motion carried.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on Roads and Bridges, Mr. Rogers in the chair.

A petition was read from a number of ratepayers in Marmora township asking for a grant of $50 towards repairing a boundary road between that Township and Peterboro County.

Mr. Bonter spoke in support of the petition and moved that the grant asked for be given. Peterboro County would no doubt give a similar grant.

Mr Best seconded the motion.

The motion prevailed on condition that Peterboro County grant a similar grant.

Reeve Collins, of Huntingdon, addressed the Council in reference to the changing of a road in that township, and also asking the Council to assume a small part of a road as a county road.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Council met at 2 p.m. and went into Committee of the Whole on Roads and Bridges, Mr. Rogers in the chair.

Dr. Harper, Reeve of Madoc village, addressed the Council in reference to the condition of the roads in that village. Last year the appropriation from the County to be expended on the roads was not all expended. As it was necessary to improve the roads he suggested that the County grant $1000 or $150 and the Council of the village would grant a similar sum. This would mean but a slight increase, as the money was not all expended last year.

Several of the members spoke in favor of the proposal and the County's grant was fixed at $150.

The report of the superintendent was presented which showed that what was necessary to be expended would amount to $17,770, which was an increase of $1,335 over that of last year.

Mr. Rogers stated that it appeared to be absolutely necessary to expend this amount in order to place and keep the roads in a proper state of repairs.

The report of the superintendent in reference to bridges to be repaired in the County was presented. It was estimated that it would require about $6,000 to make the necessary repairs.

On motion the reports were accepted and referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on Ways and Means, Mr. Morton in the chair.

The report of the superintendent re roads and bridges was taken up.

Mr. Macfarlane moved, seconded by the Warden, that the recommendation of the superintendent re roads and bridges be adopted.—Carried.

Mr. Rogers moved, seconded by Mr. Cornell, that an extra appropriation of $150 be given to Madoc village.—Carried.

A motion prevailed that no action on the communication from the Chief Constables' Association be taken.

The communication of Mr. Lyle, of Madoc, claiming damages from the County on account of alleged injury to his meadow on account of defective drainage, was taken up.

Mr. Bleecker, superintendent, stated that a culvert became defective near Mr. Lyle's property, and he (the superintendent) had it repaired as soon as possible.

Mr Tumelty moved, seconded by Mr. Cornell, that $25 be paid Mr. Lyle.

An amendment was made that no action be taken.

Upon a vote being taken the amendment prevailed.

The following accounts were recommended to be paid:

W. McGie	$15.25
E. McGrath	6.00
G. Clapper	3.75
Tickell & Sons	.75

The communication from the National Sanitarium Company re the free consumptive hospital at Muskoka was read.

Mr. Denyes said that the object was a worthy one and he moved that a grant of $25 be made.—Carried.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on Estimates, Mr. Nicholson in the chair.

The following estimates for the year were adopted:

Administration of Justice	$7,300
Jury Law	4,000
Court House and Jail	3,000
County Bridges	6,000
Gravel Roads	17,924
Other roads and bridges	2,500
Snow and wire fences	1,000
Traction engine and grader	2,000
Salaries	3,460
Warden and Councillors	1,700
Printing and stationery	900
Schools	9,500
Fuel and light	1,500
Farnham note
Interest on Bank account	1,500
Miscellaneous	660
Total	$64,620
Estimated to be raised	$47,120

Four mills on the dollar on an assessment of $11,720.00 provides for $47,120 This is an increase of 3-10th mills over last year.

A motion prevailed that the estimates be adopted.

Mr. Macfarlane gave notice of a by-law confirming the equalization and Mr. Vandervoort gave notice of a by-law to levy certain sums on the various municipalities of the County.

A motion prevailed to allow the Clerk two days leave of absence to attend court at Cornwall.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Knights of Windsor.

The Military Knights of Windsor are an exceedingly ancient institution. They date from 1349. The pensions vary from £50 to £130 a year, and are supplemented by free quarters, in which nine months' residence out of the twelve is compulsory. Their duties are nominal—attendance in St. George's Chapel on saints' days, and at royal weddings and funerals, and supplying a guard of honor when foreign royalties visit Windsor Castle.

Reproduces Music.

Consul Liefeld sends from Freiburg a description of a new musical instrument. It is called the mignon, resembles an upright piano and reproduces music just like the player has rendered it. To prevent imitations the consul understands that the original recording apparatus is not patented, but its construction is kept a trade secret.

BOOKBINDING.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at The Intelligencer Office. It is surprising how attractive and satisfactory a volume can be made of these magazines. THREE SPECIES OF MOOSE.

They Are the European, the Eastern American and the Alaskan.

There are supposed to be three species of moose—the European moose or elk, found in northern Europe and adjoining parts of Asia; the common moose of eastern America, distinguished chiefly from its European congener by the skull being narrowed across the maxillaries, also by its greater size and darker color, and the Alaskan moose, separated by its giant stature, its narrow occiput, broad palate and heavy mandible.

Expressed in external features as illustrated in the adult male (always best for differentiating species):

The Scandinavian elk is a small gray animal with little palm and many spikes on its antlers.

The Canadian is a large black animal with much palmation and always a separate brow bunch of spikes. "I have seen hundreds of Canadian moose antlers, but never a pair that did not show a well developed separate group of prongs in front of each brow. I have seen a score or more of Swedish elk, but never saw one that did have a separate brow group of prongs, though I confess I have seen figures of such.

The Alaskan is a richly colored black, gray and brown giant, not only the largest deer alive today, but believed to be the largest that ever did exist, since no fossil has been found to equal it in bulk. Its antlers differ chiefly in size from those of the Canadian moose, but Madison Grant claims that they are also more complex and have in the brow antlers a second palmation which is set at right angles to that of the main palmation. In these peculiarities he finds "a startling resemblance is shown to the extinct cervalces, a moose-like deer of pleistocene times, probably ancestral to the genus alces.

"If this resemblance indicates any close relationship, we have in the Alaskan moose a survivor of the archaic type from which the true moose and Scandinavian elk have somewhat degenerated."—Ernest Thompson Seton in Scribner's.

The Turkey.

Turkeys are great wanderers. A mother will often lead her brood three or four miles away from home. There they take up their habitation in the unfrequented woods. The instinct for solitude and wild life is very strong after centuries of domestication. But a kindred instinct impels the mother to bring her grown family back in the fall to where she started out with them in the spring. This is not done, however, till the leaves are all off the trees, the beechnuts have fallen and have been eaten and the cold winds and sometimes the snow have made the sylvan retreats inhospitable.

Mecca.

Mecca is a large city and a principal one of the east. The temple of Mecca, to which so many pilgrims annually travel, forms a spacious square about a quarter of a mile in each direction, with a quadruple row of columns. A number of steps lead down to Mohammed's house, and within it is the black stone said to have been brought by the angel Gabriel for its foundation.

Sympathy.

It will afford sweeter happiness in the hour of death to have wiped one tear from the cheek of sorrow than to have ruled an empire, to have conquered millions or to have enslaved the world.

The Social Maze.

He—Don't you find this going out so much rather fatiguing? She—Yes, and so confusing. By the way, is the Plunketts' dance tomorrow night or is this it that we're at now?—Woman's Home Companion.

Universal Habit.

Lives there a man who has not said,
"Tomorrow I'll get out of bed
At 6 o'clock and get things done
Before the setting of the sun?"

Lives there a man who has not said
At 6 a. m., "How good this bed
Does feel!" and snored till after 8,
Then wondered how he slept so late?

An Important Affair.

"I don't suppose it's unnatural for me to be excited now that the hour for my marriage to the count approaches," said the bride. "I guess I'm the most excited person in town at this minute."

"Oh, I don't know," replied Mrs. Nuritch, her mother. "Think how excited they must be over it in the newspaper offices."

Easily Explained.

"Oh, yes, his wife believes all he tells her."

"Isn't that remarkable?"

"Not at all. He never tells her anything."

A Fellow Feeling.

"I am hurt more than you," said the father,
"When I punish you, son," and thereat
The boy raised his head as he sobbingly said,
"Well, there's some consolation in that."

No Mystery.

Mistress (severely)—How did this fire happen to go out?

New Girl (innocently)—I guess you forgot to tell me to put coal on.

Sweet Sympathy.

Towne—Look at that poor blind beggar playing the accordion.

Browne—Yes; I've been listening to him. Pity he isn't deaf too.

No Deception.

Man calls his wife his "better half,"
But that's a sort of bluff.
He can't deceive himself, for she's
The whole thing, sure enough.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

THE COAT OF TAN.

Nellie now is out to burn,
  Out to get a coat of tan;
Out to let her features turn
  To the copper shade of man.
Note the sleeveless waist she wears,
  Note the redness of her arm;
Nellie now no longer cares
  For the white complexioned charm.

See her nose is growing red,
  See the red V. on her neck;
Notice how she bares her head—
  Blush of winter is a wreck.
See the fire within her arms,
  Like a raging fever there;
Nellie now no longer cares
  Coat of tan she wants to wear.

Nellie's face is smarting now,
  Havoc by the sun is played;
Freckles grow upon her brow,
  Cheeks are of a ruby shade.
Nose is red and peeling too,
  Worse than any worn by man;
Nellie wants a copper hue,
  Nellie wants a coat of tan.

It was stated by the Grit press before the last Provincial election that Mr. Whitney was not a strong man, that he was too autocratic, that he was unpopular with his party, and could not get together a Cabinet of strength and ability. These predictions have all been scattered to the winds and shown to be utterly groundless. That Mr. Whitney has a far-seeing, progressive and business-like policy has been abundantly demonstrated by the excellent legislation of the past two sessions and by the almost universal praise that is being bestowed upon his course. He has also surrounded himself with able and capable men. Mr. Whitney is also living up to his ante-election pledges and giving effect to every reform promised. In the ranks of his followers it has been shown that there are at least half a dozen men who have proved themselves to be exceptionally useful, aggressive, alert, possessed of good administrative ability and a high sense of public duty. Among them may be mentioned Messrs. Joseph Downey, Col. Clarke, W. H. Hoyle, I. B. Lucas, J. H. Carnegie and others. There is no doubt that these gentlemen will yet take a much higher place in the councils of the Conservative party. Their work bespeaks their worth."

Keifer of telegraph station No. 12, Buller's survey, had not been absent from duty in three years. He had not wanted to. But with that bit of ribbon just ticked from the instrument before his eyes he underwent a sudden change. He would accept the vacation so tardily offered and make the most of it. His books said that a change was good for a man's soul, and he would come back refreshed in mind and body. He loved the sand views of station No. 12, for they signified home, but the changeless monotony of the four sides had grown a little oppressive since the arrival of it.

Before ticking back an acceptance to the home office he let his finger fall upon the instrument for a moment, touching the hand of his new friend, as it were.

"Hello, Kaufman," he called, "are you in for a vacation too?"

"A week," came back the prompt answer, "commencing on the 23d."

"The 23d! Why, mine ends on that date, and it's two weeks. But I understand. I've been here three years and you only three months, and, now it's a dull time, they're going to let you control this section while I'm away, and then I'm to do the same for you. Too bad, though, for I thought we might go off together. Odd, isn't it? I feel that you're the best friend I've got in the world—about the only one, for that matter, for we've wired no end of personal gossip and ambition and our tastes run about the same way. And yet I've never seen you and don't know whether you're short or tall, lean or fat, a heathen or a Y. M. C. A., or whether your mustache is still to sprout or your white hair is dropping out from old age. Queer world, isn't it, Kauf? But say! I believe I'll run down and spend my vacation with you. There's no other place I can think of, and we can see how each other looks and talk and smoke and"—

"T-TELL KAUF I'M OUT HERE TO SEE HIM," ANSWERED KEIFER DAZEDLY.

There was a quick, protesting click.

"Don't you do it, Keifer—what is your name anyway, the whole of it? Keifer is so—so unceremonious and blunt. But about the vacation. You mustn't visit me now—mustn't. Why, it's impossible. I—I haven't the accommodations, and—and I'm so busy, and"—

There was a call from the home office, and with a hurried explanation to Kaufman he flashed in an acceptance of the proffered leave of absence, took and answered the call, made a few final arrangements, then bent over to continue the conversation, hesitated and swung back from the instrument.

"I won't do it," he chuckled. "Kauf's likely ashamed of his looks—baldheaded or fat or one eyed or something—and don't want me to know. I'm going to visit him on the next train, and I'm not going to give him a chance for any more excuses. Ashamed! Great Scott! Don't we like the same books and music and everything else? What do I care how the old chap looks? He ought to know my regard rises above such petty considerations, and I believe he thinks just as much of me. His personal confidences prove it. I'll just drop in on him so suddenly and affectionately that he can't help taking me in his arms."

So when the through freight slowed at the water tank Keifer swung himself into the caboose with a generous outfit of tobacco and books and a brand new pack of cards ordered up by the freight conductor. And this same friendly conductor, when they reached telegraph station 13, obligingly slowed the train so Keifer could drop into the white, yielding sand, the familiar, unvarying landscape of his own station.

"Accommodations!" he chuckled as he strode eagerly toward the open doorway of the little building. "It's got two rooms, like my own, and that's plenty of accommodations for any reasonable man, but perhaps Kauf was used to a big house at home. Hello! Window curtains, and flowers at the end of the house and—Lord!"

For a young woman, pretty and neatly dressed, and with lips and eyes that were meant for smiling, but which just now were sober with inquiry and consternation, had suddenly appeared in the doorway. Keifer had not seen a girl in over three years, and such a girl as this one appeared to him, never. His mouth opened and shut, without sound.

"Well?" the girl inquired at last.

"Is—is Kauf—in? How's Kauf—well? T-tell Kauf I'm out here to see him," answered Keifer dazedly.

"I'm Kauf—Adella Kaufman," said the girl. Then the utter blankness in the face before her seemed to restore the girl's equanimity, for she smiled. "You're Keif, I suppose—er—Mr. Keifer, I mean," she said. "Didn't I wire you"—

"I wouldn't take it," miserably. "I—I thought 'twas some foolish excuse of a man who wasn't used to visitors. I heard the instrument calling and recognized your touch, but I wouldn't listen. After the first time I kept my back turned and dodged out soon's the train came in sight." He looked toward the track, as if to see if the freight were still waiting for him, but all that was visible of it was a dark line trailing into the white horizon.

"Train's gone," he said tentatively, "and it's fifty miles to the nearest house, and there aren't any more trains either way until tomorrow. Now, if I'd brought some food I might walk the fifty miles or start off one way or the other to meet a train, but it's been eight hours since I had breakfast, and fifty miles. You see," deprecatingly, "I felt so sure that Kauf—I beg your pardon, Miss Kauf—Kaufman. I mean —I—I—it don't seem possible there isn't any real Kauf after all the talking—we've done."

"You've camped outdoors a good many times, I suppose, Mr. Keifer. All western men have."

"Of course," inquiringly. Then, with an odd note of eagerness coming into his voice, "You mean I may camp right here by the track until a train comes. It won't be presumptuous after—after my density?"

"I only control the station, Mr. Keifer, and you have a right to camp anywhere you please out of doors. But what I wish to say is that I'll be glad to have you take supper with me and all your meals until the train comes. At home I was considered a very fair cook."

The next day the down freight was four hours late, and when it began to slacken speed in answer to his signal Keifer released a hand which he had caught suddenly on the first appearance of the train into the sand's level horizon.

"I'll go and fix up my station some," he said, his voice tremulous with the awed wonder in it, "and maybe have another room put on. The company will stand that much, I think. Then I'll run back and transplant the flowers and take your things, and the day before my vacation expires I'll wire for a parson to meet us here. You'd better send in your resignation at once, Kauf."

"And announce my promotion, Keif," she finished softly.

Admiration.

"There can be no real society where compliment is unknown. I once spent a summer in the country in the very New Englandest part of New England, and I was frantic at the sharp corners of the talk. If I were a bit pale they said, 'Are you sick?' like savages. If I looked in the least fetching I caught them watching me by stealth and turning criminally away if I detected it. To mention my praises in moments of becoming hats or new coiffures would have been a breach of etiquette, and it was a point of honor not to appear to notice a new gown. Heavens! I had three minds to come back to town and wear my rose chiffon in a Broadway car for the sheer joy of being openly admired. There is only one thing more ill bred than staring at a pretty woman—that is not noticing her. There is only one thing better than being admired, and that is being told so. Don't tell me that a man who loves a woman cannot compliment her. If he couldn't society would dissolve. And it would be the man's fault."—Zona Gale in Woman's Home Companion.

The "If" Is Rather Important.

Here's something that may save your life when a bull gets after you: When a bull charges, just before the final lurch he shuts his eyes, and if you have the presence of mind to stand stock still until he is about two or three feet from you all you have to do is to step aside, and he misses you. Any child with sufficient presence of mind to do this can let a bull charge all day with perfect safety. This is not a new thing, as it is one of the secrets of the bullfighter in the countries where the sport is practiced. The bullfighters say that a cow does not do this, and they would never try any such tricks with a mad cow.

by a gardeners' tool-house, which had a door at each side, and thus admitted one into a lane that wound through a grove and joined the main highway a mile beyond.

Reaching this tool-house I dashed within, closed and barred the door behind me, and then emerged upon the lane.

To my surprise I saw a covered carriage standing in the gloom, and made out that the door stood open and a man upon the box was holding the reins and leaning toward me eargerly as if striving to solve my identity.

Without hesitation I sprang into the carriage and closed the door, crying to the man:

"Quick! for your life—drive on!"

Without a word he lashed his horses and we started with a jerk that threw me into the back seat.

I heard an exclamation in a woman's startled voice and felt a muffled form shrinking into the corner of the carriage. Then two shots rang out; I hear a scream and the sound of a fall as the driver pitched upon the ground, and now like the wind the maddened horses rushed on without guidance, swaying the carriage from side to side with a dangerous motion.

These Brazilian carriages have a trap in the top to permit the occupants to speak to the driver. I found this trap, threw it upward, and drew myself up until I was able to scramble into the vacant seat. The reins had fallen between the horses, evidently, but we were now dashing through the grove, and the shadows were so deep that I could distinguish nothing distinctly.

Cautiously I let myself down until my feet touched the pole, and then, resting my hands upon the loins of the madly galloping animals, I succeeded in grasping the reins and returned safely to the box seat.

Then I braced myself to conquer the runaways, and when we emerged from the grove and came upon the highway there was sufficient light for me to keep the horses in the straight road until they had tired themselves sufficiently to be brought under control.

During this time I had turned to speak a reassuring word, now and then, to the unknown woman in the carriage.

Doubtless she had been both amazed and indignant at my abrupt seizure of her equipage; but there was not yet time to explain to her my necessity.

We were headed straight for the station at Cuyaba, and I decided at once to send a telegram warning Mazanovitch of danger. For Paola had turned traitor, the vault had been opened, and the Emperor was even now on his way to Rio to arrest all who had previously escaped the net of the Minister of Police.

So we presently dashed up to the station, which was nearly deserted at this hour, and after calling a porter to hold the horses I went into the station to write my telegram.

Mazanovitch had asked me to use but one word, and although I had much of interest to communicate, a moment's thought assured me that a warning of danger was sufficient.

So, after a brief hesitation, I wrote the word "Lesba," and handed the message to the operator.

"That is my name, senhor," said a soft voice behind me, and I turned to confront Lesba Paola.

CHAPTER XIX.

Astonishment rendered me speechless, and at first I could do no more than bow with an embarrassed air to the cloaked figure before me. Lesba's fair face, peering from beneath her mantilla, was brave but set, and her brilliant eyes bore a questioning and half-contemptuous look that was hard to meet.

"That is my name, senhor," she repeated, "and you will oblige me by explaining why you are sending it to Captain Mazanovitch."

"Was it your carriage in which I escaped?" I inquired.

"Yes; and my man now lies wounded by the roadside. Why did you take me by surprise, Senhor Harcliffe? And why—why are you telegraphing my name to Mazanovitch?"

Although my thoughts were somewhat confused I remembered that Lesba had accompanied her brother to Rio; that her brother had turned traitor, and she herself had ridden in the Emperor's carriage, with the spy Valcour. And I wondered how it was that her carriage should have been standing this very evening at a retired spot, evidently awaiting some one, when I chanced upon it in my extremity.

It is well to take time to consider, when events are of a confusing nature. In that way thoughts are sometimes untangled. Now, in a flash, the truth came to me. Valcour was still at the mansion—Valcour, her accomplice; perhaps her lover.

To realize this evident fact of her intrigue with my brilliant foe sent a shiver through me—a shiver of despair and utter weariness. Still keeping my gaze upon the floor, and noting, half-consciously, the click-click of the telegraph instrument, I said:

"Pardon me, donzella, for using your carriage to effect my escape. You see, I have not made an alliance with the royalists, as yet, and my condition is somewhat dangerous. As for the use of your name in my telegram, I have no objection to telling you—now that the message has been sent—that it was a cypher word warning my republican friends of treachery."

"Do you suspect me of treachery, Senhor Harcliffe?" she asked in cold, scornful tones.

I looked up, but dropped my eyes again as I confronted the blaze of indignation that flashed from her own.

"I make no accusations, donzella. What is it to me if you Brazilians fight among yourselves for freedom or the Emperor, as it may suit your fancy? I came here to oblige a friend of my father's—the one true man I have found in all your intrigue-ridden country. But he, alas! is dead, and I am powerless to assist farther the cause he loved. So my mission here is ended, and I will go back to America."

Again I looked up; but this time her eyes were lowered and her expression was set and impenetrable.

"Do not let us part in anger," I resumed, a tremor creeping into my voice in spite of me—for this girl had been very dear to my heart. "Let us say we have both acted according to the dictates of conscience, and cherish only memories of the happy days we have passed together, to comfort us in future years."

She started, with upraised hand and eager face half turned toward the door. Far away in the distance I heard the tramp of many hoofs.

"They are coming, senhor!" called the man who stood beside the horses—one of our patriots. "It's the troop of Uruguayans, I am sure."

Pedro, the station-master, ran from his little office and extinguished the one dim lamp that swung from the ceiling of the room in which we stood.

In the darkness that enveloped us Lesba grasped my arm and whispered "Come!" dragging me toward the door. A moment later we were beside the carriage.

"Mount!" she cried, in a commanding voice. "I will ride inside. Take the road to San Tarem. Quick, senhor, as you value both our lives!"

I gathered up the reins as Pedro slammed tight the carriage door. A crack of the whip, a shout of encouragement from the two patriots, and we had dashed away upon the dim road leading to the wild, unsettled plains of the North Plateau.

They were good horses. It surprised me to note their mettle and speed, and I guessed they had been carefully chosen for the night's work—an adventure of which this denouement was scarcely expected. I could see the road but dimly, but I gave the horses slack rein and they sped along at no uncertain pace.

I could no longer hear the hoof-beats of the guards, and judged that either we had outdistanced them or the shrewd Pedro had sent them on a false scent.

Presently the sky brightened, and as the moon shone clear above us I found that we were passing through a rough country that was but sparsely settled. I remembered to have ridden once in this direction with Lesba, but not so far; and the surroundings were therefore strange to me.

For an hour I drove steadily on, and then the girl spoke to me through the open trap in the roof of the carriage.

"A mile or so further will bring us to a fork in the road. Keep to the right," said she.

I returned no answer, although I was burning to question her of many things. But time enough for that, I thought, when we were safely at our journey's end. Indeed, Lesba's mysterious actions—her quick return from Rio in the wake of the Emperor and Valcour, her secret rendezvous in the lane, which I had so suddenly surprised and interrupted, and her evident desire to save me from arrest—all this was not only contradictory to the frank nature of the girl, but to the suspicions I had formed of her betrayal of the conspiracy in co-operation with her treacherous brother.

The key to the mystery was not mine, and I could only wait until Lesba chose to speak and explain her actions.

I came to the fork in the road and turned to the right. The trail—for it had become little more than that—now skirted a heavy growth of underbrush that merged into groves of scattered, stunted trees; and these in time gradually became more compact and stalwart until a great Brazilian forest threw its black shadow over us. Noiselessly the carriage rolled over the beds of moss, which were so thick now that I could scarcely hear a sound of the horses' hoofs, and then I discerned a short distance ahead the outlines of an old, weather-beaten house.

Lesba had her head through the trap and spoke close to my ear.

"Stop at this place," said she; "for here our journey ends."

I pulled up the horses opposite the dwelling and regarded it somewhat doubtfully. It had been built a hundred yards or so from the edge of the dense forest and seemed utterly deserted. It was a large house, with walls of baked clay and a thatched roof, and its neglected appearance and dreary surroundings gave it a fearsome look as it stood lifeless and weatherstained under the rays of the moon.

"Is the place inhabited?" I asked.

"It must be," she replied. "Go to the door, and knock upon it loudly."

"But the horses—who will mind them, donzella?"

Instantly she scrambled through the trap to the seat beside me and took the reins in her small hands.

"I will look after the horses," said she.

So I climbed down and approached the door. It was sheltered by a rude porch, and flanked upon either side by well-worn benches such as are frequent at wayside inns.

I pounded upon the door and then paused to listen. The sounds drew a hollow reverberation from within, but aroused no other reply.

"Knock again!" called Lesba.

I obeyed, but with no better success. The place seemed uncanny, and I returned abruptly to the carriage, standing beside the wheel and gazing up through the moonlight into the beautiful face the girl bent over me.

"Lesba," said I, pleadingly, "what does all this mean? Why have you brought me to this strange place?"

"To save your life," she answered in a grave voice.

"But how came you to be waiting in the lane? And who were you waiting for?" I persisted.

"By what right do you question me, Senhor Harcliffe?" she asked, drawing back so that I could no longer look into her eyes.

"By no right at all, Lesba. Neither do I care especially whether you are attached to the Empire or the Republic, or how much you indulge in political intrigue, since that appears to be the chief amusement of your countrymen. But I love you. You know it well, although you have never permitted me tell you so. And loving you as I do, with all my heart, I am anxious to untangle this bewildering maze and understand something of your actions since that terrible morning when I parted with you at Dom Miguel's mansion."

She laughed, and the laugh was one of those quaint flashes of merriment peculiar to the girl, leaving one in doubt whether to attribute it to amusement or nervous agitation. Indeed, where another woman might weep Lesba would laugh; so that it frequently puzzled me to comprehend her. Now, however, she surprised me by leaning over me and saying gently:

"I will answer your question, Robert. My brother is at the mansion, and in danger of his life. I was waiting with the carriage to assist him to escape."

"But how do you know he is in danger?"

I found the door and hammered upon it with all my strength.

"He sent me word by a carrier-pigeon."

"To be sure. Yet there is one more thing that troubles me: why were you in Rio, riding in the Emperor's carriage with the spy Valcour?"

"It is simple, senhor, I went to Rio to assist in persuading Dom Pedro to visit the vault."

"Knowing it was empty?"

"Knowing it was empty, and believing that the Emperor's absence would enable Fonseca to strike a blow for freedom."

"Then Fonseca is still faithful to the Cause?"

"I know of no traitor in our ranks, Robert, although it seems you have suspected nearly all of us, at times. But it grows late and my brother is still in peril. Will you again rap upon the door?"

"It is useless, Lesba."

"Try the back door; they may hear you from there," she suggested.

So I made my way, stumbling over tangled vines and protruding roots, to the rear of the house, where the shadows lay even thicker than in front. I found the door, and hammered upon it with all my strength. The noise might have raised the dead, but as I listened intently there came not the least footfall to reward me. For a time I hesitated what to do. From the grim forest behind me I heard a half-audible snarl and the bark of a wolf; in the house an impressive silence reigned supreme.

I drew back, convinced that the place was uninhabited, and returned around the corner of the house.

"There is no one here, donzella," I began, but stopped short in amazement.

The carriage was gone.

CHAPTER XX.

I sprang to the road and peered eagerly in every direction. Far away in the distance could be discerned the dim outlines of the carriage, flying along the way from whence we had come.

Lesba had brought me to this place only to desert me, and it was not difficult to realize that she had sent me to the rear of the house to get me out of the way while she wheeled the carriage around and dashed away unheard over the soft moss.

Well, I had ceased to speculate upon the girl's erratic actions. Only one thing seemed clear to me; that she had returned to rescue her brother from the danger which threatened him. Why she had assisted me to escape the soldiery only to leave me in this wilderness could be accounted for but by the suggestion that her heart softened toward one whom she knew had learned to love her during those bright days we had passed in each other's society. But that she loved me in return I dared not even hope. Her answer to my declaration had been a laugh, and to me this girl's heart was as a sealed book. Moreover, it occurred to me that Valcour also loved her, and into his eyes I had seen her gaze as she never had gazed into mine during our most friendly intercourse.

The carriage had vanished long since, and the night air was chilly. I returned to the porch of the deserted house, and curling myself up on one of the benches soon sank into a profound slumber, for the events of the day had well-nigh exhausted me.

When I awoke a rough-looking, bearded man was bending over me. He wore a peasant's dress and carried a gun on his left arm.

"Who are you, senhor," he demanded, as my eyes unclosed, "and how came you here?"

I arose and stretched myself, considering who he might be.

"Why do you ask?" said I.

"There is war in the land, senhor," he responded, quietly, "and every man must be a friend or a foe to the Republic." He doffed his hat with rude devotion at the word, and added, "Declare yourself, my friend."

I stared at him thoughtfully. War in the land, said he! Then the "torch of rebellion" had really been fired. But by whom? Could it have been Paola, as Valcour had claimed? And why? Since the conspiracy had been unmasked and its leaders, with the exception of Fonseca, either scattered or imprisoned? Did the Minister of Police aim to destroy every one connected with the Cause by precipitating an impotent revolt? Or was there a master-hand directing these seemingly incomprehensible events?

The man was growing suspicious of my silence.

"Come!" said he, abruptly; "you shall go to Senhor Bastro."

"And where is that?" I asked, with interest, for Paola had reported that Bastro had fled the country.

My captor did not deign to reply. With the muzzle of his gun unpleasantly close to my back he marched me toward the edge of the forest, which we skirted for a time in silence. Then the path turned suddenly into a dense thicket, winding between closeset trees until, deep within the wood, we came upon a natural clearing of considerable extent.

In the centre of this space was a large low building constructed of logs and roofed with branches of trees, and surrounding the entire structure were grouped native Brazilians, armed with rifles, revolvers, and knives.

These men were not uniformed, and their appearance was anything but military; nevertheless there was a look upon their stern faces that warned me they were in deadly earnest and not to be trifled with.

As my intercourse with the republicans had been confined entirely to a few of their leaders, I found no familiar face among these people; so I remained impassive while my captor pushed me past the guards to a small doorway placed near a protecting angle of the building.

"Enter!" said he.

I obeyed, and the next moment, stood before a group of men who were evidently the officers or leaders of the little band of armed patriots I had seen without.

"Ah!" said one, in a deep bass voice, "it is Senhor Harcliffe, the secretary to Dom Miguel."

I have before mentioned the fact that whenever the conspirators had visited de Pintra they remained securely masked, so that their features were, with a few exceptions, unknown to me. But the voices were familiar enough, and the man who had brought me here had mentioned Sanchez Bastro's name; so I had little difficulty in guessing the identity of the personage who now addressed me.

"Why are you here, senhor?" he inquired, with evident anxiety; "and do you bring us news of the uprising?"

"I know nothing of the uprising except that your man here," and I turned to my guide, "tells me there is war in the land, and that the Revolution is proclaimed."

"Yes," returned Bastro, with a grave nod.

"Then," I continued, "I advise you to lay down your arms at once and return to your homes before you encounter arrest and imprisonment."

The leaders cast upon one another uneasy looks, and Bastro drew a small paper from his breast and handed it to me. I recognized it as one of the leaves from his notebook which Paola had attached to the carrier-pigeon, and upon it were scrawled these words, "Arise and strike!"

It was the signal long since agreed upon to start the Revolution.

With a laugh I handed back the paper.

"It is from Francisco Paola, the traitor," I said.

"Traitor!" they echoed, in an astonished chorus.

"Listen, gentlemen; it is evident you are ignorant of the events of the last two days." And in as few words as possible I related the occurrences at de Pintra's mansion, laying stress upon the arrest of Piexoto, the perfidy of the Minister of Police, and the death of Treverot.

They were not so deeply impressed as I had expected. The discovery of the empty vault had aroused no interest whatever, and they listened quietly and without comment to my story of Paola's betrayal of his fellow-conspirators to the Emperor.

But when I mentioned Treverot's death Bastro chose to smile, and indicating a tall gentleman standing at his left, he said:

"Permit me to introduce to you Senhor Treverot. He will tell you that he still lives."

"Then Paola lied?" I exclaimed, somewhat chagrined.

Bastro shrugged his shoulders.

"We have confidence in the Minister of Police," said he, calmly. "There is no doubt but General Fonseca, at Rio, has before now gained control of the capital, and that the Revolution is successfully established. We shall know everything very soon, for my men have gone to the nearest telegraph station for news. Meantime, to guard against any emergency, our patriots are being armed in readiness for combat, and, in Matto Grosso at least, the royalists are powerless to oppose us."

"But the funds—the records! What will happen if the Emperor seizes them?" I asked.

"The Emperor will not seize them," returned Bastro, unmoved. "The contents of the vault are in safe-keeping."

Before I could question him further a man sprang through the doorway.

"The wires from Rio are cut in every direction," said he, in an agitated voice. "A band of the Uruguayan guards, under de Souza and Valcour, is galloping over the country to arrest every patriot they can find, and our people are hiding themselves in terror."

Consternation spread over the features of the little band which a moment before had deemed itself so secure and powerful. Bastro turned to pace the earthen floor with anxious strides, while the others watched him silently.

"What of Francisco Paola?" suddenly asked the leader.

"Why, senhor, he seems to have disappeared," replied the scout, with hesitation.

"Disappeared! And why?"

"Perhaps I can answer that question, Senhor Bastro," said a voice behind us, and turning my head I saw my friend Pedro, the station-master at Cuyaba, standing within the doorway.

"Enter, Pedro," commanded the leader. "What news do you bring, and why have you abandoned your post?"

"The wires are down," said the station-master, "and no train is allowed to leave Rio since the Emperor reached there at midnight."

"Then you know nothing of what has transpired at the capital?" asked Bastro.

"Nothing, senhor. It was yesterday morning when the Emperor's party met the train at Cuyaba, and I handed him a telegram from de Lima, the Minister of State. It read in this way: 'General Fonseca and his army have revolted and seized the palace, the citadel, and all public buildings. I have called upon every loyal Brazilian to rally to the support of the Empire. Return at once. Arrest the traitors Francisco Paola and his sister. Situation critical.'"

"Ah!" cried Bastro, drawing a deep breath, "and what said the Emperor to that message?"

"He spoke with his counselors, and wired this brief reply to de Lima. 'I am coming.' Also he sent a soldier back to de Pintra's mansion with orders to arrest Francisco and Lesba Paola. Then he boarded the train and instructed the conductor to proceed to Rio with all possible haste. And that is all I know, senhor, save that I called up Rio last evening and learned that Fonseca was still in control of the city. At midnight the wires were cut and nothing further can be learned. Therefore I came to join you, and if there is a chance to fight for the Cause I beg that you will accept my services."

Bastro paused in his walk to press the honest fellow's hand; then he resumed his thoughtful pacing.

The others whispered among themselves, and one said:

"Why need we despair, Sanchez Bastro? Will not Fonseca, once in control, succeed in holding the city?"

"Surely!" exclaimed the leader. "It is not for him that I fear, but for ourselves. If the Uruguayans are on our trail we must disperse our men and scatter over the country, for the spy Valcour knows, I am sure, of this rendezvous."

"But they are not hunting you, senhor," protested Pedro, "but rather Paola and his sister, who have managed to escape from de Pintra's house."

"Nevertheless, the Uruguayans are liable to be here at any moment," returned Bastro, "and there is nothing to be gained by facing that devil, de Souza."

He then called his men together in the clearing, explained to them the situation, and ordered them to scatter and to secrete themselves in the edges of the forests and pick off the Uruguayans with their rifles whenever occasion offered.

"If anything of importance transpires," he added, "report to me at once at my house."

Without a word of protest his commands were obeyed. The leaders mounted their horses and rode away through the numerous forest paths that led into the clearing.

The men also saluted and disappeared among the trees, and presently only Bastro, Pedro, and myself stood in the open space. "Come with me, Senhor Harcliffe," said the leader; "I shall be glad to have you join me at breakfast. You may follow us, Pedro."

Then he strode to the edge of the clearing, pressed aside some bushes, and stepped into a secret path that led through the densest portion of the tangled forest, I followed, and Pedro brought up the rear.

For some twenty minutes Bastro guided us along the path, which might well have been impassable to a novice,

Something seemed to clutch my heart with a grip of iron.

BISON FURNACE

In an actual test under ordinary conditions a prominent Montreal Professor of Physics reports the following results with a Bison Hot Water Heater:

Starting with the water at 65°, eleven minutes after the match was applied its temperature increased to 100° in the upper section.

Four minutes later it went up to 137°.

And 29 minutes after starting it was at 194°.

The bottom section gets as hot as in any other furnace—the great gain is in the top section.

Next morning, 15 hours after it had been left for the night, the water was at 124° in the top section and 100° in the lower.

In any furnace the water always goes into the mains at the temperature of the upper section.

In the Bison Furnace the water in the upper section is always the hottest—in other furnaces it is the coolest.

Pellham's Loan

By LOUISE GLOSTER

Copyright, 1906, by Homer Sprague

Pellham nervously paced the platform. In twenty minutes the train would come and take him away from Eaton and his brief dream of paradise. It would take him back to town, and he would try to forget that he had ever been engaged to Alice Carver.

It was funny, he thought, that they never should have had disputes until they had become engaged, but since Christmas eve, when he had slipped the ring upon her finger and had assured her that it bound her to him for life, there had been nothing but misunderstandings, culminating in the dispute of last night, when she had given back the ring and had left him with head erect—to break down when she reached her own room.

The Carver house party had lasted well into the new year, and there were still half a dozen guests at the big house. He wondered bitterly if Alice would be engaged to Jordan before the party broke up. Jordan had kissed her under the mistletoe Christmas eve, and Jordan had been the bone of contention ever since. He was so occupied over Jordan's shortcomings that he never noticed Fay Gressit's approach until she tapped him lightly upon the arm.

"I'm in the most awful fix," she laughed. "I came to the station and never realized that I was a pauper. Can you let me have $20? There is no time to send back to Carver castle."

Pellham performed a lightning calculation. His ticket had cost him $8.40. That from $20 left $11.60. It would never do to confess that he did not have it. Fay would gloat over the fact that she had caught Bob Pellham penniless. He raised his hat.

"Certainly," he said. "Wait here and I will purchase your ticket and look after your trunk."

He stepped into the waiting room and stayed there long enough to purchase a ticket. He remembered it had taken him about three minutes, and at the end of a similar period he stepped on the platform again with the pasteboard and change in his hand, as if he had just come from the window.

HE CRIED "COME IN!" AND CONFRONTED FRANK JORDAN.

"It will be real nice to have your company to town," she said. Bob colored.

"I've changed my mind," he explained. "I'm not going to town this morning. May wait until the last train."

"I will have father send a check to your club," she smiled as the train came in and he saw her settled in the chair car. "I suppose I shall see you at Collins' Monday?"

"Surely," he smiled as he raised his hat and made for the platform, but as the train grew smaller in the distance he became less confident. It was Saturday afternoon. He could not wire to his office for money. They closed at noon, and it was 11 now. He might try the boys, but most of them went out of town over Sunday. In any event, he should hate to explain that he had left the Carvers in such a hurry that he had not even had time to send for funds. He made his way to the little hotel, where the landlord's curious glances made him realize that the transfer to the hotel would excite curiosity.

He began to feel that he had acted very foolishly. If he had confessed to Fay that he only had $10—that would have taken her to town—or told her to send up to Carver's and have taken the next train! Now it looked as if he should have to stay in the town over Sunday.

The landlord could not cash him a check, so he took a room and made his way to it. After the comfort of Carver castle the dingy room, with its sheet iron stove and florid wall paper, seemed intolerable, but it was better than wandering around town and perhaps running into Frank Jordan.

Somehow, as the afternoon passed, Jordan appeared less formidable than he had, and Pellham began to feel uncomfortably like a fool. It had been such a trifle to quarrel over. He had found them in the music room and Jordan had been disentangling a strand of Alice's hair from his coat button.

He had refused to believe her prompt explanation that in turning the music he had caught her hair. He had assumed a flirtation, and his cutting remarks had ended in the return of his ring and misery for them both. In his hot anger he had not liked to ask his host to cash a check and had gone away without a thought of emergencies.

There is no time to consider the commonplace things of life when one has just lost the girl he loves, and all would have been well enough had he not feared Fay Gressit's ridicule.

He made a pretense of reading a book he found in his hand bag, but he could not interest himself in the story and long before the dusk began to close in he was thoroughly miserable.

He welcomed a knock at the door. It could only be the porter with coal or the chambermaid with towels, but somehow he felt as if he had been stranded on a desert island, and he welcomed the advent of any one. He sprang to his feet as he cried "Come in!" and confronted Frank Jordan.

"You will pardon my breaking in upon your solitude," began Jordan, "but Miss Carver sent me for you."

"How did you know I was here?" he demanded suspiciously.

"Miss Gressit sent a telegram warning us that you were still in town and asking us to look you up."

"Have you the telegram?" asked Bob. Jordan shook his head.

"Miss Carver has that. She just asked me to look you up. I say, old chap, I feel awfully cut up over last night. There really was nothing to it. Of course I know how you feel. When a fellow is first engaged he is jealous of the rest of mankind. Good Lord, when I was first engaged to Fay I used to be jealous even of her riding master."

"You engaged to Fay Gressit?" shouted Bob. "I thought you were—well, interested in Alice."

"Sure I'm interested," agreed Jordan. "She's been a sort of fairy godmother to Fay and me. You know, Mrs. Gressit does not approve of me; thinks I'm not a good match for Fay, and if it weren't for Alice I don't know what we would have done."

"I suppose everybody is laughing at my staying behind," said Pellham weakly.

"Don't know anything about it," declared Jordan. "I can let you have what you need and you can go right on to town or you can come back with me and simply explain that you changed your mind. If I were you I'd go back. Alice says you have a ring that belongs to her."

"I'll go," said Bob. "Help me get these things together."

Some hours later Bob and Alice sat in the music room while Jordan was doing his best to hold the rest of the crowd in the library with parlor magic.

"I'm awfully glad you came back," whispered Alice as she slipped her hand—the one with the ring on it—into his. "I think Fay is the smartest girl I know."

"But what made her think I was going to stay over?" he asked. "I told her I was going down on the next train."

"She saw you buy your ticket and that there was only the one bill in your purse. She knew that if you stayed over there would be a chance for an explanation, so she borrowed every cent you had and telegraphed us from the next stop just what she had done."

"I think," said Pellham slowly, "that I owe Fay a great deal more than she owes me."

"I should hope," said Alice, "that you value me at more than $20."

"Dear," he whispered, "you are without price."

"Without money and without price," she quoted. "You without the money and I without the price."

Foreign Bodies In the Flesh.

It is not an uncommon thing for people to carry needles, pins, bullets and bits of steel around with them for half a lifetime, but no one can be found who would be willing voluntarily to undertake such a burden. And yet there are instances where articles which might seem to be of a most dangerous character have been carried in the body for years. A man, in repairing a building, fell through a window, breaking the glass and severely cutting one of his arms. The wound was carefully and antiseptically dressed, and the man went about his business. Three years later he called upon the doctor who had attended him and complained of a boil on his wrist. The physician casually mentioned the injury which he had sustained and asked him if he suffered any inconvenience from it. He answered, "No, not much," but said that at times there was a peculiar sensation between the elbow and shoulder. Upon examination the doctor found a long splinter of glass just ready to prick through the skin at a point several inches above the place where it had originally entered. The glass was drawn out, the wound properly dressed, and the man recovered, thereafter being entirely free from the annoying sharp pains to which he had for years been subject.

Well Balanced Cats.

"Did you know that if you cut a cat's tail off she can't catch mice any more?" asked a young woman of another.

"I don't see why," replied the other, "and, further, I can't imagine what occasion you have had for cutting off cats' tails to see."

"I haven't cut off any cats' tails, but an accident deprived our cat of its caudal appendage. The feline became as helpless as a ship without a rudder. When it tried to spring upon an object it would alight far to one side. The look of pained surprise on the cat's features was pathetic. After awhile it learned to jump straight again, but it was a long and painful experience for the poor cat. The balance of power and the power to balance seem to lie in the tail of the cat." —Kansas City Times.

AN EMPEROR'S TASTE.

It Was the Origin of a Common Saying in Austria.

An anecdote which was current of Ferdinand I. of Austria at one time greatly delighted his subjects and gave rise to a common saying. One summer day he was hunting in the Syrian mountains and was overtaken by a violent thunderstorm. He sought refuge in a farmhouse whose occupants were just then at dinner, and his fancy was caught by some smoking dumplings made of coarse flour. He tasted them, liked them and asked for more, and when he got to Vienna, to the horror of the royal cooks, he ordered the same dumplings to be served up daily. The courtiers were scandalized that such a coarse dish should figure on the menu, and even his physicians remonstrated against the use of such food.

The emperor had always been the most pliant of men, but he now showed that he had a will of his own and persisted in gratifying his new fancy. Finally the physicians pretended that it was dangerous to his health to be living on dumplings and insisted on his giving them up. The hitherto docile sovereign stamped his foot and declared that he would never sign another official document if his diet were denied him.

"Emperor I am," he shouted, "and dumplings I will have!"

To prevent a stoppage of the government machinery opposition was withdrawn, and his majesty clung tenaciously to his dumplings. Then the imperial phrase became proverbial, and thereafter when any one insisted on gratifying a silly whim some one was sure to say:

"Emperor I am, and dumplings I will have!"

RELATING TO IRON.

Discovery of the Metal, According to Various Authorities.

The Bible speaks of Tubal Cain as the discoverer of iron and the father of smiths. The Egyptians imputed to Hephaestus the same honor, while Pliny mentions it having been discovered by Dactyles on Mount Ida after the forests on the mountain side had been destroyed by lightning. This was about 1,432 years B. C. Jeremiah and Ezekiel both mention iron in their Scriptural writings, the latter specially mentioning two qualities of the metal and calling one bright iron, which was probably steel.

Moses mentions an iron furnace, and Job speaks of it as being taken out of the earth. Thousands of years before the opening of the Christian era the Egyptians used iron in making sickles, knives and such things. Sparta first used iron for money. Britain also used it as a medium of barter and exchange prior to the conquest by the Romans.

The Britons, before the time of Christ used to export iron to Gaul, and after the Roman conquest the conquerors established extensive smelting works, which existed at least as late as the Saxon conquest.—St. James' Gazette.

Racial Discrimination.

A small French-Italian coasting steamer was proceeding on its way. The passengers were of various nationalities—English, American, French, Italian and one large German. Most of the male passengers were gathered in the smoking room when the steward appeared at the door and with a bow announced, "Dinner, it is serve!"

The English and American contingent arose and started toward the dining saloon. The steward, seeing that his announcement had not been understood by all, continued, "Messieurs, c'est servi!" and as a portion of the passengers still remained seated, "Il pranzo e servito!"

The French and Italians followed the English and Americans, leaving the large German in solitary state.

"Himmel!" he muttered hungrily. "Is it dot no German mans gets somethings to eat on dis boat, hein?"

The English of India.

Applying for a post in the police of the central provinces of India, a native wrote: "I have a good long equiline nose, piercing eyelashes on a semyglebular face and a good physique. My family has a history that takes my imagination back to three pedigrees, when my grandfather was a millioner. With the visicitude and times matter change and my father was driven to the necessity to accept a schoolmastership. Ultimately he enjoyed his well earned pension by the time he gave up his ghost. In case my aspirations turn out a reality I shall as a matter of course be bound to prey God for your long life and prosperity."

Conger Eels.

Conger eels hunt for the octopus and, when found, proceed to browse on its limbs. The octopus tries to hug the slippery, slimy conger tight, but in vain, and, finding its limbs growing less, discharges its ink in the face of the foe and under cover of the turbid water beats a hasty retreat. It is to escape the too pressing attention of its foes that the octopus possesses the power of changing its color to correspond with that of its surroundings.

An English Superstition.

According to an ancient bit of Sussex folklore, when a bride returns home from church her single friends at once rob her of all the pins in her dress under the impression that every maiden who is lucky enough to possess one will be married during the course of a year.—London Express.

Sometimes vegetable growth is very rapid. The common mushroom attains its full size in less than twenty-four hours.

THE GYPSIES.

They Are a Separate People, a Tribe Quite by Themselves.

"Such as wake on the night and sleep on the day and haunt taverns and ale houses and no man wot from whence they come nor whither they go." So quaintly describes an old English statute against the gypsies. Ever since the year 1530, says a writer in the London Standard, Great Britain has tried to get rid of this strange people without appreciable success. Every year or so some county is up in arms against them, yet they persist in returning and apparently thrive under persecution.

The gypsies are popularly supposed to come originally from Egypt, as their name indicates, but their origin is traced farther east than the land of the Nile. Wherever they come from, they are a separate people, a tribe quite by themselves.

They appeared in England about 1505, and twenty-six years later Henry VIII. ordered them to leave the country in sixteen days, taking all their goods with them. "An outlandish people," he called them. The act was ineffectual, and in 1562 Elizabeth framed a still more stringent law, and many were hanged.

"But what numbers were executed," says one old writer, "yet notwithstanding, all would not prevaile, but they wandered as before, uppe and downe." They got into Scotland and became an intolerable nuisance. Both in that country and in England legislation proved quite ineffectual. The acts gradually fell into desuetude. Under George IV. all that was left of the ban against the gypsies was the mild law that any person "telling fortunes shall be deemed a rogue and a vagabond."

"Gypsies are no longer a proscribed class," says a recent writer. "Probably the modern gypsy does little evil beyond begging and petty theft, but his determination not to work is as strong as ever, and it seems curious that an industrial people like ours continues to tolerate a horde of professional idlers." How numerous the horde is may be gathered from the fact that the number who wintered in Surrey one year was estimated at 10,000.

The language as well as the life of the gypsy tribe has a tenacity of its own. Many of their words have taken firm hold in a half slang, half permissibly way. Shaver is the gypsy word for child. Pal is pure gypsy. Codger means a man. Cutting up is gypsy for quarreling, and cove stands for "that fellow."

A Kurdish Tent.

The tents of the Kurds, in which they seek the pasturage of the mountains in summer, vary much in size, though in appearance and shape they conform throughout to one plan. The covering of the tents consists of long, narrow strips of black goat's hair material sewed together lengthways. Along the center of the tent this roofing is supported on three to five poles, according to the size, and stretched out by ropes which, made fast to the edge of the roofing, are pegged securely to the ground. The poles within the tent being of some height, usually eight to ten feet, the edge of the tenting does not nearly reach the ground, but walls are formed of matting of reeds, held together by black goat's hair thread, which is often so arranged as to form patterns on the yellow mats. —Blackwood's Magazine.

Funeral Customs In Greece.

Many funeral customs in Greece are unique. The body of an unmarried girl is always dressed as a bride, the common saying being, "She is married to death." The body of a boy is always dressed as a sailor. Women never accompany funerals to church or to the graves. Processions are always on foot, the priest leading, accompanied by acolytes bearing the cross and lanterns. The body of the deceased is invariably exposed to view, and at the close of the service in the church, which concludes with the words, "Take the last kiss," both friends and strangers press about the body and give this token of farewell.

A Race of Genealogists.

Some one said of the Welsh in the eighteenth century every old woman was a genealogist. This is still true, for no race is truer to type, more retentive of national characteristics.—London Outlook.

DAY OF RECORD-SMASHER.

Immense Traffic the Past Season of Navigation on the Great Lakes—Vesselmen Made Money.

The last grain cargo has left Fort William and the season of navigation for 1905 is at an end. That the final incident of the closing chapter was the clearing of a record-breaking cargo is not so notable as it would have been a few years ago. Canadians have reached the record-smashing era, and the big things of yesterday have become the incidents of to-day. The story of Canadian commerce on the great lakes for 1905 is one of expansion. It is only a step from the days when wooden barges broke records with cargoes of wheat that ranged around 30,000 bushels, to the sailing of last clearance of the Rogers with 351,000. Of this stupendous crop of grain garnered in the Canadian Northwest at the close of the summer 15,000,000 bushels have crossed the great lakes to be moved on for export via Canadian traffic routes. In the general crush 5,000,000 bushels approximately found its way to the seaboard via Buffalo. In addition to this 5,000,000 bushels of last year's crop were shipped from Fort William in Canadian hulls earlier in the season, making a total eastern and export movement in Canadian grain of approximately twenty-five million bushels. It will be readily understood that these figures at this early date cannot be official.

Railway Equipment Inadequate.

Large as these figures are, they do not represent the best efforts of the Canadian lake marine. The Grand Trunk fell far short of the requirements of the grain traffic at its newly-acquired port, Depot Harbor. The system could not furnish sufficient cars to handle the business with despatch, and the elevators at Midland, Meaford and Collingwood were found to be under lease by United States corporations and not in such position that Canadian business could profit to the fullest by the facilities which they might have afforded. At Owen Sound the Canadian Pacific candidly declined to cater extensively to the grain business. Their hands were full there with the movement of package freight and mill stuff, and while this offered it did not pay to handle wheat. The result of all this was to unduly crowd Depot Harbor and to further add to the Grand Trunk's embarrassment at that point.

Had the fleet of grain-carriers met with reasonable despatch they could have moved 3,000,000 bushels more before the close of navigation. At prevailing rates the loss to vessel interests alone was not far short of $100,000. Added to this, however, is the loss consequent on the inability of the shipper to forward quickly, and the unsettling effect on the far western markets, which, it is said, was primarily the cause of 56-cent wheat at Saskatoon and other points.

Vessel-Owners' Profits.

While it is recognized that the capital invested in the Canadian grain fleet represents some millions of dollars, the profits on the season were correspondingly good. The season opened on a two and one-quarter cent basis and closed at four cents per bushel. The average was easily three cents. Last year's wheat was moved at about two and one-quarter. It is probable that 5,000,000 bushels was moved in United States hulls, so that ahe remaining Canadian wheat business has produced for the Canadian vessel-owners a revenue of $662,500.

Wheat is the material evidence of the nation's wealth; the west-bound package freight business is its reciprocating feature. It is the latter that tells of the purchasing power of the people who have the wheat to sell. Just as the carloads of pianos that are unloaded into the vessel's hold tell of the increasing wealth and appreciation of luxury among the western people, so also do the thousand-and-one manufactured articles contribute to that certainty and bear evidence that eastern Canada is pulsating with the commercial circulation that is the life of trade.

Package Freight Business.

Three lake routes have been extensively identified with the package freight business to western Canada. Naturally the Canadian Pacific Railway participates in this business to the greatest extent. A semi-official statement places the package freight business via Owen Sound and C. P. R. at 154,000 tons during the thirty-two weeks of navigation. Second in importance is the route via Sarnia and the Northern Navigation Co., which has moved westward this season about 80,000 tons of package freight. The other is the all-water route from Montreal to Fort William via Toronto and Hamilton. This is a comparatively new enterprise in which several vessel interests are participating and the steamers on the route include the Ames, Pellatt, Plummer, Neepewah, Wahcondah, Arabian, Haddington and Advance. Their west-bound package freight traffic was between 60,000 and 70,000 tons. Taking the lower figure the total business in this classification was 294,000 tons of manufactured products.

Great Highways of Traffic.

To review Canadian business on the great lakes for the season of 1905 in its entirety would require considerable space. Take the coal business for example. From Lake Erie ports during the season just closed coal was delivered by water as follows: To Georgian Bay ports, 200,000 tons; Fort William and Jackfish, 500,000 tons; West Fort William, 300,000 tons. Half of this was carried in Canadian bottoms, during the slack months of the season, at thirty to thirty-five cents a ton, giving a reasonable margin of profit and a north-bound cargo. About 9,000,000 bushels of United States grain passed into the elevators at Depot Harbor and Midland and 40,000 tons of United States manufactured goods passed through Depot Harbor over Canadian lines in bond from New England to the western States. Half a million bushels of American oats from Chicago came to a Georgian Bay elevator for a large Canadian cereal works. Then 10,000 tons of pig iron were carried from Midland to the steel mills at Sault Ste. Marie, and thousands of tons of iron ore moved down from Michipicoten to the smelters. All this is practically new business and Canadian vessels are taking care of it.

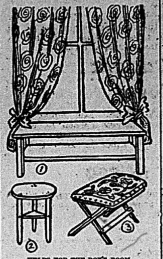
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

THE BOY'S DEN.

Suggestions That May Help Its Owner In Making It Attractive.

Often boys display much ingenuity and artistic taste in fitting up their "dens" with furniture and decorations from their own hands.

With the necessary carpentering tools, a few pots of paint and furniture stain, a few brushes, etc., the boy will show his room proudly to his parents and friends, who in turn will be not only much astonished but highly pleased with what he has accomplished there. And often the furniture he builds is more serviceable, as well as more artistic, than the cheaply put together stuff that now floods the market and fills the homes. Besides this, his "den" is characteristic of himself, and he will feel a pride in its originality. A few rough drawn designs for odd pieces to help furnish a boy's "den" are given here. In following them the young cabinetmaker will begin to discover points for improvement, and gradually he will become his own designer, as well as being skilled in the use of tools.



HELPS FOR THE BOY'S ROOM.

No. 1 shows a convenient and artistic window bench with shelf for newspapers, etc. It is made of any kind of wood the boy finds at hand and may be simply painted to match the color of the woodwork in the room or stained some pretty contrasting color.

No. 2 is an odd bit of a table made with broomstick legs, a barrel end for the top and a three cornered shelf.

No. 3 is a "cross legged stool," a necessary acquisition in a boy's den. It is of cherry colored wood, with padded seat covered with burlap.

The Carrier Bee.

You often have heard of carrier pigeons and the part they play in war, but how many boys and girls ever heard of carrier bees?

These little honey gatherers have such a sense of direction that they can always fly straight to their hives, even from places they have never visited before.

We are told that a few years ago a beekeeper trained some of his insects as message carriers. Knowing they will always fly home from any point in a range of four or five miles, he tied tiny notes for his little daughters on the bees and set them loose in a totally unfamiliar place. In a very short time they were back at their own hives, messages and all.

Some people think bees might be made very useful in war times, and even now experiments are being made to see just how far and how directly they will fly.

Some Dolls.

Most dolls are born in Thuringia, a province of Germany. Thuringia is sometimes called puppet land on this account. Almost the entire population is employed making some parts of the dolls which are sent to every country in the world except India. The little Hindoos are said to be the only dollless children in the world, all countries having something which the little girl can rock to sleep and love. That the American girls love dolls, one has only to read that last year over $8,000,000 worth of dollies came into this country, and nearly all of them from Thuringia.

Conundrums.

Why should a housekeeper never put the letter M into her refrigerator? Because it will change ice into mice.

Why is bread like the sun? Because it rises from the yeast.

What is the cheapest feature of the face? Nostrils, two for a scent (cent).

What is the smallest room in the world? Mushroom.

A Little Problem.

Two men find in a cellar an eight gallon cask full of wine; also an empty five gallon and an empty three gallon cask. They wish to measure out two lots of four gallons each. How can they do it? Figure it out. It is not so hard.

Suppose.

If your fingers grew out at your elbow
And your toes sprouted out at your knee,
If your mouth was on top of your topknot,
How funny, indeed, that would be!
And suppose that your nose went on crosswise,
That your ears dangled down from your chin
And your eyes looked out backward, not forward,
A fine pickle you would be in!

The Woman's Auxiliary

YESTERDAY'S SESSIONS WERE FRAUGHT WITH DEEP INTEREST TO ALL CONCERNED.

The sessions yesterday in connection with the 20th annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Ontario, now being held here, were fraught with interest. The delegates appointed were mostly all in attendance.

In the morning at 9.30 Holy Communion was partaken of by 95 communicants, and an appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. Rural Dean Beamish. The offertory was a thank offering for the Diocesan Widows' and Orphans' fund.

At 10.30 the session proper opened at St. Thomas' Church Hall. After devotional exercises, and roll call Mrs. (Rev.) G. R. Beamish gave an address of welcome, and this was appropriately replied to by Mrs. R. S. Wilkinson, of Amherst Island. The reports of the Recording and Corresponding Secretaries were read, and showed that the Auxiliary was progressing.

In the afternoon the session was not lengthy. Miss Gildersleeve, of Kingston, Vice-President, occupied the chair. Sixty-three delegates answered the roll call. The proceedings opened by the singing of an appropriate missionary hymn and prayer. The Hon. President, Mrs. (Bishop) Mills, gave an address, which was both interesting and helpful. It showed that four new branches had been formed during the year, that there was an increase in membership, and also an increase in interest. The junior branch also showed increases in numbers and attendance at meetings.

Miss Cartwright, Principal of St. Hilda's College, Toronto, gave an address, which was much appreciated. Her remarks were an incentive to the members to show increased activity in the missionary cause. She spoke along the line of self-denial and the need for generosity being practised. The efficacy of prayer was a topic the speaker dealt upon, showing the power of prayer and results accomplished.

After the afternoon session a reception was held at St. Thomas' Church Rectory, which was most enjoyable.

EVENING SESSION.

A public missionary meeting was held in the evening at St. Agnes' School hall, which was filled to the doors. Rev. Canon Bogert was chairman and opened the proceedings with appropriate prayer.

Rev. Cyril Brown of Toronto, who was for some time engaged in missionary work in Melanesia, gave an address relating to his work in that portion of the uncivilized world. Melanesia was virtually a group of islands extending north of New Zealand and stretching to New Guinea. Some of the Islands were small in area, others hundreds of miles in extent. The color of the inhabitants was black and brown, like coffee. Various languages were spoken, there being within a day's journey among the islands, five different languages used. The speaker referred at length to the habits, etc., of the inhabitants. The houses were dark and dismal, there being no light and only a small aperture where one could enter, and they smoke continually in these places of abode. Their chief occupation appeared to be fighting and fishing. They fight upon the least provocation and then follows a feast of peace. Their arrows and spears are principally made out of human bones. Whilst they do not generally worship idols they believe in evil spirits and imagine that these spirits are in certain portions of the waters, and also in bushes. They appease these alleged evil spirits by placing food of various kinds about the bushes or throwing it into the water. The missionary work was, however, having its effect, and many are being brought to the foot of the cross. Owing to malarial fever being very prevalent, it was no easy task for the missionaries, and some have been compelled to leave on this account. In concluding the Rev. gentleman said there was a joy in the work of seeing the heathen converted to Christianity. More missionaries were required, even in that part of the world, and the Woman's Auxiliary could by their prayers and means assist in the work.

Miss Cartwright, of Toronto, gave an instructive address, the subject of which was "Opportunity and Responsibility." In her opening remarks she referred to the thousands who are emigrating to the North-west and the necessity there of mission work being done among the new arrivals, which were of all classes. In Japan there was also a wide field for labor, especially as that country had now entered upon a great era of expansion. That country is eager for religion, and we must prove to the Japanese that our religion is for their benefit and advancement. In Corea there is also a great field for laborers in the Master's vineyard. Here was a grand opportunity for Christian work. Another country where there were great opportunities for Christian work was China, with its teeming millions. This country is reaching out for western civilization, and many of its old customs are being abolished. Many of its young men are being sent abroad to be educated. In Africa and India there were also fields of labor. The cry comes for the missionary to work in these countries, and where are the women and men who will go? Many are willing to go, but the means to send them are not forthcoming. The urgent call is for more money. The church as a body does not appear to be thoroughly awakened to its responsibilities in this regard. The essential command of the Lord Jesus Christ was, "Go out into all the world and preach the gospel." Whilst all could not go all could help. We can all pray fervently for the missionaries, and all can assist them in their work. In concluding Miss Cartwright made an earnest appeal for more activity in the mission cause.

The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of a hymn and prayer.

THURSDAY MORNING.

At 9.30 this morning Missionary Litany was said in St. Thomas' Church, after which the members adjourned to the church hall.

Miss Gildersleeve, Vice-President, occupied the chair. After roll call and minutes the ballots for President were collected.

The result showed that Miss McCauley, of Kingston, had been elected President.

The thank offering for the Diocesan Widows' and Orphans' Fund was announced as $516.56. This announcement was followed by the singing of the Doxology.

DORCAS' WORK.

This branch of the Auxiliary, during the year, sent out 68 bales to mission stations, value of same $1,035.39; new garments, 1,609; groceries, $112.13; 159 yards of carpet, 1,862 second-hand garments, and 18 complete suits for school children. Some articles were sent to the leper settlement in Japan.

The report of the Diocesan Organizing Secretary showed that 10 new branches had been organized during the year, and there were still 13 parishes without a W. A. branch.

Reports were presented on Domestic Missions at the Peigan Reserve and Onion Lake. At the latter place there is a mission school, at which 20 boys and 14 girls are at present in attendance.

Rev. Cyril Brown answered a number of questions in regard to his work at Melanesia, and Miss Cartwright conducted a literary conference, which was of a profitable nature.

Moonlight Excursion Was a Big Success.

The moonlight excursion to Foresters' Island, under the auspices of the local and Trenton branches of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, took place last evening and was very largely attended. The Varuna brought down a goodly number from Trenton, and only about half the people who wished to were able to get aboard at the dock here. Chalaupka's orchestra was in attendance, and helped to make the trip a pleasant one. About three-quarters of an hour was spent at Foresters' Island, and the Belleville excursionists returned a little before one o'clock this morning, tired but happy.

Chancel Purchased By Rev. Mr. Forneri.

Kingston, June 6. — All Saints' Chancel, or what remains of it, about which so much ado was made since its being turned into a stable, has been secured by purchase by the rector of St. Luke's, and a carpenter has been engaged to take it to pieces and convey the holy materials to St. Luke's church plot. The whole affair is to come before the Synod, when the heart-burning created will be warmly discussed.

Raising the Tracks.

The G. T. R. construction gang has returned, and will now, it is said, raise the tracks near the overhead bridge at the Madoc road crossing, and also at the Canifton road crossing. There are about 140 in the gang.

Mining Activity.

Mr. W. A. Hungerford is securing options on mines of low grade mundic ores for shipping purposes to New York. He has secured an option on the North Hastings Warehouse property at the G.T.R. station for a couple of months. This lead runs into the McKenzie hill west, which is also secured. It is intended to commence work as soon as properties can be secured to make the output a large one. These ores are in demand and the properties named have large veins.—Madoc Review.

Some Chorists Are "Millinery Dummies,"

BISHOP VINCENT HAS A FEW THINGS TO SAY ABOUT HOW CHURCH SERVICES ARE CONDUCTED.

Niagara Falls, June 6.—At the Hamilton Conference on Saturday, Bishop Vincent speaking on "The Public Service," said that the curse of to-day is the thoughtless choir, whose members fail to carry out the idea what they are there for and are merely millinery dummies.

"Very soon the choir will be out of sight," said the speaker. "We are now suffering from an architectural fad, which places the choir in the forefront, and in the eyes of everyone. No person should be seen but the minister. But as things are to-day, the minister is some times lost sight of in the magnificent finery of the choir, and the poor minister has a very hard time of it. A flippant choir may easily neutralize the whole service."

The only ideal choir Bishop Vincent knew of was in Delaware Avenue Methodist Church, Buffalo, where the choir consists of a quartette which is seated in the front pew and when leading the singing walks up to the platform. Afterwards they go back to their seats.

The bishop did not believe in having the organ play over the first verse of well-known hymns. One line was sufficient. Musical interludes between verses of singing he considered an intrusion. The organist should be a devout Christian; so should the choir members.

"Humor in a pulpit in a church is distinctly vulgar and has no place there," said the speaker positively. "I am happy to say we have but few ministers who imitate Sam Jones, though he is a remarkable man."

"Don't mind the higher critics," he advised ministers. "Assume that the Bible is divine. If it is human, the higher critics will tear it to pieces, and it should be. If it is divine no human power can tear it to pieces."

"I HAVEN'T MET THEM"

Satisfied Policyholders Not in Evidence to Mr. Shepley.

But Actuary Sanderson Assures Him That "The Policyholders of the Canada Life Are All Well Satisfied"—Counsel Hellmuth's Query Regarding the Value of the Testimonials—A Day's Dealing With Figures.

Toronto, June 7.—The actuarial evidence of Frank Sanderson of the Canada Life, given before the Insurance Commission, was not concluded yesterday. No new points were adduced. Mr. Shepley spent the morning on the change in reserve basis, and the afternoon on the "profit and loss" statement and the statement of investments by the company.

The Imperial Life will be the next company, as Mr. Shepley purposes finishing with the Canada Life to-day.

Basis of Reserve.

Frank Sanderson, the actuary of the Canada Life, told of his connection with the company. He explained the basis of reserve used by the Canada Life since the commencement of the company. For the first ten years the reserve was based on the Carlyle 6 per cent. table, then on a 5 per cent. table, and later (1877) on the new 4 1-2 table. In 1889 President Ramsay placed $225,000 in the reserve fund, and changed the basis to the American 4 1-2 table. In 1894 the company made a further change to the American 4 per cent. table, which held until the Dominion legislation of 1899.

The influence that the fall in the rate of interest of nearly 2 per cent., in 1895 to 1898, had on the basis of reserve was shown by the extracts read by Mr. Shepley from addresses by Mr. Ramsay.

The Legislature of 1899 made the H. M. table compulsotry, and from then all new business was to be valued on a 3 1-2 per cent. basis.

Made Change Quickly.

The company went out after expert opinion on the course to pursue in the face of the new legislation. Half a million that had been laid aside was turned into reserve. It was then that $500,000 was taken out of the 1894 quinquennial profits, $1,070,000 out of 1899 profits, and $995,000 in 1901. This totaled $2,565,000 the sum necessary to turn from the company's standard to the compulsory standard required by the Government.

Mr. Sanderson defended the action of the Canada Life in making the change quickly instead of taking Mr. Hellmuth's way—1-15 of 1 per cent. per annum. Mr. Shepley explained that the increased revenue earned larger amounts in profits, but took more of the gross premium. This decreased the loading and increased the net premiums. It took some time for the increased profits earned on the reserve to offset the decreased loadings.

"The policyholders of the Canada Life are all well satisfied," said the witness, abruptly. He displayed a book containing testimonials from policyholders.

"I haven't met them," said Mr. Shepley.

"Are they at 25 cents a line?" queried Mr. Hellmuth.

Profit and Loss.

Mr. Shepley continued the examination of Actuary Sanderson in the afternoon, taking up the profit and loss account. The method of loading was explained by Mr. Sanderson, and Mr. Shepley passed to the next item in the statement.

Mr. Shepley tried to learn what the business done by the Canada Life had cost in 1905. Witness thought that the mortality gains, premiums placed and expenses would be found in the second exhibit. Counsel read that "loading and savings in death losses" for 1905 amounted to $96,148.80. This amount, thought Mr. Shepley, was to cover expenses. The cost of the business was $545,430.36.

At this juncture Mr. Shepley went over the profit and loss account item by item, and Mr. Sanderson explained in detail, showing how the difference between the net gain and total expenses was arrived at. Besides medical fees, etc., 45 per cent. of the head office salaries and 50 per cent. of all rentals are charged in the profit and loss account.

Half a Million Per Annum.

Mr. Sanderson expressed the opinion that the normal business would amount to half a million per annum. If this was the case the ratio of first year expense to premium income would be decreased. If the company went on in excess of the normal business it would be necessary to maintain a high ratio. The expenses would always be greater than the premium income.

For nearly an hour Mr. Shepley analyzed the profit and loss statement. From 1900 to 1905, the Canada Life premiums were computed on a 3 1-2 per cent. basis, although the reserve was at 3 per cent. The result was a depleted loading, although the lower premium ratio had favorable results in competition with other companies.

About Investments.

Profit and loss on investments was the next item. Treasurer Watt assisted Mr. Sanderson to explain the different investments on which profits had been made.

Mr. Shepley took up the investments of the Canada Life in detail, from 1891 to 1905. In fifteen years the statements showed a profit of $133,000 on bonds and stocks, and a loss of $183,000 on mortgage loans, or a loss in turnover of $50,000. Mr. Watt explained that the statement had been prepared to compare stock and bond investments with purely mortgage investments.

Clark, the managing director, for conspiracy to defraud by the alleged deceit. The matter will be brought before the grand jury by County Crown Attorney Cowper at Welland on June 12, and an attempt will be made to have the Ontario Silver Co., Limited, indicted for conspiracy. Under such indictment the company may be fined $4,000.

EAGER CAPT. BERNIER

Wired Prefontaine to Let Arctic Make Dash to the Pole.

Said Minister Told Him on the Bridge of the Arctic That He Would Send the Sailing Master on a Polar Trip—Had Charge of the Liquor on Board—Mode of Distribution and Safeguards Adopted Thereanent.

Ottawa, June 7.—The inquiry into the supplies of the steamer Arctic was again proceeded with yesterday morning. Capt. Bernier, the sailing master, was on the stand. The witness said that when he put in his requisition for supplies for the men for 1,200 days he was not aware that there were to be police on board. The captain explained how the goods were checked and placed on board. At Fullerton he went over the stores when they were dividing them up to leave off certain quantities at the three depots. There were more goods received in some cases than he ordered. He was satisfied that all the goods ordered were on board. There was no more bovril and pemmican received than he ordered. The witness said that he did not send in a requisition for uniforms until he knew the mounted police were to be with them and that they would be going on board whalers. He had very good sleeping bags, which were to be used in case of shipwreck. There were less expensive bags for ordinary purposes. There were forty. He ordered all the clothing, which was for a three-years' trip. Each man had three suits. He did not think this too many for three years. Only some of these were delivered, the balance was on board the boat.

Anxious to Go to the Pole.

Captain Bernier was questioned at length about the return of the steamer. He said that when he came back he sent a telegram to Mr. Prefontaine telling him that the Arctic would not take long to be put in repair, and as soon as this was done he wanted to make a trip to discover the north pole. He reminded the Minister that he told him on the bridge of the Arctic before leaving Quebec that he (Prefontaine) would send him on a polar trip. Later on, in October of last year, he followed up this telegram with a letter asking that the Arctic be sent on a polar expedition.

Replying to Mr. Carvell, Captain Bernier said he was on the boat nearly all the time the goods were being received, and he was busy receiving them and checking them. There were some that came which had not been ordered, and some others that had been ordered did not come.

In Charge of the Liquor.

Mr. Carvell asked who had charge of the liquor on the voyage.

Witness replied that the first order was in the hold, and he himself kept the key of the hatch, and the second order of the goods was in his room at first, and afterwarde transferred to Major Moodie. Nothing was given out from the stores except by requisition signed by himself and approved by Major Moodie, except, perhaps, a small quantity. In one way or another an accurate list was kept of all the goods taken out of the ship's stores.

Capt. Bernier stood aside at this stage to allow of the examination of Mr. Edward Adams, chairman of the steamboat inspection service, who gave figures of the dimensions of the steamer Arctic. Mr. Adams said the Arctic had a carrying capacity of 727 tons, but that would vary somewhat according to the nature of the cargo.

In reply to Mr. Brodeur, witness said that that did not include the deck space, which he figured would accommodate 121 tons additional.

The committee adjourned till this morning.

STROUDS

Presbyterian Drawback.

London, June 8.—The reports on home missions (eastern and western sections) occupied the attention of the Presbyterian Assembly last evening. Rev. Sutherland, Halifax, reviewed the situation in the east. The greatest drawback to work was lack of men. Though progress in the east was slow, there was every cause for encouragement. The report from the west showed the largest record ever on increase of charges. The Lord's Day Act amendments were commended, except those exempting the Jews.

Thomas McCormack Dead.

London, June 8.—Thos. McCormack, head of the McCormack Manufacturing Co., died in Chicago yesterday morning while on his way home from California, where he had been visiting his son-in-law. Mr. McCormack had been prominent in business circles for forty years, and had accumulated a fortune estimated at fully a million dollars. Several children survive.

Deaths From Heat.

Chicago, June 8.—Wednesday was the warmest day of the year thus far in Chicago, the temperature rising to 91 degrees at 3 o'clock. The heat caused the death of six persons and the prostration of several.

Kansas City, June 8.—Two deaths from the heat occurred here Wednesday. The highest temperature recorded here was 86 degrees.

JOURNALIST BEFORE HOUSE.

La Presse Reporter Was Greeted With Something Like Approval.

Ottawa, June 8.—The Government members made merry yesterday afternoon over the trial of Mr. Foster's complaint respecting the libel by La Presse.

When Mr. Cinqmars appeared at the bar he was greeted with loud applause, and there was a disposition to howl down Mr. Foster when he moved that the clerk for the House should read the libelous article. The article then was read in French, and Mr. Jackson (Selkirk) moved to read it in English. The Opposition objected to this, as parts of the article reflected upon other members. After some debate the whole affair was enlarged for a week. This will probably end the matter.

Marine Department Under Fire.

The House considered the Yukon placer mining bill and also Mr. Brodeur's bill respecting the harbor of Quebec.

The House worked industriously in supply at the evening session. The Marine Department was under fire, and Mr. Brodeur became quite nettled at the criticisms directed against prices paid for provisions. He declared that he was tired of being held responsible for accounts certified to by Tory officials, and intimated that he might remove a few of them.

An estimate was passed allowing $40,000 for damages caused by the explosion at Kingston in April 1905, when four seamen on the Scout were killed.

Directors' Privilege.

To Declare Such Profits as They Desired In Canada Life.

Actuary Sanderson Spends Another Day Before the Insurance Commissioners—Profits of Company for 1905 Were $905,000 of Which $343,000 Was Used For Getting New Business.

Toronto, June 8.—Mr. Hellmuth, counsel for the Province of Ontario, questioned the Canada Life actuary, Frank Sanderson, nearly all yesterday, before the Insurance Commission, on the basis of reserve, and the relation of expenses and loading. He took up many different kinds of policies.

Mr. Shepley will finish with Mr. Sanderson this morning, and the Imperial Life officials will be called next.

Distribution of profits was the first topic discussed when the commission opened. The law of the Canada Life is that the shareholders are to receive 10 per cent. over the policyholders, 90 per cent. of the profits, which are divided every five years. This method made it hard for the Canada Life when the change was made in the basis of reserve. Many other companies arrange a contingency fund.

Mr. Sanderson said in answer to counsel's question, that the quinquennial method was superior to the annual system of dividing profits.

Disapproves Estimating.

The division of profits on tontine policies was next taken up and it was found that at no time were the profits fully divided.

Witness told the commission that he disapproved of the issuing of estimates of profits.

Commissioner Langmuir asked if the five-year period for profit distribution did not involve both risk and expense on investing these undivided profits for five years. Witness admitted the fact, but could not see that there was anything serious in it.

Mr. Hellmuth commenced his examination of Mr. Sanderson along the lines of profit and loss.

He review the statements previous to 1900, and then took up the discrepancy between expenses and loading on premiums that had arisen since Senator Cox obtained control. In 1901 the expenses exceeded the loading on premiums by $18,000, while in 1905 it was $343,000.

Cost of New Business.

Witness explained that the ratio of expenses and loading had increased since 1901, and it was desirable that the loading on premiums should be sufficient to meet the expenses of the business.

Mr. Sanderson said that the total profits of the Canada Life for 1905 amounted to $305,000, of which $342,000 had been spent in getting new business.

Mr. Hellmuth asked witness what reason the company had to use these profits the way they did, when they belonged to the shareholders and policyholders.

Leighton McCarthy took exception to the question, but Judge McTavish thought the question was a fair one.

Directors Could Switch Profits.

Witness said that the directors had a perfect right to declare such profits as they desired. He produced the opinion of Mr. Bruce, the company's solicitor, which was put in as an exhibit.

Mr. Hellmuth continued his cross-examination of Actuary Sanderson at the afternoon session. The basis of reserve was the Ontario counsel's theme.

Witness explained that the excess of the H. M. 3 1-2 per cent. basis over the 4 per cent. would be $1,250,000, and that no part of this reserve would fall into the surplus. As long as the rate did not fall below 4 per cent. during the period in which all policies matured, the whole amount would be divided amongst the old policyholders prior to Jan. 1, 1900. A portion might go to strengthen the reserve.

Unfair Division.

Mr. Hellmuth contended that only about 50 per cent. of the old policyholders would benefit from this division, and some of the holders would get more than would have been really coming to them. He wanted to know why the necessity of taking this away from the policyholders at all.

Mr. Sanderson explained frankly that this point should be considered in the light of the situation of the time the change was made and the reserve set aside. Everything pointed towards the revision of the change. If the company had been able to look into the future and see the rate of interest that having dropped, would later go up, it would not be necessary to make the change.

Mr. Hellmuth enlarged upon the fluctuation of the British rates of interest. With the exception of the years '98 and '99, the rate of interest was about four per cent.

Witness admitted that this would probably be the rate for the next ten years, at any rate, but brought out the fact that British companies valued as low as 2 1-2 per cent.

Into Policy Details.

Mr. Hellmuth for over an hour went into dry detail of different policies and brought out technical facts concerning the Canada Life basis of reserve.

Before the commission rose Mr. Shepley asked the witness several questions regarding the excessive cost of first year's business. Witness read various statements showing the comparison of other large companies with the Canada Life.

Mr. Shepley wanted to know if a criterion could be formulated whereby the volume of business could be regulated. Witness did not think that the companies in this country had yet reached that stage.

Joseph Phillips Re-Arrested.

Toronto, June 8.—Joseph E. Phillips, he of the York County Loan Co., was in custody again yesterday for a short time. One of his bondsmen, Thomas Walker informed the authorities he was through with Phillips, and wished to be relieved of his pound of flesh. Phillips waited a few hours in police headquarters, when A. Hobberlin came forward and furnished the necessary $3,500 security.

Without Hands or Feet.

Brockville, June 8.—Adam Emmons, who was badly frozen last winter, underwent an operation at the General Hospital yesterday morning, when the greater portion of his right foot, three fingers on one hand and four on the other, were amputated. Some time ago the left foot was amputated.

Hanged Himself.

An Ugly Spectacle — The Prime Minister Defends Preston.

The Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has gained no friends by his defence of the man Preston, whose record is well known. In fact, as the London Free Press tersely puts it, Laurier has shown more loyalty to Preston than he has to Parliament or the people of this Dominion. Sifted down, the resolution which he had carried on Monday was a denial of the right of enquiry into the ways in which public money is expended.

The N.A.T. Co. received in cheques extending over about five years $300,000 from the Dominion chest. It is a theory of Parliament that every item of ten dollars and over shall be duly entered and authenticated in the accounts of the Auditor-General. The large sum in question is exempted from any such counting-house formula. It is treated precisely as a secret service fund that might have been voted in some great emergency for the country's salvation. There is a conspiracy of silence, led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, as to where the money went to, into whose hands, and for what service.

Sir Wilfrid, by his motion, tells the country that these are questions which no one outside the innermost official pale, has any right to know about. That is the contention of the Immigration Commissioner Preston, and the Premier supports him in it. Preston refused to answer such questions when sworn of the committee of agriculture, and his refusal to reveal the names of men alleged to have received large sums of money passing through his hands, and the nature of their services, was reported to the House of Commons. Sir Wilfrid justifies Preston in this course.

If all the dealings were fair and above board, why this reticence and intense eagerness for concealment? The commissioner tells the committee that he regards it as a point of honor to keep the names secret, that he promised not to tell, and feels bound to keep his word. Yet this much is known, that the North Atlantic Trading Company was not a company in a trading sense. For five years, while receiving Government money, it had no corporate existence. It was only after awkward questions had been asked in the House of Commons that it sought incorporation in the Island of Guernsey, where no questions are asked concerning the standing of the parties, where a corporation may be bogus and no one the wiser unless by sad personal experience.

Mr. Preston was the organizer of the company, and for convenience sake some family relatives of his became its officers. His son-in-law was its solicitor; this son-in-law's uncle was a leading director with others who occupied the position of solicitor's clerks.

The agents of this concern received the Government money for alleged services to the Immigration Department. Who were the persons implicated in the promotion of Canada's welfare under Preston whom that worthy refuses to name. Were they so many sneaking criminals engaged in breaking the laws of the countries they worked in, and in peril of those laws if their identity could be traced? In that view of the case the fair name of Canada is sufficiently dragged in the dust. Is there a Government in the world claiming to be ruled by common decency that would own to such a practice for any reason whatever? If this secrecy is to shield offenders against the laws of friendly nations, on what grounds can the employment of those offenders be excused?

But there is matter deeper than that. The suspicion that the funds furnished by the Laurier Government were misappropriated grows stronger instead of being lessened by the revelations at Ottawa. Alfred Jury, Preston's fellow commissioner, speaks of the N.A.T. Co. as one of two "gold mines" to which Preston had access. The other was the so-called Labor Bureau in London, engaged in sending out skilled artisans as strike-breakers, and for which service large bonuses were paid. Jury, in the witness-box, said he knew his man for twenty years, having worked with him in politics. He refused to qualify the expressions in his letter referring to Preston's sources of wealth, or to apologize for them.

The general opinion must be that where there is so much smoke there is fire, and that Preston has other reasons for reticence than the "honor" to be kept with rascals leagued with him in Europe.

Sir Wilfrid is between the devil and the deep sea in the case. He cannot throw over an old political emissary of such importance as Mr. Preston, the West Elgin hero. That might lead to the breaking of more seals than that of the North Atlantic Trading Company. He must perforce support Mr Preston in his secret practices, even when the Treasury is robbed of so many hundreds of thousands.

Sir Wilfrid's cup is filling as that of G. W. Ross was filled. He will find that the support of scoundrelism has its limits with the honest people of the country.

Cheer up. There can't be much more water up there.

That was a pretty good imitation of a cloudburst last night.

• • •

The funny thing is that only this immediate district appears to be getting the rain. Over in Prince Edward and out north a little way the farmers are positively suffering for moisture. Seems a pity things are not more evenly divided. We could spare them a little of ours.

• • •

One good thing about the rain so far. It has not caused the postponement of any band concerts.

• • •

These June days are a reminder that there is always room at the top—even on a thermometer.

• • •

Tightening up the legs on various dilapidated thrones promises to be one of the principal occupations of King Edward for the next few years.

• • •

Every year some wise person has something to say about strawberries. This time it is a doctor who says that strawberries have a tendency to make people crazy. Just about now many people are crazy—to get some.

• • •

Wheat is already 18 inches high in some parts of the west. Not an inch higher than some of the weeds in West Belleville.

• • •

Prepare for the worst. A German band has been sighted in Brockville, and is heading this way.

The Oswego Times makes the following true and terse comments in regard to the latest U. S. scandal; "Publicity is an effective whip. Already the meat packers are beginning to clean up their plants in Chicago, and conditions, at least on the outside, are said to have been considerably improved even in the short space of one day. The fear of publicity, however, as a dominating motive, will never result in permanent reform—reform from the bottom up. What is needed in American business life is conscience—and lots of it, too."

A Philadelphia man has dyed his whiskers Alice blue, because Mr. and Mrs. Longworth live there. Who said Philadelphia was slow?

A Chicago authority says it is all right for young folks to marry on $10 a week. The authority wouldn't like to board with a family which lives on $10 a week in Chicago.

• • •

Word comes from Lock Haven, Pa., that a black bass 27 inches long has been caught there. That seems, to a wayfaring man, to be about as good a fish story as Jerry Hurley ever told.

• • •

A Rochester priest, the Reverend George M. A. Schoener, according to a despatch, must be one of those people who call a spade a spade: On Sunday evening last he thus addressed some of the women of his congregation: "Go home and take off those unseemly waists, which look like bathing costumes. This is not a bathing resort, but a church of God." His remarks, the despatch says, caused numerous young women to blush and lower their heads. The priest referred to their "peekaboo" waists.

The Y.M.C.A. of Detroit has broken a record. A new building for the Association was needed, and the members started out to hustle for $400,000, with the avowed intention of raising it inside of a month. The subscription committee, as one of the officers neatly put it, consisted of 100 "hand-picked young men," and they certainly made good by raising no less a sum than $422,096 inside of the time limit. This, it is said, beats all records established in similar work in the world.

• • •

What a pity, by the way, that Belleville could not be touched with a little of the fire which seemed to illuminate Detroit! Has the local Association no "hand-picked young men" who will shed their coats and work overtime, if need be, for the Master? Many people think the Y.M.C.A. has been a benediction to Belleville. Everything else is booming, why not the work whose object is the uplifting of young men, upon whom rests the future of Canada. Come, you young fellows. Get a little of that Detroit spirit and help the men and women in this city who have been and are working for your welfare. Any chump can take favors when they are handed to him, free of charge and labor, but it takes a man to get out and hustle for himself. It's up to you to be in the latter class.

One of Mr. Joseph Phillips' bondsmen got nervous and demanded that the ex-President of the York Loan be arrested, which was accordingly done, the bondsman refusing to stand for his portion of the recognizances any longer. Mr. Phillips, in his time, has made many other people nervous, as well as his bondsman.

The Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has issued a circular letter, pointing out that the wearing of feathers involves the destruction of some 5,000,000 birds every year, and pleading with the Canadian women to refrain from the practice. It is probable that if women had to do the killing, especially at the bird's nesting time, feathers would on that very day go out of fashion. The New York Society has gone to the true source of the evil, and has secured the passage of a state law, prohibiting the sale of all such feathers, and fining any one found with such feathers, $60 and $25 additional for each bird or part of bird found in his possession.

• • •

The Ottawa Citizen makes the following wail, which shows that other places besides Belleville are troubled with the weed nuisance; "Vacant lots in the centre of the city given up to the free growth of burdocks and dandelions are an anachronism which should be unknown in the capital of Canada."

The appeal has been dismissed and Mr. Taylor will take another appeal and the matter will be heard by Judge Reynolds.

Mr. Leavens Writes

Belleville, Ont., June 8, 1906.

To The Intelligencer Publishing Co.,
Belleville.

There has come to my knowledge that certain reports are being circulated in the city, namely, that I have made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the other that I am mentally deranged, both of which are entirely false, and I will certainly prosecute any and all persons circulating these reports if found out.

Yours truly,
C. C. LEAVENS.

Here's Good Sense.

A Kingston paper says; "When you want a good job of printing done just take your copy into the newspaper printing office and tell the printer to do you a good job and he will. If you think you know more about the business than he does instruct him what type to use and all the little details, you will get a botch job. A printer working under instructions from one who knows nothing about the business, even if he is an expert, cannot do a neat job."

The County Council.

THURSDAY MORNING.

A petition was presented from a number of ratepayers in Marmora and Lake township asking that a certain road be changed.—Referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

Mr. Macfarlane, chairman of the Executive Committee, presented a report which recommended that the tender of J. Lewis & Co., for installing heating apparatus in the court house, at a cost of $1675, be accepted. It was also recommended that certain other improvements to the court house be made. The report also referred to the fact that the court house lawn had been improved by a number of trees being cut out.

On motion the report was received and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Macfarlane introduced a bylaw in reference to the equalization of the County.

Mr. Vandervoort introduced a bylaw levying certain sums upon the various municipalities of the County for taxes.

These were read a first time and referred to the By-law committee.

Council went into committee of the whole on communications, Mr. Macfarlane in the chair.

The communication from Mr. Bedford in reference to his appointment as Police Magistrate for the Township of Tyendinaga, was taken up.

Mr. Dryden said it meant that a certain amount of work was taken off Police Magistrate Flint and placed upon Mr. Bedford. This matter should be looked into, in order to see about what proportion of salary should be paid Mr. Flint and what proportion to Mr. Bedford.

Mr. Macfarlane thought that this matter might be relegated to a small committee.

On motion the communication of Mr Bedford was received and filed, and the appointing of a committee was left in abeyance.

The ways and means committee resumed, Mr. Morton in the chair.

The communication from the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, asking for a grant of $25 for prizes was read and on motion was laid over for further consideration.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid.

Schuster Company	$ 4.50
N Allen	20.25
J S Marsh	2.88
Intelligencer Publishing Co.	73.45
T. S. Carman	310.65

A communication was read from Judge Deroche, stating that he was taking one half of the Division Court work, and had considerable outlay for postage and stationary. He suggested the amount should be fixed at $12.50 per quarter.

Mr. Macfarlane said the question was whether the Council was compelled to pay the judge's postage. The Council had to pay for stationery for the judges.

Mr. Dryden was of the opinion that, as the judges had their salaries increased, the Council should not provide any extra sum if it was not compellable.

A motion prevailed that the County solicitor's opinion on the matter be obtained.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

F. E. O'Flynn addressed the Council, asking the privilege, on behalf of the Hastings Telephone Company, to erect telephone poles on certain county roads. He referred to the benefits to be derived by having such a telephone system in the rural districts.

Mr. Macfarlane said that other companies had been granted similar privileges, and he moved, seconded by Mr. Tumelty, that the request be granted.

Mr. Dryden spoke in favor of having the matter laid over for further consideration. There were details in connection with this matter that needed to be looked into. He moved in amendment that the matter be laid over.

Mr. Rogers seconded the amendment.

Messrs. Denyes, Farley and Nicholson spoke in support of granting the request. The gentlemen composing the company were prosperous and responsible farmers.

Mr. Rogers wished the county safeguarded in this matter.

The matter was dropped for the time being.

Mr. Turley asked the county to place a light on a bridge near Frankford village, as the bridge was narrow and it was at a very dark place.

A motion prevailed that a light be placed on the bridge.

Mr. M. Sullivan, Reeve of Sidney, asked the Council for a grant of $100 towards building a bridge to connect Trent Island with the main land. The bridge would be over the Trent River.

On motion the matter was referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Messrs. W. C. Reid and J. Graham addressed the Council in reference to a grant being given by the Council to the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association.

On motion the matter was referred to the Committee of the Whole on Ways and Means.

Messrs. J. Johnston and W. Macintosh, School Inspectors for South and North Hastings, presented their annual reports, which were voluminous documents, detailing the work of the inspectorates for the past year.

The reports were received and filed.

Mr. Denyes moved, seconded by Mr. Vandervoort, that the County Clerk write to the Grand Trunk Railway Company in reference to the overhead bridge on the boundary between the city and Sidney, which was not of the proper level; also that two crossings in Thurlow township were not up to the proper requirements as to being graded on either side of the track.—Carried.

The Ways and Means Committee resumed, Mr. Morton in the chair.

Mr. Vandervoort moved, seconded by Mr. Bonter, that a grant of $25 be given to the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, and that Messrs. W. C. Reid and J. Graham be named a committee to select the variety of fruit for competition for prizes.—Carried.

A petition was presented from a number of ratepayers in Marmora for a grant of $50 towards repairing a road on the boundary between that township and Peterboro county. It was agreed to give the grant on condition that Peterboro county give a similar grant.

A petition was presented, asking the Council to grant aid to the extent of $200, to assist in building a road in the Township of Tudor and Cashel, from Gilmour to St. Ann's Corners.

Mr. McFarlane moved, seconded by Mr. Bonter, that a grant of $100 be made towards the construction of this road.—Carried.

NO ACCIDENTS IN NATURE.

Every Calamity, No Matter How Great, Has a Definite Beginning.

There are no accidents in nature. The avalanche that without a moment's warning rushes headlong down the mountain side is not an accident. For years previous tiny atoms have been crystalizing, and adding their minute weight to the mass which left its base when the accumulation reached a certain point.

Neither is baldness an accident. The infinitesmally small germ which is the cause of dandruff and baldness, feeds silently and long before the result is seen.

The small germs which thrive on the scalp and which are the cause of Baldness and Dandruff cannot exist, however, when Newbro's Herpicide is applied.

NOT WORTH THE LIVING.

SORRY CONDITION OF MANY IN BELLEVILLE TO-DAY.

Those who never have any stomach troubles and whose digestion is like that of an ostrich cannot possibly understand the sorry condition of many in Belleville to-day.

Life does not seem worth the living; they bear up with nervous irritation, sleeplessness, pain and misery in the stomach, headaches, backaches, and have a constant fear that what they eat is going to disagree with them and cause still greater distress.

In Mi-o-na there is a remedy that restores the lost functions of the digestive system, revives flagging nutrition, and aids in the assimilation of food. This remedy soothes and heals the irritated and inflamed walls of the stomach, strengthens the nerve centers of the digestive system, and makes a permanent and positive cure in all forms of stomach trouble, excepting cancer.

Mi-o-na costs but 50 cents a box. If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

June Weather as Foretold by Hicks.

Rev. Irl Hicks, of St. Louis, predicts June weather as follows; Storm period central on the first, extending to the 4th, after which a decided rise of temperature, humidity, cloudiness and rain; cooler on the 5th. Storm period from 6th to 8th, then warmer, with electrical storms, cooler on the 9th and 10th. From the 11th to the 16th perturbations of earth or atmosphere—may be rain or thunder, or possibly seismic and volcanic disturbances. The storm period will culminate on the 14th, and there will be lots of hail, with possibly cloudbursts and tornadoes, after which a violent and sudden change to cooler, with snow squalls and possibly frosts in the extreme north. From the 18th to the 21st, humidity and wind currents, with an excess of lightning and thunder. There are to be many reports of seismic and volcanic perturbations within five days, centering on the 21st. There will be more disturbances from the 23rd to the 27th—violent and dangerous. If heavy storms of rain, wind and thunder do not appear, peculiar and phenomenal results will convulse and perturb the elements of earth and sky. There may also be heavy rainfalls and floods. On the last two days of the month there will be great heat and thunderstorms, and July will open cooler.

The Argonauts Will Send a Crew of Giants to Henley.

Toronto, June 7. — The Argonaut crew which goes to Henley, England, may fairly be classed as exceptionally big men. Average weight 176 1-2; average age, 28; average height, 6 feet 2 inches. The crew had a good strong row this morning, but no fast work was attempted, owing to fog and rough water. They worked over the Island course towards the Eastern gap, and their endurance was simply wonderful.

Last evening the crew made one of the most satisfactory trials of the year. They went down to Leslie's Cut, in Ashbridge's Bay, and, rowing against the wind and the current and in shallow water, they covered the course, 1 mile 550 yards, in 7.06, a very fine performance, indeed.

Conditions were much the same that prevail at Henley, and the time made excels the records of the winning crews in recent years. The record of the Henley course is 6.55, but that was made with current and wind behind the crew. The best recent time was 7.10, made by Third Trinity.

The Argonauts will have another row to-day, and to-morrow morning will leave for Montreal, from which place they sail Saturday. In the party will be Joe Wright (captain and stroke), A. L. Fellowes, A. E. H. Kent, Donald McKenzie, T. P. Grubble, Julius Thompson, J. A. Walsh, Phil Boyd, Tom Loudon and Lou M. Dixon. Trainer Skippon is going via New York, and will be at Henley two days before the crew. He will rig the new Clasper boat and have it ready for the eight, when they arrive.

The crew were weighed and measured this morning after their row, with the following result:

	Wt.	Age	Ht.
Wright, stroke	185	42	6.02
McKenzie, 7	170	30	6.04

Onions at a Social.

A Fairmount, P. E. Co., correspondent writes: We hear of all sorts and conditions of refreshments being served at socials and meetings, but we doubt if we ever heard of serving bread and butter and onions before. But such was the case last Thursday night after league in Fairmount church. The members were invited to the basement and refreshments were served amidst much amusement. The pastor at a former meeting had suggested refreshments, once in a while, being served, even if only bread and butter and onions. So, two of the lady members took him at his word, one bringing nice bread and butter, the other fine, fresh onions which soon were things of the past. All enjoyed the dainties very much.

Failures in Canada.

Insolvencies in the Dominion of Canada made a most unsatisfactory comparison with the corresponding month last year, according to Dun's Review, which is due in part to the abnormally small losses at that time, improvement being noted when the comparison is carried back two years. Canadian failures in May were 96 in number and $172,176 in amount of defaulted indebtedness, against 69 failures last year for $350,327, and 90 defaults in 1904, when the amount involved was $1,650,694. There were 28 manufacturing failures for $307,145, against 18 last year when the amount was only $53,826. Trading failures numbered 67, with liabilities of $360,-4030, against 50 last year for $292,001. There was one other commercial failure in each year, but even in this comparison 1906 made the poorer exhibit. $25,000 of liabilities largely exceeding the $4,000 of a year ago.

Shadow Buff.

To play shadow buff you should fasten a sheet up at one end of the room so that it will hang quite smooth. "Buff," not blinded, seats himself on a low stool, with his face to the sheet, and a table, on which is a lighted candle, is placed about five feet behind him. The rest of the lights in the room should be extinguished. "Buff's" playfellows next pass in succession between the candle and him, distorting their features in as grotesque a manner as possible, hopping, limping and doing everything to make their shadows as unlike their natural looks as possible. "Buff" must try to guess to whom the shadows belong, and if he is correct the player whose shadow he recognizes takes his place. "Buff" is allowed but one guess for each person.

Drawing the Line.

Young Slopay was courting the daughter of his former tailor.

"Darling," he said, "I hope you will learn to love and trust me."

"Well," returned the fair object of his affections, "I'm sure I can learn to love you all right, but papa says you are not to be trusted."

Dangerous.

Knott Yette—You mean to say that the use of hair dye is dangerous?

Ben Thayer—I do. Let me tell you something. A dear friend of mine, a happy bachelor, found his hair was turning gray at thirty. Well, he had it dyed a deep black. Four weeks later he was married.

Postage Stamp Gum.

When you lick a postage stamp you need not fear that the gum is something unclean. Postal gum is the best quality on the face of the earth. It is derived from dextrin, a product secured in the process of making starch from potatoes, corn and the cassava root. The starch from these vegetables is treated by roasting at a temperature of about 30 degrees at the first stage, causing it to turn into dextrin. Further changes make postal gum, and if the changes were carried to the limit the result would be grape sugar or glucose. The best postal gum is that which contains the least unconverted starch and little glucose. When the material for making gum reaches the bureau of engraving and printing it looks much like flour except in color. It comes in sacks of 200 pounds each, and every consignment from the contractors is carefully inspected before using. It is subjected to microscopical examination and to chemical analysis, and all this is followed by a practical test.—Kansas City Star.

The custom and fashion of today will be the awkwardness and outrage of tomorrow. So arbitrary are these transient laws.—Dumas.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details tne banker would not think of and taere is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

What MOTHERS Should Know

Whether a child grows puny or sturdy, depends on how little or how much food is assimilated.

If Mothers only realized how much plumpness, and rosiness, and down right sturdy health there is in there would be fewer pale, sickly, scrawny children. ORANGE MEAT is the whole wheat, including hulls, wheat germs, gluten—with the starches converted into wheat sugars. It is all wheat and all food—in a form that every child can assimilate.

ORANGE MEAT

THE OLD STRAW HAT.

(Somerville Journal.)

Bring out, bring out the old straw hat
And hold it up to view,
Of course, it's yellow and all that,
But maybe it will do,
Some lemon-juice, a new black band,
will fix it up all right;
The style will do this season, and
It's just the proper height.

What's that? It's gone! What's that you say?
You burned the old thing up?
Well this is my unlucky day,
Misfortune fills my cup!
Why, woman, would you have me toil
And keep on toiling still?
Now I have got to go and spoil
A new three-dollar bill!

It is obvious, says a Quebec paper, that when once the free homesteads have been exhausted the cost of settling on land in the Northwest will be prohibitive except to men possessing capital sufficient to purchase equally good land in the east, in the neighborhood of large cities. The Dominion cruiser Vigilant, says the Windsor Record, is fierce-looking and warlike when viewed at a distance afloat on the heaving wave, but when she draws near and opens her mouth the painful and humiliating fact is revealed that she is toothless and as about as impotent as a scandscow. Yet she is expected to terrorize the scores of piratical fishing craft that infest the Canadian waters of Lake Erie If the government are afraid to trust Capt. Montreal Gazette; The Cutlers Company, of Sheffield, the guild representing the cutlery industry of that English city, the home of cutlery, has entered suit against an Ontario concern, which, it charges, places its goods on the Canadian market under the misrepresentation that they are of Sheffield manufacture. Incidentally to the case, they make a somewhat serious accusation against the Hon. Sydney A. Fisher, who, as Minister of Agriculture, is the head of the Canadian patent office. When the Sheffield cutlers found that goods bearing the Sheffield mark were being made in Canada, one of their lawyers came to Canada, and saw Mr. Fisher concerning the matter. That was in October, 1904. Mr. Fisher was not certain of the proper procedure, and suggested that an opinion be procured from the Department of Justice. The Cutlers' Company waited some time, and, hearing nothing, wrote Mr. Fisher. They wrote several times, and receiving no reply from the Minister of Agriculture, finally communicated with the Colonial Office. The result of their complaint was that, thirteen months after the first request made to Mr. Fisher, the information desired was secured, and the present prosecution undertaken. If the Cutlers' Company had desired to learn how to fatten chickens at a cost of $1.25 for each dollar's worth of chicken, they would have received a voluminous reply by the next mail.

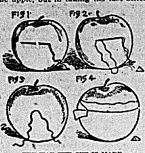
AN APPLE TRICK.

How to Cut the Fruit In Halves Without Breaking the Skin.

An apple can be cut in halves without breaking the skin. With a fine needle and thread take a stitch in the apple just under the skin, as shown in Fig. 1, and draw the thread through carefully. Now place the point of the needle in the hole from which it just came and, pushing it gently under the skin, take another stitch (Fig. 2). Keep doing this until you have gone around the apple, but in taking the last stitch be careful to draw the needle from out of the hole it made when inserted to make the first stitch. Now the thread completely encircles the apple only just under the skin, and the two ends of the thread are seen hanging loose (Fig. 3). Crossing these threads, pull them steadily and firmly in opposite directions, and in a few moments the apple will be cut completely in two and the whole of the thread will have been drawn away through one small hole. If nicely done, no sign of a breakage will appear on the surface, although the apple is cut into two parts.



THE WAY THE CUT IS MADE.

LIZARD'S TAIL.

A Game That Is Played by Japanese Boys and Girls.

Catching the "lizard's tail" is an outdoor game often played by Japanese boys and girls. One of the children having been made catcher, another is then chosen for the lizard's head, or leader, and the other players form one long line behind, each putting his or her hands on the shoulders of the one in front. This represents the lizard's body, and the last one in the line is the tail.

Then the fun begins. The catcher, standing a little way off, facing the lizard, suddenly dashes forward and, without touching the others, tries to catch the tail. The lizard does her best to protect her tail by moving first this way and then that, with her long body holding on behind. But should any of the players lose hold and thus break the line the tail is considered caught. When the tail is caught he becomes catcher, and the former catcher becomes leader and takes his place at the head of the line.

The lizard may move in any direction she likes and is allowed to stretch out her arms to keep off the catcher, but she may not push him away. This is a splendid outdoor game, and any number can play it—in fact, "the more the merrier."

Exporters.

Prices for exporters were about the same as on Tuesday, ranging from $4.90 to $5.15, the bulk selling at $5 to $5.10, a few picked lots, but no loads brought $5.25 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.60 to $4.25 per cwt.

Owing to the rise in beef cattle, any steers with any flesh were picked up by the butchers at prices too high for feeder purposes. There was practically no trade in short-keep feeders, altho there was an opening for some at prices where they should be selling. Mr. Murby bought about 150 head this week at following prices: short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., at $4.50 to $4.75; good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Veal Calves.

There was a good demand for veal calves at $3.50 to $6.50 per cwt., and $7 per cwt. for choice new milk-fed calves.

Sheep and Lambs.

There was a fair demand for sheep and lambs. Export ewes sold from $4.25 to $4.75; yearling lambs sold at $5.75 to $6.25 per cwt.; spring lambs at $3.50 to $5.50 each.

until finally we emerged from the forest to find the open country before us, and a small, cozy-looking dwelling facing us from the opposite side of a well-defined roadway.

Bastro led us to a side door, which he threw open, and then stepped back with a courteous gesture.

"Enter, gentlemen," said he; "you are welcome to my humble home."

I crossed the threshold and came to an abrupt stop. Something seemed to clutch my heart with a grip of iron; my limbs trembled involuntarily, and my eyes grew set and staring.

For, standing before me, with composed look and a smile upon his dark face, was the living form of my lamented friend Miguel de Pintra!

CHAPTER XXI.

"Compose yourself, my dear Robert," said Dom Miguel, pressing my hands in both his own. "It is no ghost you see, for—thanks be to God!—I am still alive."

I had no words to answer him. In all my speculations as to the result of Madam Izabel's terrible deed, the fate of the records and the mysterious opening of the vault without its key, I never had conceived the idea that Dom Miguel might have escaped his doom. And to find him here, not only alive, but apparently in good health and still busy with the affairs of the Revolution, conveyed so vivid a shock to my nerves that I could but dumbly stare into my old friend's kind eyes and try to imagine that I beheld a reality and not the vision of a disordered brain.

Bastro assisted me by laughing loudly and giving me a hearty slap across the shoulders.

"Wake up, Senhor Harcliffe!" said he; "and hereafter have more faith in Providence and the luck that follows in the wake of true patriotism. We could ill afford to lose our chief at this juncture."

"But how did it happen?" I gasped, still filled with wonder. "What earthly power could have opened that awful vault when its key was miles and miles away?"

"The earthly power was wielded by a very ordinary little woman," said Dom Miguel, with his old gentle smile. "When you rode away from the house on that terrible morning Lesba came and unlocked my prison, setting me free."

"But how?" I demanded, still blindly groping for the truth.

"By means of a duplicate key that she had constantly carried in her bosom."

I drew a long breath.

"Did you know of this key, sir?" I asked, after a pause, which my companions courteously forbore to interrupt.

"I did not even suspect its existence," replied Dom Miguel. "But it seems that Francisco Paola, with his usual thoughtfulness, took an impression in wax of my ring, without my knowledge, and had an exact duplicate prepared. I think he foresaw that an emergency might arise when another key might be required; but it would not do to let any one know of his action, for the mere knowledge that such a duplicate existed would render us all suspicious and uneasy. So he kept the matter secret even from me, and gave the ring into the keeping of his sister, who was his only confidante, and whom he had requested me to accept as an inmate of my household, under the plea that I am her legal guardian. This was done in order to have her always at hand in case the interests of the conspiracy demanded immediate use of the dublicate key. That Francisco trusted her more fully than he has any other living person is obvious; and that she was worthy of such trust the girl has fully proved."

"Then you were released at once?" I asked: "and you suffered little from your confinement?"

"My anguish was more mental than of a bodily nature," Dom Miguel answered, sadly; "but I was free to meet Paola when he arrived at my house, and to assist him and Lesba in removing the contents of the vault to a safer place."

"But why, knowing that his sister held a duplicate key, did the Minister send me in chase of the ring Madam Izabel had stolen?" I demanded.

"Because it was necessary to keep the matter from the Emperor until the records had been removed," explained de Pintra. "Indeed, Francisco was on his way to us that morning to insist upon our abandoning the vault, after having given us warning, as you will remember, the night before, that the clever hiding-place of our treasure and papers was no longer a secret."

"I remember that he himself revealed the secret to the Emperor," I remarked, dryly.

"And acted wisely in doing so, I have no doubt," retorted Bastro, who still stood beside us. "But come, gentlemen, breakfast must be ready, and I have a vigorous appetite. Be good enough to join me."

He led the way to an inner room, and de Pintra and I followed, his arm in mine.

It seemed to me, now that I regarded him more attentively, that my old friend was less erect than formerly, that there were new and deep furrows upon his gentle face, and that his eyes had grown dim and sunken. But that the old, dauntless spirit remained I never doubted.

As we entered the breakfast-room I saw a form standing at the window—the form of a little man clothed neatly in black. He turned to greet us with pale, expressionless features and drooping eyelids.

It was Captain Mazanovitch.

"Good morning, Senhor Harcliffe," he said, in his soft voice; and I wondered how he had recognized me without seeming to open his eyes. "And what news does our noble Captain Bastro bring of the Revolution?" he continued, with a slight note of interest in his voice that betrayed his eagerness.

While we breakfasted Bastro related the events of the morning, and told how the news he had received of the activity of the Uruguayan guards, in connection with the impossibility of learning from Rio what Fonseca had accomplished, had induced him to disband his men.

"But can you again assemble them, if you should wish to?" inquired Dom Miguel.

"Easily," answered our host; but he did not explain how.

While he and Dom Miguel discussed the fortunes of the Revolution I made bold to ask Captain Mazanovitch how he came to be in this isolated spot.

"I was warned by the Minister of Police to leave Rio," answered the detective; "for it appears my—my friend Valcour would have been suspicious had not Paola promised to arrest me with the others. I have been here since yesterday."

"Your friend Valcour is a most persistent foe to the Cause," said I, thoughtfully. "It would have pleased you to watch him struggle with Paola for the mastery, while the Emperor was by. Ah, how Paola and Valcour hate each other!"

Mazanovitch turned his passionless face toward me, and it seemed as though a faint smile flickered for an instant around his mouth. But he made no answer.

After breakfast Pedro was sent back to Cuyaba for news, being instructed to await there the repairing of the telegraph wires, and to communicate with us as soon as he had word from Rio.

The man had no sooner disappeared in the forest than, as we stood in the roadway looking after him, a far-off patter of horses' feet was distinctly heard approaching from the north.

Silently we stood, gazing toward the curve in the road while the hoof-beats grew louder and louder, till suddenly two horses swept around the edge of the forest and bore down upon us.

Then to the surprise of all we recognized the riders to be Francisco Paola and his sister Lesba, and they rode the same horses which the evening before had been attached to the carriage that had brought me from de Pintra's

As they dashed up both brother and sister sprang from the panting animals, and the former said, hurriedly:

"Quick, comrades! Into the house and barricade the doors. The Uruguayans are upon us!"

True enough; now that their own horses had come to a halt we plainly heard the galloping of the troop of pursuers. With a single impulse we ran to the house and entered, when my first task was to assist Bastro in placing the shutters over the windows and securing them with stout bars.

The doors were likewise fastened and barred, and then Mazanovitch brought us an armful of rifles and an ample supply of ammunition.

Till suddenly two horses swept around the edge of the forest and bore down on us.

"Do you think it wise to resist?" asked de Pintra, filling with cartridges the magazine of a rifle.

A blow upon the door prevented an answer.

"Open, in the name of the Emperor!" cried an imperious voice.

"That is my gallant friend Captain de Souza," said Lesba, with a little laugh.

I looked at the strange girl curiously. She had seated herself upon a large chest, and with her hands clasped about one knee was watching us load our weapons with as much calmness as if no crisis of our fate was impending.

"Be kind to him, Lesba," remarked Paola, tucking a revolver underneath his arm while he rolled and lighted a cigarette. "Think of his grief at being separated from you."

She laughed again, with real enjoyment, and shook the tangled locks of hair from her eyes.

"Perhaps if I accept his attentions he will marry me, and I shall escape," she rejoined, lightly.

"Open, I command you!" came the voice from without.

"Really," said Lesba, looking upon us brightly, "it was too funny for anything. Twice this morning the brave captain nearly succeeded in capturing me. He might have shot me with ease, but called out that he could not bear to injure the woman he loved!"

"Does he indeed love you, Lesba?" asked de Pintra, gently.

"So he says, Uncle. But it must have been a sudden inspiration, for I never saw him until yesterday."

"Nevertheless, I am glad to learn of this," resumed Dom Miguel; "for there is no disguising the fact that they outnumber us and are better armed, and it is good to know that whatever happens to us, you will be protected."

"Whatever happens to you will happen to me," declared the girl, springing to her feet. "Give me a gun, Uncle!"

Now came another summons from de Souza.

"Listen!" he called; "the house is surrounded and you cannot escape us. Therefore it will be well for you to surrender and rely upon the Emperor's mercy."

"I fear we may not rely on that with any security," drawled Paola, who had approached the door. "Pray tell us, my good de Souza, what are your orders respecting us?"

"To arrest you at all hazards," returned the captain, sternly.

"And then?" persisted the Minister, leaning against the door and leisurely puffing his cigarette.

But another voice was now heard—Valcour's—crying:

"Open at once, or we will batter down the door."

Before any could reply Mazanovitch pushed Paola aside and placed his lips to the keyhole.

"Hear me, Valcour," he said, in a soft yet penetrating tone, "we are able to defend ourselves until assistance arrives. But rather than that blood should be shed without necessity, we will surrender ourselves if we have your assurance of safe convoy to Rio."

For a moment there was silence. Then, "How came you here?" demanded the spy, in accents that betrayed his agitation.

"That matters little," returned Mazanovitch. "Have we your assurance of safety?"

We heard the voices of Valcour and de Souza in angry dispute; then the captain shouted: "Stand aside!" and there came a furious blow upon the door that shattered the panels.

Bastro raised his rifle and fired. A cry answered the shot, but instantly a second crash followed. The bars were torn from their sockets, the splintered door fell inward, and before we could recover from the surprise we were looking into the muzzles of a score of carbines leveled upon us.

"Very well," said Paola, tossing the end of his cigarette through the open doorway. "We are prisoners of war. Peste! my dear Captain; how energetic your soldiers are!

A moment later we were disarmed, and then, to our surprise, de Souza ordered our feet and our hands to be securely bound. Only Lesba escaped this indignity, for the captain confined her in a small room adjoining our own and placed a guard at the door.

During this time Valcour stood by, sullen and scowling, his hands clinched nervously and his lips curling with scorn.

"You might gag us, my cautious one," said Paola, addressing the officer, who had planted himself, stern and silent, in the centre of the room while his orders were being executed.

"So I will, Senhor Paola; but in another fashion," was the grim reply.

He drew a paper from his breast and continued, "I will read to you my orders from his Majesty, the Emperor Dom Pedro of Brazil, dispatched from the station at Cuyaba as he was departing for his capital to quell the insurrection."

He paused and slowly unfolded the paper, while every eye—save that, perhaps, of Mazanovitch—was fixed upon him with intent gaze.

"'You are instructed to promptly arrest the traitor Francisco Paola, together with his sister, Lesba Paola, and whatever revolutionists you may be able to take, and to execute them one and all without formal trial on the same day that they are captured, as enemies of the Empire and treasonable conspirators plotting the downfall of the Government.'"

The captain paused a moment, impressively, and refolded the document.

"It is signed by his Majesty's own hand, and sealed with the royal seal," he said.

CHAPTER XXII.

I glanced around the room to note the effect of this startling announcement upon my fellow-prisoners. Bastro's scowling face was turned full upon the officer, but showed no sign of fear. De Pintra smiled rather scornfully and whispered a word to Mazanovitch, whose countenance remained impassive as ever. Paola, with the perpetual simper distorting his naturally handsome features, leaned back in his chair and regarded his trussed ankles with whimsical indifference. Indeed, if the captain thought to startle or terrify his captives he must have been grievously disappointed, for one and all received the announcement of the death sentence with admirable composure.

It was Valcour who broke the silence. Confronting the captain with blazing eyes, while his slight form quivered with excitement, he cried:

"This is nonsense, de Souza! The Emperor must have been mad to write such an order. You will convey your prisoners to Rio for trial."

"I shall obey the Emperor's commands," answered the captain, gloomily.

"But it is murder!"

"It is the Emperor's will."

"Hear me, Captain de Souza," said Valcour, drawing himself up proudly; "you were instructed to obey my commands. I order you to convey the prisoners to Rio, that they may be tried in a court of justice."

The other shook his head.

"The order is to me personally, and I must obey. A soldier never questions the commands of his superiors."

"But I am your superior!"

"Not in this affair, Senhor Valcour. And the Emperor's order is doubtless to be obeyed above that of his spy."

Valcour winced, and turned away to pace the floor nervously.

"But the lady—surely you will not execute the Donzella Paola in this brutal fashion!" he protested, after an interval of silence.

The captain flushed, and then grew pale.

"I will speak with the lady," he said, and motioning aside the guard he entered the room where Lesba was confined, and closed the door after him.

We could hear his voice through the thin partition, speaking in low and earnest tones. Then a burst of merry laughter from Lesba fell upon our ears with something of a shock, for the matter seemed serious enough to insure gravity. Evidently the captain protested, but the girl's high-pitched tones and peals of merriment indicated that she was amusing herself at his expense, and suddenly the door burst open and de Souza stumbled out with a red and angry face.

"The woman is a fiend!" he snarled. "Let her die with the others.

Valcour, who had continued to pace the floor during this interview, had by now managed to get his nerves under control, for he smiled at the captain, and said:

"Let us see if I have any argument that will avail."

While the officer stood irresolute, Valcour bowed mockingly, opened the door, and passed into Lesba's room.

It was de Souza's turn now to pace the floor, which he did with slow and measured strides; but although we strained our ears, not a sound of the interview that was progressing reached us through the partition.

After a considerable time it seemed that the captain regretted having allowed Valcour this privilege, for he advanced to the door and placed his hand on the knob. Instantly the spy appeared, closing the door swiftly behind him and turning the key in the lock.

Instantly the spy appeared, closing the door swiftly behind him.

"I withdraw my opposition, Captain," said he. "You may execute the lady with the others, for all I care. When is the massacre to take place?"

"The order commands the execution on the same day the conspirators are arrested," he announced. "I do not like the job, Valcour, believe me; but the Emperor must be obeyed. Let them die at sunset."

He turned abruptly and left the house, but sent a detachment of the Uruguayans to remain in the room with us and guard against any attempt on our part to escape.

We indulged in little conversation. Each had sufficient to occupy his thoughts, and sunset was not very far away, after all. To me this ending of the bold conspiracy was not surprising, for I had often thought that when Dom Pedro chose to strike he would strike in a way that would deter all plotting against the government for some time to come. And life is of little value in these South American countries.

"Where are the records?" I whispered to Dom Miguel, who sat near me.

"Safe with Fonseca in Rio," he answered.

"Do you imagine that Fonseca will succeed?" I continued.

"He is sure to," said the chief, a soft gleam lighting his eyes. "It is only we who have failed, my friend." He paused a moment, and then resumed: "I am sorry I have brought you to this, Robert. For the rest of us it matters little that we die. Is not a free Brazil a glorious prize to be won by the purchase of a few lives?"

Paola, after sitting long silent, addressed Valcour, who, since the captain's exit, had been staring from the window that faced the forest.

"What did de Souza say to Lesba?"

The spy turned around with a countenance more composed and cheerful than he had before shown, and answered:

"He offered to save her from death if she would marry him.

"Ah; and she laughed at the dear captain, as we all heard. But you, senhor, made an effort to induce her to change her mind—did you not?"

"I?" returned Valcour. "By no means, senhor. It is better she should die than marry this brutal Captain de Souza."

This speech seemed to confirm my suspicion that Valcour himself loved Lesba. But Paola cast one of his quick, searching glances into the spy's face and seemed pleased by what he discovered there.

"May I speak with my sister?"

"Impossible, senhor. She must remain in solitary confinement until the hour of execution, for the captain's gallantry will not permit him to bind her."

Then, approaching de Pintra, Valcour stood a moment looking down at him and said:

"Sir, you have made a noble fight for a cause that has doubtless been very dear to you. And you have lost. In these last hours that you are permitted to live will you not make a confession to your Emperor, and give him the details of that conspiracy in which you were engaged?"

"In Rio," answered Dom Miguel, quietly, "there is now no Emperor. The Revolution is proclaimed. Even at this moment the people of our country are acclaiming the United States of Brazil. Senhor, your power is ended. You may, indeed, by your master's orders, murder us in this far-away province before assistance can reach us. But our friends will exact a terrible vengeance for the deed, be assured."

"If your lives were in my hands," said the spy, with a gesture of weariness, "you would be tried in a court of justice. I am no murderer, senhor, and I sincerely grieve that de Souza should consider his orders positive."

He turned abruptly to Mazanovitch, and throwing an arm around the little man's shoulders bent swiftly down and pressed a kiss upon the pallid forehead. Then, with unsteady gait he walked from the room, and at last I saw the eyes of Mazanovitch open wide, a gaze of ineffable tenderness following the retreating form, until Valcour had disappeared. Paola also was staring, and the disgusting simper had left his face, for a time, at least.

Silence now fell upon the room. Bastro, in his corner, had gone to sleep, and Dom Miguel seemed lost in thought. From the chamber in which Lesba was confined came no sound to denote whether the girl grieved over her approaching fate or bore it with the grim stoicism of her doomed comrades.

The guard paced up and down before the closed door, pausing at times to mutter a word to his fellows, who stood watchfully over us. From my station on the chest I could gaze into the yard and note the shadow of the house creeping further and further out into the sunshine, bringing ever nearer the hour when the bright orb would sink into the far-away plateau and our eyes would be closed forever in death.

Yet the time dragged wearily, it seemed to me. When one is condemned to die it is better to suffer quickly, and have done with it. To wait, to count the moments, is horrible. One needs to have nerves of iron to endure that.

Nevertheless, we endured it. The hours passed, somehow, and the shadows grew dim with stretching.

Suddenly I heard a clank of spurs as de Souza approached. He gave a brief order to the Uruguayans who were lounging in the yard, and then stepped through the doorway and faced us.

"Get ready, senhors," said he. "The hour has come."

CHAPTER XXIII.

We aroused ourselves, at this, and regarded the captain attentively.

He turned his stern gaze upon one after the other, and gave a growl of satisfaction as he noted no craven amongst us.

"You shall draw cuts, gentlemen, to decide the order in which you must expiate your crime. I will show no partiality. See, here are the slips, a number written upon each. Julio shall place them in his hat and allow you to draw."

He handed the bits of paper to one of his men and strode to the door of Lesba's room.

"Open!" he commanded, giving it a rap with his knuckles.

There was no reply.

"Open!" said he, again, and placed his ear to the panel.

Then, with a sudden gesture, he swung the door inward.

A moment the officer stood motionless, gazing into the chamber. Then he turned to us a face convulsed with anger.

"Who permitted the woman to escape?" he demanded.

The guards, startled and amazed, peered over his shoulders into the vacant room; but none dared to answer.

"What now, Captain, has your bird flown?" came Valcour's soft voice, and the spy entered the room and threw himself carelessly into a chair.

De Souza looked upon his colleague with evident suspicion, and twisted the ends of his moustache in sullen fury. Perhaps he dared not accuse Valcour openly, as the latter was the Emperor's authorized representative. And it may be the captain was not sincerely sorry that Lesba had escaped, and so saved him from the necessity of executing her, for, after a period of indecision, the wrath of the officer seemed to cool, and he slowly regained his composure. Valcour, who was watching him, appeared to notice this, and said:

"You forgot the window, my Captain. It was not difficult for the senhorita to steal across the roadway unobserved and take refuge in the forest. For my part, I am glad she is gone. Our royal master has little credit in condemning a woman to such a death."

"Have a care, senhor! Your words are treasonable."

"The Emperor will be the first to applaud them, when he has time to think. Indeed, de Souza, were I in your place, I should ignore the order to execute these people. His Majesty acted under a severe nervous strain, and he will not thank you, believe me, for carrying out his instructions so literally."

"A soldier's duty is to obey," returned the officer, stiffly. Then, turning to the tall Uruguayan who held the hat, he added:

"Let the prisoners draw, Julio!"

Another soldier now unfastened our bonds, and Paola, who was the first to be approached by Julio, took a slip of paper from the hat and thrust it into his pocket without examination.

Sanchez Bastro drew next, and smiled as he read his number. Then came my turn, and I own that I could not repress a slight trembling of my fingers as I drew forth the fatal slip. It was number four.

"Good!" murmured de Pintra, reading the slip over my shoulder. "I shall not be alive to witness your death, Robert." And then he took the last paper from the hat and added: "I am number two."

"I am first," sair Bastro, with cheerfulness. "It is an honor, Dom Miguel," and he bowed respectfully to the chief.

"Come, gentlemen; we are ready.

It was the captain who spoke, and we rose obediently and filed through the doorway, closely guarded by the Uruguayans.

In the vacant space that served as a yard for Bastro's house stood a solitary date-palm with a straight, slender trunk. Before this we halted, and Bastro was led to the tree and a rope passed around his body securing him to the trunk. They offered to blindfold him, but he waved the men aside.

"It will please me best to look into the muzzles of your guns," said the patriot, in a quiet voice. "I am not afraid, Senhor Captain."

De Souza glanced at the sun. It was slowly sinking, a ball of vivid red, into the bosom of the far-away plateau.

At a gesture from the officer six of the guardsmen stepped forward and leveled their carbines upon Bastro, who stood upright against the tree, with a proud smile upon his manly face.

I turned away my head, feeling sick and dizzy; and the rattle of carbines set me trembling with nervous horror. Nor did I look toward the tree again, although, after an interval of silence, I heard the tramp of soldiers bearing Bastro's body to the deserted house.

"Number two!" cried de Souza, harshly.

It was no time to turn craven. My own death was but a question of moments, and I realized that I had little time to bid farewell to my kind friend and strive to cheer him upon his way. Going to his side I seized Dom Miguel's hand and pressed it to my lips; but he was not content with that, and caught me in a warm and affectionate embrace.

Then he was led to the tree. I turned my back, covering my face with my hands.

"For the Cause!" I heard his gentle voice say. The carbines rang out again, and a convulsive sob burst from my throat in spite of my strong efforts to control my emotion.

Again I listened to the solemn tread of the soldiers, while from far away the sound of a shout was borne to us upon the still evening air.

Somehow, that distant shout thrilled me with a new-born hope, and I gazed eagerly along the line of roadway that skirted the forest.

De Souza was gazing there, too, with a disturbed look upon his face; but the light was growing dim, and we could see nothing.

"Number three!"

It was Paola's turn, and he walked unassisted to the tree and set his back to it, while the soldiers passed the rope under his arms and then retired. But they left Valcour confronting the prisoner, and I saw the simper fade from Paola's lips and an eager gleam light his pale features.

For a few moments they stood thus, separated from all the rest, and exchanging earnest whispers, while the captain stamped his foot with savage impatience.

"Come, come, Valcour!" he called, at last. "You are interfering with my duty. Leave the prisoner, I command you!"

The spy turned around, and his face was positively startling in its expression of intense agony.

"If you are in a hurry, my dear Captain, fire upon us both!"

With a muttered oath de Souza strode forward, and seizing Valcour by the arm, dragged him back of the firing-line.

But at that instant a startling sound reached our ears—the sound of a cheer—and with it came the rapid patter of horses' feet.

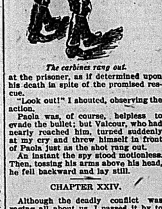
The soldiers, who had already leveled their guns at Paola, swung suddenly around upon their heels; de Souza uttered an exclamation of dismay, and the rest of us stood as motionless as if turned to stone.

For sweeping around the curve of the forest came a troop of horsemen, led by a girl whose fluttering white skirts trailed behind her like a banner borne on the breeze. God! how they rode—the horses plunging madly forward at every bound, their red eyes and distended nostrils bearing evidence of the wild run that had well-nigh exhausted their strength.

And the riders, as they sighted us, screamed curses and encouragement in the same breath, bearing down upon our silent group with the speed of a whirlwind.

There was little time for the Uruguayans to recover from their surprise, for at close range the horsemen let fly a volley from rifle and revolver that did deadly havoc. A few saddles were emptied in return, but almost instantly the soldiers and patriots were engaged in a desperate hand-to-hand conflict, with no quarter given or expected.

De Souza fell wounded at the first volley, and I saw Valcour, with a glad cry, start forward and run toward Paola, who was still bound to his tree. But the captain, half raising himself from the ground, aimed his revolver at the prisoner, as if determined upon his death in spite of the promised rescue.



The carbines rang out.

"Look out!" I shouted, observing the action.

Paola was, of course, helpless to evade the bullet; but Valcour, who had nearly reached him, turned suddenly at my cry and threw himself in front of Paola just as the shot rang out.

An instant the spy stood motionless. Then, tossing his arms above his head, he fell backward and lay still.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Although the deadly conflict was raging all about us, I passed it by to regard a still more exciting tragedy. For with a roar like that from a mad bull Mazanovitch dashed aside his captors and sprang to the spot where Valcour lay.

"Oh, my darling, my darling!" he moaned, raising the delicate form that he might pillow the head upon his knee. "How dared they harm you, my precious one! How dared they!"

SHE CHANGED HER MIND

By JEANNE O. LOIZEAUX

Copyright, 1905, by Ruby Douglas

Marion rode at an angry gallop. The dust was thick and the heat intense even for July—no weather for riding. The girl wore a neat blue gown, and a wide straw hat shaded her golden hair and clouded blue eyes. As she passed the hayfield, midway between her father's farm and Jim Bradley's, Jim himself stepped to the road and motioned her to stop. She reigned the rough bay colt up with difficulty and pushed her lover's hand away when he laid it on her arm. She gave him no chance to speak.

"Now, don't say anything. I shall ride whatever horse I please. See how quiet he is, anyway. Well, suppose I am killed? Then you will be free to marry Agnes, since you seem to like her so well. You can ride with her every day. You are free now, for that matter!"

She knew it was an unjust remark, but jealousy had the upper hand.

Jim Bradley was every inch a man, tall and good looking. His dark eyes flashed, and his jaw set. He had seen Marion in a temper before. He tried to explain.

"But, dearest, she only overtook me on my way to town. It was not planned by either of us, and I have always known her, as I have you. Would you have me tell her you did not allow me to ride a mile with a neighbor? Where's the harm? You know whom I love, dear."

"She's always after you. She's in love with you. She"—

"No, she is not, but if she were ought you to be angry with me? And even then should you blame her? You love me yourself, don't you? Come, dear, be reasonable. Let me lead the brute home, and, if you must ride and get a sunstroke, get it on a safe horse." His masterful air of possession irritated her as much as it ordinarily pleased her.

"I don't love you. I hate you! Come on, Prince." She gave the reins a little slap, and the colt danced and snorted wildly. Jim caught him by the bridle. He spoke with repressed anger.

"Well, love me or not, you shall get down! You shan't break your neck just to break my heart. You know plenty of other ways of doing that. Prince has not been saddled half a dozen times, and I know your father does not allow you to ride him, though you are an old hand at horses. And you know perfectly well that Agnes is nothing but a friend. She cares nothing for me. She's a nice girl"—

"That's it—stand up for her, Jim Bradley! She told Sue Field that she would take you from me, and she's done it. Not that I care—much. Let Prince go, I say!"

"I will not. I shall take you down and have your father forbid you to mount him. Sue is only trying to make trouble. Agnes never said or thought a thing like that."

Marion sat quietly a moment, as if to obey his command to dismount. Her eyes were wide, her cheeks glowing. He dropped the bridle and came to reach his arms up for her. Then suddenly the demon of pride seized her again. She gave Prince a cut that sent him out of Jim's reach with one bound.

"Goodby," she called. "You are free. I wouldn't marry you if you—I would have to be dead and come to life again before I would say I love you!"

The horse was off at an unruly gallop. Jim was angry, but his heart stood still as he watched the little blue figure riding away so lightly. Untrustworthy as he knew the colt to be, she seemed to have him under fine control. She could tame anything but her own temper; it was a way she had. Perhaps her own unruly spirit made the conquest of others easy. Of all her suitors—and she was much sought—only Jim had ever held his own and refused to bow utterly under the yoke of her will. That was why she loved him and quarreled with him—and had always come back to him. He was the stronger, and, while at times she resented his power over her, she also gloried in it. This was the worst she had ever done—defied him, broken her promise to marry him, risked her life to wring his heart.

He watched horse and girl fly from him over the level road. Then he shouldered his hayfork, walked swiftly to her father's place, entered the deserted barnyard—the men were all in the fields—closed the open barn door and waited with set jaw.

Meantime Marion and the colt were having a grand ride past grain lands and groves and farmhouses, flying past meadow and hayfield. The brisk motion, the wind in her face, cooled the girl's anger a little and made her ashamed. She thought with a pang that she had gone too far this time—that she could never make it up with Jim now she had been a fool.

Then she remembered coming back from shopping with Sue and meeting him riding gayly to town with Agnes Sutherland, with whom she had warred from the A B C's up. Jim had always had a fondness for her. Her wrath rose again, and she twitched the bridle. Prince was tired and beginning to be a bit sulky and nervous. With horsewomanly instinct she humored without yielding to him, let him drink at a roadside trough and turned his head for home.

As they reached Field's farm she noticed preparations for thrashing going on. The great red thrasher stood waiting for the engine, and men and horses were standing all about the conical yellow stacks. Sue came from the house and called to her to stop, which she did, to the colt's disgust. Sue leaned on the fence, and the two girls chatted a moment.

"You better get off till the engine comes, Marion. You might meet it. You've no business on that crazy colt. It isn't safe. I don't see how Jim allows it!" Marion's face flamed.

"What has he to say? I am not engaged to him any more. I"—

Sue gasped, then, with remorse—too late, as usual—remembered what she had told her friend on the way from town that day.

"Marion, you weren't ever fool enough not to know I was joking? What Agnes really said was that Jim was so silly about you he didn't hear what she said half the time. Oh, May, I'm so sorry!"

But Marion did not wait. She rode away.

Prince settled into an ugly, obstinate gallop, swerving and jolting.

They were nearing the crossing when an unearthly shriek made Marion look up to see the thrasher engine approaching. She urged Prince on, trying to reach the corner where the road turned toward home before the machine came closer. Her hands trembled, but she remembered that it is fatal to lose nerve with an unruly horse.

Prince snorted, laid back his ears, but went on well enough. They were almost at the corner when the fiendish shriek came again.

The colt took the bit in his teeth and bolted in utter terror. Marion knew her danger and kept her head as they turned the corner. She let her hat go, and the wind whipped her long hair back like a yellow banner. She spoke to the colt soothingly, patted his neck, tried to get the bit from his teeth—all in vain. They were still a mile from home and going so fast that the motion was as easy as the rocking of a cradle. If they met no teams and he kept to the road all might yet be well, but he might throw her. He swerved at the bridge and nearly dragged her against the railing.

She felt cold perspiration on her face. It seemed like the end of things. She thought of Jim—all he had been, all he was to her, what she had said to him—and now she—might—never be able to say she was sorry, that she loved him—get him to forgive her. She recalled a baby prayer, a little brother long dead, thought of her mother's face when they would take her home. As they neared the house she remembered that she had not weeded the pansy bed. Everything wavered strangely in her mind.

As they passed the windows she saw her little sister's baby face.

As the colt tore around the corner to the gate and into the yard she grew cold with horror. She had left the barn door open. He would make for his stall and crush her. It went suddenly dark before her, and her head swam. Jim—she wanted to call his name, but could not. He would have saved her, she thought.

Against the closed door stood a brimming pail of cold water. As Prince stopped with a jerk that threw Marion from her seat Jim Bradley came quietly up. She was hanging by all her skirts, that had caught on the pommel. Only a quick hand and a steady one could have disengaged her as he did. He drew her into the shade and held her close.

She opened her eyes and looked up into his white face. It was like heaven to her.

"Jim!" she said. "Jim!"

"Are you hurt—are you hurt? Marion, are you all right?" She drew a long breath, stood up and walked a step to show him she was uninjured. Then she went close to him and put her hands on his shoulders. Her face was very serious.

"Jim," she said, "I have changed my mind." He saw a queer little light in her eyes and was wary.

"About what—Prince?"

"About you. Couldn't you—ask me if I—love you? I think that I wouldn't have to lie to say—yes." Jim tried to get hold of her, but she held off.

"I want to tell you what I think of myself. Don't you speak. I am a horrid little—beast. Yes, I did say 'beast.' Will you—take me back?" Jim thought he would.

Thackeray's Disfigured Nose.

That George Venables, Thackeray's schoolmate, was not entirely responsible for the novelist's disfigured nose is to be gathered from the autobiography of Sir Wemyss Reid. On one occasion, when both Venables and Reid were visiting Lord Houghton, Reid bluntly asked his fellow guest who broke Thackeray's nose.

"It was winter, and we were walking in Indian file through the woods. As I put this question to Venables he suddenly stopped and, turning around, glared at me in a manner that instantly revealed the terrible truth to my alarmed intelligence. He continued to glare for several seconds, and then, apparently perceiving nothing but innocent confusion, not unmixed with alarm, on my face, his features became relaxed into a more amiable expression. 'Did anybody tell you,' he said slowly and with solemn emphasis, 'to ask me that question?' I could truthfully say that nobody had done so. My answer seemed to mollify Venables at once. 'Then, if nobody put you up to asking that question, I don't mind answering it. It was I who broke Thackeray's nose. We were only little boys at the time and quarreled over something and had the usual fight. It wasn't my fault that he was disfigured for life. It was all the fault of some wretched doctor. Nowadays a boy's nose can be mended so that nobody can see that it has ever been broken. Let me tell you,' he continued, 'that Thackeray never showed me any ill will for the harm I had done him, and I do not believe he felt any.'"

THE SWINBURNES.

Family One of England's Oldest—Settled Before Norman Conquest.

Sir John Swinburne, whose impending marriage to Miss Florence Moffat at Windsor, England, has just been announced, is 74 years of age, says the Marquise de Fontenoy. The Swinburnes are one of the oldest families in England and were settled at Swinburne Castle in Northumberland at the time of the Norman conquest. The castle, by the bye, passed through marriage in the reign of Queen Elizabeth to the Widderingtons, who sold it to the Riddells, in whose possession it has been for the last 200 years, the country seat of the head of the house of Swinburne since 1572 having been Capheaton Hall, near Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The baronetcy held by Sir John Swinburne is one of the first ones created by King James I., when he founded the Order of the Baronets, dating from 1660, and was conferred upon John Swinburne, who had previously been the subject of a romantic and sensational lawsuit. As a child he had been carried off to France, kidnapped, in fact, in connection with those bitter quarrels that prevailed between the Protestants and the Roman Catholics in England at the time of the reformation. He was brought up in a monastery on the continent under a different name, was believed to have perished, and when, after reaching manhood, and refusing to become a monk, he returned to England to claim his extensive estates, his identity was questioned and he was compelled to institute legal proceedings in order to establish it. This he did by describing, among other things, all the curious marks of the family punch bowl and also the strange markings of a pet cat which he had as a boy.

Among the most familiar members of the Swinburne family have been Henry Swinburne, the friend of Empress Maria Theresa and traveler, whose books on Spain and Italy printed in the middle of the eighteenth century are still standard works to-day.

Another is England's foremost and most gifted poet of the present day, Algernon Swinburne, who, had it not been for the radical and even downright revolutionary opinions which he professes in all political matters, would certainly have been appointed to succeed Lord Tennyson as poet laureate. He is a first cousin of Sir James Swinburne, and the son of the late Admiral Charles and Lady Jane Swinburne, a wonderful old woman, having been a daughter of the third earl of Ashburnham. Lady Jane was celebrated in her younger days for her remarkable beauty, which was such that when presented for the first time at court she was complimented on her loveliness by William IV. as he drew her to him and imprinted a hearty kiss on her cheek.

Algernon Swinburne is an object of particular aversion to the Russian Government and to the reigning house of Romanoff, both of which he has repeatedly denounced fiercely in impassioned verse. Indeed, at one moment the Russian Government endeavored, though unsuccessfully, to secure his prosecution in the criminal courts by the English authorities on the ground that his poems constituted not merely an excuse for the methods of the terrorists' party in the dominions of the Czar but an actual instigation to the assassination of sovereign, princes, and officials at St. Petersburg.

On the other hand Swinburne has been the recipient of profound and publicly expressed admiration on the part of the Italian Government and people, the former having officially eulogized his poems glorifying that Italian revolution which has transformed the peninsula into a united nation.

Sir John Swinburne, a Crimean veteran of the Royal Navy, has several sons and one daughter, the widow of Richard Chamberlain, who was a younger brother of ex-Colonial Secretary Joseph Chamberlain. There is but little love lost between Mrs. Richard and her distinguished brother-in-law, and during the Boer war she took an active part in making trouble for the administration and in particular for the Colonial Secretary, not only in England, but also in South Africa.

Needle-Making a Secret Art.

The history of making needles in England is a curious one, for the art has been several times lost to English workmen since the reign of Queen Mary.

Needles were first made in England at that time by a negro from Spain, who set up a shop and for a time prospered at his trade. At his death it was found that he had taught the trade to no one, and the English had to go abroad for their needles until 1565, when a German artisan taught a few mechanics the manner of their making.

The trade soon died out again, for some reason, and not until 1650 was it revived by a foreign workman, who conducted his operations on so large a scale that there was no longer any danger of the secret of their manufacture being lost.

This was the first time that the method of making them was not shrouded in secrecy, and soon the manufacture of needles became an important industry, the Whitechapel needles becoming famous the world over.

There are now several centres, in addition to the London quarter, where the needle industry flourishes, Birmingham alone now producing as many needles in a day as the original workman made in his lifetime.

Sir Henry Irving's Kindness.

Stories of Sir Henry Irving's goodness of heart to the members of his company are innumerable. Mr. Mellish cited an occasion when he had been ill and called to see the actor regarding his further association with the organization.

"You look as though you need a change," said Sir Henry. "Go to the treasurer and get three weeks' salary. After you have spent it come back and start to work."

The actor, after receiving the money discovered that it contained $25 more than the three weeks' stipend. He so informed the treasurer.

"Oh, yes," said the official. "I forgot to mention it. Sir Henry said you looked as though you needed plenty of sun and air. The extra money is for carriages so you won't tire yourself out while you're looking for it."

THE ART OF TEA MAKING.

There Are Other Things Besides the Quality of the Beverage.

To make good tea is one thing; to make tea gracefully is a wholly different thing. The Frenchwoman makes tea gracefully, whether the cup is good or not.

The cardinal principal in tea making is to be at your ease. Seem to enjoy yourself. If you do not enjoy yourself you may be sure that there will be little enjoyment for your guests. The spectacle of a tired hostess is a familiar one and a never pleasant one. Think over the hostesses you know. The pleasantest places to visit are the places where the hostess has a good time herself. She smiles and is glad to see you, and you feel that you are making her happy.

It is said that a woman who has kept her figure is sweetest at forty. Anyway she can make the best cup of tea. Her pleased, half amused manner as she makes it is delightful; so also is the pretty way she holds the cup toward you; so also is the manner in which she makes and sips her own cup while you are taking yours. Almost imperceptibly she refills your cup. There is a sentiment in keeping the same cup while she pours some fresh tea into it. And so the tea hour passes. It is a delightful thing.

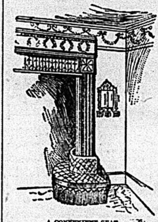
The hostess who does not acquire the art of making a cup of afternoon tea calmly and well is the hostess who knows little or nothing about finesse.

Practice the art of tea making when you are all alone. Take a cup of tea and pass it across the table. See if you can do it without forgetting anything and without upsetting it; then try to do it and to listen at the same time. Pretend you are holding a conversation. Don't look at the cup too steadily. Practice tea making until you can do it without more than glancing at the cup. It is easy. And when you have learned it—be you rich or poor, a great hostess or a small one—you will have acquired a pretty art which will serve you in good stead all your life.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FOLDING DOOR SETTEE.

It Is Artistic and Adds to the Room's Appearance.

Folding doors between communicating rooms are seldom closed. An ordinary chair within a few feet of the space never looks well. It shows its back to one room or the other and is in the way. The settee illustrated here is an addition to any decorative arrangement of either room. It does not interfere with any graceful drapery that may be arranged at the door. It is decidedly useful, convenient and gives a certain touch of the unusual and elegant to the room. Of course it is readily rolled to some other position when it is desired to close the sliding doors. A settee of this kind is not difficult to fashion, and a very pretty one could easily be made and upholstered at home.



A CONVENIENT SEAT.

Work Soiled Hands.

If a girl works around a typewriter during the day or handles dusty goods the hands are thoroughly begrimed by night, the dirt soaking in as the perspiration opens the pores. If there is no running water at her office she should leave them uncovered until she reaches home. Putting on gloves soils the latter for any further use and dries the hands. Wash the hands in tepid water holding a teaspoonful of ammonia. Scrub well with castile soap and a stiff brush. Borax soap dries the skin too much after excessive perspiration. Always keep half a lemon on the washstand with which to rub the hands and nails after the first dirt has been removed. The hands should be scrubbed again well before retiring or while bathing in the morning. This is the only means of getting the grime and discoloration entirely out of the flesh each day. A sulphur match dipped in water and rubbed on the spot will remove ink stains.

The Children's Scrapbook.

The scrapbook is a pleasant and educative fad to indulge the children. The future years are likely to be the outcome of the child's life in his scrapbook. There should be some definite means of expression for the child's train of thought.

One enjoys the pictures of locomotives. The future may find him a railway magnate. One finds the pictures of buildings a matter of constant pleasure, and no doubt time will register him as an architect. Birds interest another child, and it may quicken within him the spirit of ornithology.

Give your child a scrapbook and see what his tastes are, and if he does not have natural interest in one perhaps a little of your attention will help to awaken latent powers. Foster the originalities of your child as much as you can.

FALLING TO RUIN.

England's Historic Edifice at Winchester, 400 Years Old, Near Decay—Another One In Peril.

Two famous old English churches, Winchester cathedral and Cripplegate, the burial place of John Milton, are in danger of becoming ruins. They are suffering from old age. The dean and chapter of Winchester recently engaged a trio of architectural and engineering experts to examine the edifice and their report discloses "the danger which threatens one of the grandest and most historical cathedrals in the country."

The decay is most serious in the south wall of the presbytery and is of long standing. For at least 400 years there has been from time to time a settling of the east portion of the building and the movement has been of late more marked. This is attributed partly to the untrustworthy foundation, which rests upon a bed of soft marl, only ten feet below the surface and which permanently is washed by water.

Other walls show signs of subsidence, while the spires and pinnacles of the west front are in a dilapidated if not dangerous condition.

To effect requisite repairs at least $30,000, and probably more, will be required, but, as the dean and chapter possess no fabric fund, they appeal to the nation for help in securing the safety of what is a national possession—a church which contains the bones of Saxon kings, and in wealth of historical association and architectural beauty is almost without a rival.

The bells in Cripplegate Church can't be rung now without causing such vibration as to loosen stones and shake them out on the roadway, to the danger of the passersby. The tower is nearly 800 years old, but the damage is not considered anything like so serious as at Winchester. Still, a great deal of money will be required to save from ruin what is considered the historical city monument in Jewry street, Aldgate.

The demolition of some old buildings has brought to light a splendid specimen of the old Roman wall of London in a good state of preservation. It was found about eight feet below the street level and is about eight feet high and nine feet thick. There are three tiers of tiles, the other part being built in cubes, and the wall is a perfect specimen of Roman masonry. Great care has been taken to preserve the wall as a memorial of early London.

The Princess Royal.

While the Duchess of Fife, who is one of the most shy and unassuming of women, probably cares little about the title of "princess royal" conferred upon her by her father, King Edward, she cannot but be gratified by the grant of the title and rank of princess to her two daughters, who, although they come immediately after the children of the Prince of Wales in the line of succession to the Crown, have hitherto had to be content with the mere courtesy prefix of "lady" to their Christian names, and with the status of commoners, says the Marquise de Fontenoy. The elder, Lady Alexandra, now Princess Alexandra, is near 15 years of age, and is the heir to her father's dukedom of Fife, which her son will in turn inherit if she marries and has male issue. The young daughter, Lady Maud, now Princess Maud, is 12. The title of Princess Royal was last borne by Empress Frederick and is usually held by the eldest daughter of an English Sovereign.

British Premier In a Breakdown.

An interesting story of the English Premier and Sir Thomas Lipton comes from Garstang, near Preston. Mr. Balfour was automobiling with Sir Thomas, from Scotland, in the latter's car when it broke down while passing through the village and an old woman who had witnessed the accident asked them to come into the house and warm themselves by the fire while the car was being repaired, an invitation which the two gentlemen accepted.

They listened to some little children recite and sing songs and partook of tea. The old woman did not know who her visitors were until the chauffeur revealed the identity of one of them by calling out:

"The car is repaired, Sir Thomas."

The gentlemen thanked the old lady warmly for her hospitality, gave the children half a sovereign ($2.50) each, and Mr. Balfour promised to show his hostess around the House of Commons whenever she came to London.

Unpleasant Practical Joke.

A practical joke of a peculiarly unpleasant nature was perpetrated at Portsmouth, England:

A large quantity of phosphide of calcium, a chemical which when brought into contact with water diffuses exceedingly noxious fumes, was dropped into a drain.

In a moment the whole thoroughfare reeked to such a degree as to be uninhabitable. They was a general stampede of pedestrians. Many diners in a large restaurant quitted their seats, and the place had to be temporarily closed. Other shops near by put up their shutters for at least half an hour.

As the chemical is largely used in the navy in connection with night torpedo practice, it is believed that the "joke" was the work of some one in the navy.

The Word "Cad."

When did the word "cad" come to have its present odious meaning? In 1837 it was applied to a London omnibus conductor without the slightest disrespect. In a letter from Carlyle to Abraham Hayward in that year occurs this passage: "When you have time to write answer, pray pack up the quarterlies along with it; send your famulus into Fleet street, and he will see a Chelsea omnibus; the cad will bring it me for sixpence within an hour."

No Sanctity In Garments.

There is no sanctity in garments. A rose in a man's hat does not enlarge his piety. Grace is not conveyed by a piece of lawn or chastity by the wearing of a girdle. A black gown has neither more sense nor better manners than a black coat, nor is a black coat more edifying than a fustian frock, no more than a cambric bib is an antidote against lewdness or an atonement for it.—Independent Whig, 1719.

KING'S SECOND COUSIN.

Count Albert Victor Gleichen Now Attached in Military Capacity to U. S. Embassy at Washington.

Count Albert Victor Gleichen, who is attached in a military capacity to the British embassy at Washington, is, in spite of his German name and title, an English soldier and in every sense of the word a Briton. He is no stranger to this country, writes the Marquise de Fontenoy, which he visited about sixteen years ago, and on his return home published an article relating his American experiences and which appeared in Murray's Magazine, attracting a good deal of attention on this side of the Atlantic, owing to the fact that he had been imprudent enough to mingle with his praise some criticisms which were not altogether well received here. He is, however, a gallant soldier, one of the most popular men in the English army, alike with his fellow officers and with the rank and file, and besides that an extremely accomplished man, who paints, sketches, plays, and sings, as well as he writes. He is the author of several successful books, one of the most interesting of which is a record of his experiences as a member of Sir Rennell Rodd's mission to the Negus of Abyssinia.

Besides being the godson of King Edward and one of his equerries, Count Gleichen is his cousin. For his father, the late Prince Victor Hohenlohe, who, as Count Gleichen, rose to the rank of admiral in the English navy and distinguished himself in the Crimean war, was a favorite nephew of Queen Victoria, being a son of her half sister. Prince Victor Hohenlohe, on marrying Miss Laura Seymour, assumed the title of Count Gleichen, which belonged to his family, and abdicated his rights and prerogatives as scion of one of the mediatized or formerly reigning houses of Europe, descending to the rank of a mere noble. Otherwise he would have been compelled to marry Miss Seymour morganatically. Prince Victor's sister was the mother of the present German Empress, and Count Gleichen is, therefore, first cousin of her German majesty. Thanks to this, he has enjoyed an exceptionally privileged position at the Kaiser's court and in Berlin society, while acting as military attache of the British embassy there. His mother now bears the title of Princess Victor Hohenlohe by virtue of an order of Queen Victoria, though it is not recognized on the continent. One of his sisters, Countess Feodora Gleichen, has achieved no little fame both as a painter and as a sculptress, having won prizes both at the Royal Academy and the Paris salon, while another sister, Countess Valda, who possesses a magnificent voice, married a few weeks ago M. Machell, under secretary of state in the department of finance of the Egyptian Government, and a son of the famous sportsman, Capt. Machell.

Count Gleichen, who holds the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the Grenadier Guards, and who is covered with decorations, is a bachelor, far from rich, and there are no restrictions in the way of his marrying anybody he chooses. His wife will become through her union to him a first cousin of the Kaiser and of King Edward, a German countess, and the helpmate of a charming and accomplished man, who is generally known among his friends by the nickname of "Glick."

I may add that he has seen a good deal of active service, having taken part in most of the Egyptian campaigns, is a graduate of the staff college, has been attached to special missions in Morocco, a country about which he has written, and was so badly wounded in the last war in South Africa that he was reported as dead; in fact, his recovery were little short of miraculous.

How tactful he is is best shown by the manner in which he has managed to retain until now the affection and good will of his two kinsmen, the Kaiser and King Edward.

Leading Dietetic Authority.

Dr. Robert Hutchison, the leading authority at the present day on the subject of dietetics, is a Scotsman by birth, and was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He was one of the most brilliant students which the university ever had, and he was awarded every prize and scholarship practically which the university had to offer him. Edinburgh did not seem to give him a large enough field for his abilities, and he followed the example afforded by many of his countrymen in going south to the metropolis. There his ability was at once recognized, and, like the late Sir Andrew Clark, he was appointed physician to the London Hospital. Since then his career has been one of interrupted success. He has published what is at the present time the standard work on "Food and Dietetics," and also a manual on children's disease. Dr. Hutchison is a tall, very strongly-built man, clean shaven, with a quiet but impressive manner, and his whole personality spells efficiency. He is possessed of a fund of dry humor, and of many friends.

Relic of Scotland's Kings.

An old cushion on which the Crown of Scotland rested was recently placed in the jewel room at Edinburgh Castle. The cushion has been presented to the nation by Sir Patrick Keith Murray, Bart., of Ochtertyre, Crieff. It has been in the possession of the Keith Murray family since the marriage of the late Sir William Keith Murray, eighth Baronet, to the heiress of the last of the Keith Marischals, and who thereby became owner of Dunnottar Castle and Ravelston House, near Edinburgh. It was sent in June last to the King's Remembrancer in Edinburgh, who, on receiving a certificate of authenticity from Sir Patrick Keith Murray, lodged the cushion with the regalia.

Always Raining There.

There is a group of islands to the south of New Zealand called the Sisters, or Seven Sisters, which are reputed to be subjected to a practically constant rainfall. The same may be said of the islands and mainland of Tiera del Fuego, saving for the difference that the rain often takes the form of sleet and snow. On a line running round the world from four to eight or nine degrees there are patches over which rain seldom ceases to fall. This is called the "zone of constant precipitation," but at the same time there are several localities along it with very little rainfall.

The Woman's Auxiliary

TWENTIETH ANNUAL SESSION CAME TO AN END LAST NIGHT —THE NEW OFFICERS.

The 20th annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of England Missionary Society for the Diocese of Ontario was brought to a close last evening. The two days' sessions held in this city proved to be both profitable and pleasant.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The afternoon session yesterday was opened with prayer and the roll call

The first matter taken up was the disposition of the thank offering for 1907.

After considerable discussion it was decided to place it to the credit of the Widows' and Orphans' fund.

The question box was opened, and a number of questions relative to the work of the Society were answered satisfactorily.

"How to prevent a Dull Meeting," was the subject of a paper read by Mrs Jerome Hendricks. It was interesting, and replete with valuable suggestions.

The result of the election of officers was announced as follows;

Hon. President—Mrs. Bishop Mills.
Hon. Vice-Presidents — Mrs. Buxton Smith, and Miss Gildersleeve.
President—Mrs. Loucks.
Vice-President—Mrs. Grant.
Rec.-Sec'y. — Miss Dalton.
Treasurer—Miss Muckleston.
Cor.-Sec'y.—Miss Daley.
Sec'y of Literature — Miss MacMorine.
Sec'y of J. W. A. and C. C. M. G. —Miss Lewin.
Organizing Secretary—Miss Loucks.
Leaflet Editress—Miss White.
Extra Cent a day Treasurer—Miss Kirkpatrick.

Mrs. Smith gave an interesting paper relative to missionary work in Africa.

Motions thanking those who had entertained the delegates, and also thanking the press, were unanimously adopted.

The session was closed by the singing of a hymn and prayer.

EVENING SESSION.

The concluding session was held in St. Thomas' Church Hall last evening, and was under the auspices of the junior branches. Miss Lewin, secretary of the Junior Association, presided over the meeting.

The proceedings opened by the singing of the hymn "Fling Out the Banner," followed by the Creed and members' prayer.

The report of the Diocesan Secretary for the J. W. A. was presented, and was of an encouraging nature. In substance it was as follows;

During the year three new branches had been organized, making a total of 16 in the Diocese. The membership was 379 and the average attendance at the 297 meetings held by the branches was 182. Total contributions were $281.31, and $180.68 was expended on Canadian missions and $16 for foreign missions. The branches had sent out 11 bales of material and provisions to the mission field and also four communion sets.

In the C. C. M. G. there are fourteen branches with a membership of 235. At the 253 meetings held the average attendance of members was 117. Total amount raised $70.55, of which $16.25 was given to the thank offering and $9.50 to the home for untainted children in the leper district of Japan. Two bales of clothing, etc. were sent to the missionaries, also eight parcels, the value of which was $117.13.

Mrs. Loucks then took charge of the meeting and asked a number of questions in regard to the junior constitution and pledges, and these were answered by the children in a prompt manner.

The singing of a hymn and prayer by the Rural Dean Beamish brought the proceedings to a close.

At 9.30 this morning a meeting of the new Boards and Presidents of the Parochial branches was held in St Thomas' Church Hall, to arrange for work, etc., in connection with the Auxiliary.

Canton Parade and Drill This Evening.

The parade and drill of Canton Belleville No. 8, Patriarchs Militant, will take place this evening, headed by the I.O.O.F. band. The band will provide marching music and the Canton will drill on Queen Victoria park.

The local Canton has a bright record, and is now preparing for the great competition to take place in Toronto next September, at which big money prizes are offered. The Belleville boys are handicapped to some extent in competition for the big prizes, but hope to be in line for some of the marching prizes. Those who have seen them on parade will agree that Canton Belleville No. 8 will take a lot of beating, even though their opponents may come from the biggest cities in America.

The local Canton now numbers about 30 members, and is officered by the following gentlemen:

Captain—Ald. Cooper.
Lieut.—R. H. Ketcheson.
Ensign—W. H. Bowen.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

Fatal Accident On Pinnacle Street This Afternoon

GERALD SKINNER, A SIX-YEAR-OLD BOY, HAD HIS NECK BROKEN BY THE COLLAPSE OF A BUILDING INSIDE WHICH HE AND A COMPANION WERE PLAYING.

Sudden and awful was the death which came this afternoon to little Gerald Skinner, son of Mr. George Skinner, barber, of this city.

The little fellow, who would have been six years old on the 20th of this month, was, with a companion, about 1.45 this afternoon, playing inside an old building on Pinnacle St., near the corner of Mill St. The building is in process of demolition, and was last occupied by Mr. William Graves as a blacksmith shop.

As before stated, the building is being torn down, and Mr. W. J. Brown, who owns the property, states that last evening six men did their best to shove down the south wall, but without success.

This afternoon, at the hour mentioned, little Gerald Skinner and a companion about his own age were playing in the old building when suddenly the same south wall, which had withstood the strength of six men, fell on the little Skinner boy, completely burying him.

The other boy at once gave the alarm, and willing hands soon removed the debris and had the poor bruised little body out.

But poor little Gerald was dead. His neck was broken. One arm was round a post, his head being jammed up against it.

No one knows what caused the collapse of the wall. All little Gerald's companion can tell is that they were playing in the building and suddenly the wall fell.

The little body was taken to the home of the parents, Pinnacle St., opposite Mr. R. J. Graham's cold storage.

The father and mother are heartbroken, the grief of the mother in particular, being terribly bitter, and the sympathy of the neighborhood is being extended to the parents, who have been called upon, without a moment's warning, to face such an awful calamtiy.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, visited the scene, and expressed the opinion that no inquest was necessary.

The unfortunate young victim was a very bright and lovable boy, a favorite with his playmates and all who knew him.

Bay of Quinte Conference Opened

FIRST DRAFT OF STATIONS — REV J. J. RAE IS THE PRESIDENT — REV. DR. CARMAN PRESIDES.

Port Perry, Ont., June 7.—The Bay of Quinte Conference opened here today at 10 o'clock. The chair was taken by the Rev. Dr. Carman, recently returned from Japan. In his opening address he said there was no great advance in the churches of Japan, a nationality of amazing mental and moral qualities. It was now as a man aroused from sleep.

The roll call showed about 200 delegates present. The Rev. J. J. Rae was elected president, the Rev. R. Duke making a good second. Rev. H. V. Mounteer was elected secretary with Rev. C. H. Coon assistant. The president-elect was welcomed to his office by Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., who presented him with the staff of office. Ministerial and civic deputations were received by conference. Mr. Wm. Ross, ex-M.P., offered a welcome on behalf of the church in which it meets.

To-night the annual missionary meeting was held, the president, Rev. J. J. Rae, presiding. He earnestly presented the work he had done on the missionary board, and pleaded for a comprehensive meeting of the gigantic missionary issues. The Rev. J. M. Whyte dealt with domestic missionary work from personal experience. Rev. Dr. Carman reviewed the true cause of the degradation of non-Christian nations. He showed how the Gospel had touched Japan.

Horrible Deeds By the Cossacks

ONE HUNDRED WOMEN BURNED TO DEATH IN MORSHANSK — PEASANT REVOLT IS SPREADING.

St Petersburg, June 8.—(Special).—One hundred women have been burned to death by Cossacks at Morshansk, in the northern provinces.

The peasant revolt is spreading and increasing in violence all through the north

The Cossacks, in an attempt to crush out the revolt, burned 50 houses in Morshansk and 125 at Aekhovo.

The peasants are burning the property of the landowners all over the district and are resisting the soldiers and police.

The entire district of Sionim is in flames.

Garden Party At Foxboro Last Night.

THREATENING WEATHER DID NOT SEEM TO DAUNT THE FESTIVE FARMERS AND VILLAGERS.

A highly enjoyable garden party, under the auspices of the Foxboro Presbyterian Church, was held on the church lawn in that village last night. A very large crowd was present, including between 75 and 100 people from this city, who went out in carioles and private conveyances. Threatening weather, no doubt, kept many from this city away, but the rain hardly touched Foxboro at all, there being only one shower, and that of short duration. Piper McIntosh, of this city, and the Fifteenth Regimental Band played on the church lawn, and there was an enjoyable programme inside the church, consisting of songs, recitations, etc. Dr. Bert Faulkner was chairman, and he made a splendid official. Refreshments in profusion were served by the ladies of the congregation. Everything served was "just like mother used to make it," and those who partook of the cookery of the Foxboro ladies are talking about it yet. These Foxboro garden parties are annual affairs, and it is safe to say that those who were there last night will not miss the one to be held next year.

STRIKE RIOT AT BRANTFORD.

Foreigners at the Iron Works Fight Among Themselves.

Brantford, June 8.—A strike came on yesterday at the Pratt & Letchworth Malleable Iron Works of this place, the foreign element causing trouble.

The men ask for an increase of pay. On account of the foreman being away the men were asked to wait till his return, when the matter would be taken up. Some were willing to wait, others wanted to go out right away. Twenty-five or thirty men went out, and soon a fight broke out among them, in which stones, bolts and bars were used.

One Armenian had his head cut with a bolt, another had his jaw dislocated.

The police were called and arrested seven of the ringleaders, and put a stop to the fighting.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE TREATIES.

Negotiations of Australian Government Well Advanced.

Melbourne, Australia, June 8.—Lord Northcote, the Governor-General of Australia, in his speech at the opening of the Federal Parliament yesterday, announced the immediate submission of a bill for the "preservation of the Australian industries and the repression of destructive monopolies."

The Governor-General also stated that the negotiations of the Australian Government for new preferential trade treaties with South Africa, New Zealand and other parts of the Empire were far advanced.

BAD MEAT IN TORONTO.

Hogs That Die In Transit Fed to the People.

Toronto, June 8.—F. C. Letts, business agent of the Meat Cutters' and Butchers' Union, in an interview yesterday asserts that he has personally seen dead cattle and hogs, on arrival in Toronto, dressed and disposed of with the rest. He also declares the existence of a considerable trade in immature or "slink" calves.

City Inspector Awde said: "I have found tuberculous meat exposed for sale by Toronto butchers." The cases had been seldom, and in each the meat was confiscated.

Asphyxiated In a Mine.

Red Lodge, Mont., June 8.—At least one man is dead and several others are in a serious condition from asphyxiation in the North Pacific Railway Co.'s Rockyford coal mine. Several men were overcome.

Young Man Badly Hurt.

Cornwall, June 8.—At the Toronto Paper Co.'s mill, Geo. Langdon, aged 16, was caught in a sizing machine and had his arm and shoulder blade broken. He will recover.

Moret Cabinet Resigns.

Madrid, June 8.—Premier Moret yesterday presented to the King the resignation of the entire Cabinet.

Tongue Twisters.

A good merrymaking game is trying to repeat difficult sentences over and over again. One of the simplest and best of these is "mixed biscuits." Another is "gig whip," and even worse than that is "six thick thistle sticks." Peter Piper fades into insignificance when compared with such jaw breakers. Having mastered them, attempt "She stood at the door welcoming him in" and proceed to the direction which the writer has been obliged to give, "Stop at the shop at the top of Sloane street." Should any member of the company feel sure of the prize thus far, an antidote to conceit is: "There was an old woman, and she was a thistle sifter. She had a sieve of sifted thistles and a sieve of unsifted thistles, and she was a thistle sifter."

Conundrums.

Why is it that every man's pants are too short? Because his legs stick out two feet.

Why is it dangerous to go in the woods in spring? Because the bulrush is out, the cowslips around, the grasses have blades, the flowers have pistils and the little twigs are shooting.

Always Happy.

I do not sorrow when there's snow
Or rain or fog or sleet.
There are more toys at home, you know,
Than out there in the street.

So whether we have bright sunshine
Or clouds all through the day
I never sorrow nor repine,
But play and play and play.
—John Kendrick Bangs in St. Nicholas.

McINTOSH BROS.

APPOINTMENTS MADE.

Premier Whitney Announces Names of New Railway and Municipal Board and of New Power Commission.

Toronto June 8.—Premier Whitney announced the names of the new railway and municipal board and the New Ontario power commission after the Cabinet meeting yesterday afternoon, as follows:

James Leitch, K.C., Cornwall (chairman).

Andrew Ingram, M.P., East Elgin.

H. M. Kittson, Hamilton.

Salaries of Board.

The salary of the chairman of the board will be $6,000; that of the other two members, $4,000. The secretary, whose appointment was also made by the Cabinet yesterday, is Harry T. Small, barrister, of Carleton Place, formerly of Toronto. His salary is fixed at $2,000

It is required of the members of the board that they hold no stock in railway corporations, and their whole time must be given to the duties of the position.

Bye-Election In East Elgin.

The appointment of Mr. Ingram means his resignation from the House of Commons, and a new election for that constituency. Mr. Ingram represented West Elgin in the Ontario Legislature from 1886 to 1890, and was elected to the House of Commons at the general election of 1891, being re-elected at each succeeding election. He is of Irish descent, and was born at Strabane, Wentworth County, April 23, 1851.

Power Commission.

The new power commission is appointed under the act passed at the last session of the Legislature, "to provide for the transmission of electrical power to municipalities." The act provided that two members of the executive council may be appointed, but these members will receive no salary. The salary of the third commissioner has not been fixed, but the Premier states that it will not exceed his present salary as a member of the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario.

Hon. Adam Back is the chairman, and the other members are Hon. J. S. Hendrie and Cecil B. Smith, Mr. Beck and Mr. Smith are members of the present power commission, which was appointed to report on available power sites in the province. Two reports have been submitted to the Government, and the commission will continue to exist until the whole province has been covered.

ROJY INDICTED.

Crushing Arraignment of the Cowardice of Russian Officers.

St. Petersburg, June 8.—The naval court of enquiry has presented an indictment again Vice-Admiral Rojestvensky, who commanded the Russian fleet at the battle of the Sea of Japan, and the officers of the torpedo boat destroyer Bedovi for surendering to the enemy after the battle.

The indictment is a crushing arraignment of the demoralization and cowardice of the officers, contrasting their conduct with that of the officers of the torpedo boat Grozny, which, in practically the same position as the Bedovi, engaged and sank a Japanese torpedo boat. The trial of the indicted officers has been fixed for July 4. The penalty is death.

Many Happy Returns.

St. Petersburg, June 8.—Yesterday was the Empress' birthday, and it was observed as a general holiday. The Lower House of Parliament, without specifically mentioning the reason, honored the occasion by adjourning until to-day.

Governor Moves to Oust Jerome.

New York, June 8.—Removal of Wm. Travers Jerome from the office of district attorney of New York County is demanded of Governor Higgins in a complaint which has been filed at the executive chamber by Wm. M. Amory of New York. Frank E. Perley, secretary of the Governor, admitted last night that such a complaint had been filed, but he would say nothing as to the nature of the charges made against Jerome.

The White Slave Traffic.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., June 8.—It is said by members of the Good Government League of the Michigan Soo that a wholesale traffic in young girls for immoral purposes exists there. It is alleged that there are 15 places in the city engaged in the "white slave" trade, and that girls are secured in Canada and brought here in large numbers every year.

Incendiary Commits Suicide.

Cannington, June 8.—John Purvis, a farmer, who lives near here, set his barns on fire Wednesday night and then took strychnine. Coroner Bingham's inquest found that Purvis came to his death by his own hands, on the evidence of the local druggist to the effect that Purvis had bought poison for rats. Purvis had been acting strangely for some time.

Sectionman Killed.

Grimsby, June 8.—Samuel Vaughan, a sectionman of the G. T. R., was struck and instantly killed by an express train near Grimsby yesterday morning. He was about 44 years of age and leaves a wife and four children.

Tucker Must Die.

Boston, June 8.—Charles Louis Tucker of Auburndale, convicted of the murder of Mabel Page at Weston in 1904, will be electrocuted in the state prison at Charlestown during the week beginning June 10.

THE ARCTIC SUPPLIES

Accounts Sometimes Wrong, But Firms Didn't Get Worsted.

Another Day's Probing by the Arctic Investigating Committee—A Witness Who Knew the Water He Was Swimming In—Facts About Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobacco Brought Out—Bennett Satisfied With Gregory.

Ottawa, June 8.—Yesterday morning J. V. Gregory, agent of the Marine Department at Quebec, was called before the Arctic investigating committee. He said he had been in the service of the Government for forty-two years and much of his work had been in connection with the certifying of prices and generally keeping track of them. His custom had been to obtain prices from friends of the administration.

"From friends of the administration?" asked Mr. Carvell, in surprise.

"Yes," the witness replied. "If they are not friends of the administration we do not buy from them."

"There has been no change by this Government from the practice followed by previous Governments?"

"No; nobody ever dared to make any change."

He had once bought from a Liberal when the Conservatives were in power and soon heard about it."

"You have had a good training," remarked Mr. Carvell.

Knew His Swimming Water.

"I have had a good training under Sir Hector Langevin. I could not have kept my situation for over 40 years if I had not known how to swim."

There were twelve or thirteen firms at Quebec they could buy from. They divided up purchases as well as they could, and they tried to satisfy everybody, but generally ended by satisfying nobody. Mr. Gregory said that he got a good ten cent cigar for 6 1-2 cents, and a good five cent cigar for 3 1-2 cents.

Witness said the deck was piled "well up" with coal, barrels of meat and gasolene.

He was authorized to buy the cigars, and did the best he could for the money.

Mr. Northrup: "Whether or not do you consider that five thousand cigars were too many for forty men for one year?"

Mr. Gregory: "That is a matter for the department, and I have nothing whatever to do with it."

Pressed, however, to give an answer, he said that it was "a mighty small consumption." So, too, was the item of 5,000 cigarettes.

He thought 1,800 pounds of tobacco one year reasonable.

Discrepancy Discovered.

The supply of bovril was next considered. Mr. Northrup discovered a discrepancy of $45 in the accounts originally rendered and the amount paid. There had been two lots bought, but witness had only to do with the smaller one. He could not account for the discrepancy, but it might have occurred through the freight being paid at both ends. The total amount paid for bovril was $19,780.

Reverting again to the supply of tobacco, Mr. Brodeur pointed out that there was an item for $50 for cigarettes, which was over and above the amount authorized by the department. Mr. Gregory said that probably Major Moodie had bought these for himself. But he, himself, when he had purchased the cigars and cigarettes, had not been tied down to a particular amount. His orders were to buy eight or ten thousand cigars and the Minister had also told him to purchase some delicacies that had been omitted.

Mistakes in Accounts.

The information sought dealt with accounts and that the firms had not been very careful about their additions in making up their accounts. It was curious that they erred on the right side for themselves. One account rendered for $1,677 was $410 too much, while another for $966 was $76 too much and so on.

Mr. Gregory said he and his clerks checked the accounts. Very often invoices were sent back to be made up again. Mr. Bennett during his examination of these accounts for which Mr. Gregory was responsible said that no one could take exception to the manner in which his duties had been carried out. Mr. Gregory said he was relieved of his duties of scrutineer of goods for the Arctic on July 23. He had at that time an immense lot of work to do.

The delicacies included 500 Havana cigars and 5,000 cigarettes, which were ordered for Major Moodie because he did not consider the other good enough and the Minister had told him to be kind to the men.

Filled Like An Egg.

At the afternoon session Capt. Bernier told the chairman that the Arctic was "filled like an egg."

He described the goods were packed away. His own cabin was full and he had to sleep in the chart room. The second mate's cabin, the messroom and the passage way between the captain's and first mate's cabin were all crowded with goods.

In order to take on the mounted police supplies, it was necessary to discharge 30 tons of coal. He estimated that there were 750 tons of supplies on board, including the deck load. It was estimated that the hold of the vessel would accommodate 727 tons dead weight.

Capt. Bernier described the life on board. He said that playing cards and checker boards were necessary as it was highly important to keep the minds of the men occupied during the long nights. The men were allowed to play cards whenever they liked, but on Sundays two religious services were held—Roman Catholic and Protestant. He conducted the former and Major Moodie the latter.

Invited to Resign.

London, June 8.—Sir Edward Clarke, former Solicitor-General, and one of the Conservative members of Parliament for the City of London, yesterday resigned his seat as the result of the action of the City of London Conservative Association, May 23, in inviting him to resign as the result of his attitude on the tariff reform movement.

WATER RISES 18 FEET

Portions of Lower Part of Johnstown, Pa., Under Water.

Flood Follows Cloudburst In the District, and Flood is Higher Than at Any Time Since the Disaster of 1889—Considerable Damage to Property Is Reported, But Only One Fatality—Butler, Pa., Also Inundated.

Johnstown, Pa., June 8.—A cloudburst at Hooversville, eighteen miles north of here, early yesterday, caused Stony Creek to rise suddenly here and portions of the lower part of the city are under water.

From 6.30 o'clock until noon the water rose 18 feet. It is up to the first floor in many houses. The chief of police has ordered the inmates of a large tenement containing twenty families to vacate the premises for fear the building will be wrecked by the flood.

Island Park, a pleasure resort two miles from the city, has been practically washed out of existence, but no lives were lost.

Unknown Woman Killed.

The only fatality resulting from the flood, so far reported, is the killing of an unknown woman, who was struck by a train while standing on the famous old stone bridge here watching the high water.

The crest of the flood was reached at noon, and reports from towns above say that the waters are subsiding rapidly.

The damage along Stony Creek is estimated at $25,000.

At Hooversville an unoccupied frame schoolhouse and a county bridge were washed away.

Yesterday's flood is said to have been the highest since the disaster of May 31, 1889.

Butler, Pa., June 8.—Continuous thunderstorms and heavy rains Wednesday night has resulted in the greatest flood in this section in half a century. Between Boydstown and North Hope the downpour resembled a cloudburst. Five feet of water is pouring over the sluiceway of the Boydstown dam, and the water at noon was within a few inches of the top of the dam. Kearns' Meadow, north of Butler, is covered with 9 feet of water. The Kearns' bridge is entirely submerged, and the water has stopped the machinery in the pumping station of the Butler Water Co. Work has also been suspended in the Davis Lead Works, Hamilton Bottle Works, part of the Standard Steel Works, and a number of smaller factories.

Thousands of dollars' worth of lumber have been washed away from the Purvis, Cornelius, and Wm. Wyck lumber yards, and farmers in the creek bottoms have suffered great damage to crops. Five feet of water surrounds houses in the lower portions of Butler, and scores of families were taken from their dwellings.

Every railroad entering the city is disabled by the water, and no mail trains reached Butler yesterday. Long stretches of track are reported to have been washed out.

80 Injured In Kansas Tornado.

Hillsboro, Kans., June 8.—A tornado struck Goesset, a German Mennonite settlement, 15 miles southwest of here, yesterday, destroying the largest store in the town and several residences. Goesset was practically destroyed. About 80 persons were injured. The tornado laid waste a strip of 200 yards wide. Several stores and 12 residences were demolished and every house in the town was damaged.

SIGNIFICANT PROTEST.

12,000 Lancashiremen, In 33 Special Trains, Go to London to Object to the Educational Bill.

London, June 9.—Thirty-three special trains brought to London yesterday morning 12,000 Lancashire churchmen to protest against the education bill. The protestors proceeded to Regent's Park, where they massed and accompanied by bands of music, and carrying banners, marched through the principal thoroughfares to Albert Hall. The procession was headed by the Bishops of London and Manchester, and included many clergymen.

The chief resolution submitted to the meeting recorded an emphatic protest against the bill on the ground that it is destructive of all forms of religious instruction in the elementary schools, and contained the assertion that the only true safeguard of religious education in the schools is a continuation of the denominational schools.

The visitors for the most part were factory employes, forming a typically Lancashire crowd, but all classes were represented, and they all came at their own expense. Consequently the protest was more significant than most of such demonstrations.

ALLEN DIED FROM POISON.

Proceedings Against Man and Woman Dropped, Murder Not Proved.

Brockville, June 9.—"That the said Henry Allen came to his death at Lansdowne, Dec. 13, 1905, through poison, but whether as food or administered by parties with malice aforethought, we are unable to determine, but from evidence presented to us thus far believing it points more strongly to the latter."

The above verdict was rendered by the coroner's jury empanelled at Lansdowne to hear the evidence relating to the death of Allen, who was a farmer in that locality.

A phase of the case was thought to implicate Mrs. Allen, the testimony of William O'Connor, a farm hand, employed by Allen, forming the basis of this suspicion on account of her alleged relations with him before and after her husband's death.

O'Connor went so far as to swear that Mrs. Allen asked him to marry her if she disposed of Allen.

The question of the purchase of arsenic by O'Connor resulted in him being taken into custody with Mrs. Allen a month ago, when the inquest was first opened and adjourned to get an analysis of the contents of Allen's stomach. Traces of arsenic were found, but Prof. Ellis thought that as the embalming fluid contained much of that poison he could not say how the arsenic had been used.

The charges against Mrs. Allen and O'Connor, which still rest in the justice of the peace's court will now be dropped on the advice of the Crown Attorney unless something new turns up, which is not in sight at present.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

Mr. Preston Should Fly.

"He Is So Good, You Know. He Has Wings," Says Alf. Jury.

Some Remarks in the Agriculture Committee Were Personal—Dan Derbyshire and Mr. Wright Exchange Compliments at Ottawa Mr. Jury in Sarcastic Vein—Preston Owned Canadian Labor Bureau, Says Witness.

Ottawa, June 9.—The meeting of the Parliamentary Committee on Agriculture yesterday morning witnessed some lively alterations between members and scraps of spicy evidence from the witness, Mr. Alfred Jury.

At the opening of the committee Mr. Jury explained that he was in error at a former examination when he said that he had asked Mr. MacDonald of Pictou to put certain questions to him and that the member declined.

Mr. Monk asked him to explain what he meant by saying he had applied for shares in the North Atlantic Trading Co., and Mr. Jury replied by reading a letter he sent to Mr. Preston, asking, sarcastically, for some shares. It was obviously not a sincere application. Mr. Monk asked the reason of the disagreeable relationship between Mr. Jury and Mr. Preston.

"I object to that question," interposed Mr. Carvell.

"Are you solicitor for the defence?" asked Dr. Sproule.

"I am a member of the committee," replied Mr. Carvell, somewhat warmly.

"You're too cross," said Mr. Derbyshire.

Some Vanity In It.

Mr. Jury went on to say that he learned from the agents that Mr. Preston would not advertise their official positions, while he always advertised his own.

"Some vanity in it?" suggested a member.

"Yes," said Mr. Jury, "some vanity on both sides."

Mr. Wright of Muskoka made a little speech to the effect that the committee should not insist on ascertaining how the witness knew things. As long as he knew them it was all right.

"Very good," commented Mr. Derbyshire on these remarks.

"Oh, we don't care for that elephantine wit," retorted Mr. Wright. "I think this gentleman's physical development surpasses his mental development."

"You've got a swelled hat this morning," answered Mr. Derbyshire, not disconcerted, "but you did very well, better than I thought."

Not Genuine Evidence.

Mr. Monk asked if Mr. Jury could tell why Mr. Preston took so much interest in Leopold's labor bureau.

Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Ethier, and Mr. Carvell all contended that this answer could not be genuine evidence. Mr. Jury's opinion as to a man he disliked should not be taken.

Mr. Jury read a letter which he thought was a threat by Mr. Preston that he would establish more labor bureaus.

Mr. Carvell would not let the witness pass judgment of this kind.

"Are you and Mr. Preston enemies?" asked Mr. Blain.

"Not very friendly," said the witness.

"Don't call me Preston," added the witness a moment later, when he was inadvertently given that name by Mr. Carvell.

Mr. Jury took issued with Mr. Preston's statement that Louis Leopold was owner of the Canadian Labor Bureau in London. Mr. Jury claimed to have seen Leopold booking passengers behind the backs of the proper owners of this bureau.

Preston's Property.

"Who does own the bureau?" asked Mr. Blain.

"Mr. W. T. R. Preston or Preston & Co.," answered the witness.

Mr. Jury read a letter from Rev. Leonard Dewsan, in which it was stated that Mr. Preston recommended him to go to Leopold for his ticket.

"Preston is gone to Canada to get your scalp," was the advice Jury said a friend gave him, with regard to his traveling expenses.

Mr. Jury said Mr. Preston did not at once report him after he first learned of his plan of charging first-class fare and traveling third-class.

"I always travel first-class now," said Mr. Jury, "and charge it up. The country does not make anything out of it. They only do me out of my treating money—that's all."

Preston Should Fly.

He did not know how Mr. Preston traveled, "but I think he should fly," said the witness, "he is so good, you know. He has wings."

Mr. Jury was of opinion that immigration propaganda ought to be carried on just as well by booking agents as by the North Atlantic Trading Co.

Mr. Jury was discharged as a witness.

A motion of Mr. Monk's, to recommend the adoption of means to protect Canadian labor from the operations of the Labor Bureau in London was defeated. An amendment carried reporting the evidence at once to the House as it has been taken.

HIS LIFE ENDANGERED.

Sir Henri Joly Suffered Stroke of Apoplexy in British Columbia.

Victoria, B.C., June 9.—The statement is made by intimate friends of Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere, now on his way to Quebec, his term as lieutenant-governor of British Columbia being completed, that the reason for the peremptory cancellation of all ceremonies in the nature of a public farewell was a dangerous stroke of apoplexy which his honor suffered, and which rendered any excitement dangerous in the extreme.

Sir Halliday Macartney Dead.

London, June 9.—Sir Halliday Macartney, counsellor and chief counsel to the Chinese legation since 1885, died suddenly yesterday at his residence in Kentbank, Scotland. Sir Halliday retired in December last and went back to Galloway, to his native Scotland, in which he has not lived since 1858—when he took his M.D. degree at Edinburgh University. He was 73 years of age. For the past 45 years no student in England has thought seriously upon China without identifying his subject with the name of Halliday Macartney.

Church Union.

London, June 9.—At the Presbyterian General Assembly yesterday the Anglican deputation, headed by His Lordship the Bishop of Huron, visited the assembly to assure hearty support in the church union movement.

U. S. Papers are Laughing at the Arctic Incident.

If the evidence before the special committee which is taking testimony in regard to the Arctic has done nothing else, it has certainly helped to add to the gaiety of nations. The whole thing is a tale which one would expect to flow from the pen of that prince of humorists, W. S. Gilbert. Set to music by Sullivan it would have rivailed any of the comic opera successes of the famous collaborateurs. It was testified that the steamer Arctic was fitted out on the same scale as a man-of-war in the British service. And this, as a contemporary points out, sounds likely. The cost of the food, the booze, tobacco, and other supplies is suggestive more of a line of battleship than of a cranky little 700-tonner. It came to $220,626 altogether, of which $80,000 was for the commissariat, the list showing a small modicum of bread to an infinite deal of sack, the latter comprising $320 worth of champagne, 108 gallons of rum, 110 gallons of whiskey, five cases of brandy, and a quantity of fine old crusted port of the vintage of 1878.

Some confusion seems to have arisen as to the destination of the ship and the work to be done. She was ordained originally for the Arctic regions, at the urgent request of Capt. Bernier, who wished to search for the North Pole. It was with this idea that the ship was bought in Germany, and partly rebuilt in Quebec. She was provisioned for a three years' cruise among ice. But once started, the plan got changed somehow. Instead of looking for the Pole, she made for Hudson Bay, Canada's inland sea, the salt water equivalent of Lake Superior.

It might have been thought that the British being in possession of this important piece of sea water with its adjacent coasts, for a couple of centuries, very little question remained on the point of jurisdiction. But we are now told that the Arctic did not wander there aimlessly. The expedition to the Polar regions was not cancelled and diverted without just cause. A deep scheme lay at the back of it. It was to "assert British authority" and protect the whales. How this was accomplished is not divulged, yet two places were baptized in honor of Canadian statesmen "Prefontaine Harbor" and "Laurier Point" were definitely marked on the map, whereupon the Arctic preceeded in search of the steamer Neptune, which was coming with "supplies."

The story of this quest, of the Arctic's adventures and anxieties for the replenishment of the larder, the hardships among ice pans, the attempts of those on board to "bear up" with concerts, dances, football, etc., are all recounted in the official papers published by the Interior Department. How the propeller became unshipped, and the propeller "brought from Germany" would not fit in the slot, forms a painful, almost tragic incident of the famous voyage. But all the clouds passed over when the supplies brought by the Neptune were safely transferred, and the return trip was ordered after a year's arduous experience.

Some American journals have become infected with the fun of these comic opera proceedings. The Cleveland Leader says: "That voyage might be called a corker were it not that apparently it was devoted, somewhat to uncorking. In contemplating its probabilities the yachting efforts of the most frisky American millionaires pale into unsignificance. The Eskimos, too, must have had the time of their lives—there was more on board than the crew could get away with. Champagne, rich old port and cigarettes are calculated to create glad surprise in those accustomed only to raw fish and walrus blubber au naturel. And perhaps the flypaper was introduced to them as a new article of breakfast food. As for the corn cure, its purchase was justified by the presence of so much tanglefoot."

An amusing part of the examination now going on at Ottawa is the air of solemnity with which the official world, comprising captains and ex-captains, regards the good things provided, as being altogether the proper thing under the circumstances, and not at all in excess of requirements. But it is their role to assume a bland demeanor, and try to put a serious face on the matter.

What's the good of keeping from him
Any good things you may see,
That will lift his load of labor
Like Rocky Mountain Tea.
—D. M. Waters.

Prohibition in Maine.

That the London Free Press is not much enamored of prohibition may be gathered from a perusal of the following extract from its editorial columns.

> "Any friend of the temperance cause who thinks that prohibition prohibits in Portland, in the State of Maine, will be surprised to learn that Mr. Dooley, the newly-elected liquor agent of that city, has just appointed able assistants in the business of continuing the traffic. The Press newspaper of that city states that Major Dooley has been busy getting things into shape to receive the supplies of liquors, and that an inventory of the stock in the public 'rum room' will be laid before the aldermen at their next meeting.
>
> "Of course this refers to the official rum depot which is run under civic auspices. Mr. Dooley takes no cognizance of the numerous 'rum rooms' which are run for private profit, which pay no license, yet do an enormous business, nor of the express packages arriving from New York and Boston daily consigned to 'men and boys of sixteen,' as lately spoken of by citizens of good repute who see in this method of obtaining supplies how the Maine law is set aside and thwarted; nor of the number of young men's clubs in the leading port of Maine, where drinking and worse goes on without restraint.
>
> "Once in a great while, when these practices become flagrantly overbody, there is an attempt to 'clean up' and suppress, by enforcing the law, but, what has to be done in this way, to be effective, is so brutally tyrannical that people think they are under Russian rule rather than citizens of a great and free republic. The ransacking of private dwellings savors so much of overbearing despotism that more men and women are offended and disgusted with the 'Maine Law' than won to its support.
>
> "If the law were to be strictly enforced on such lines it would be kicked out without a bit of ceremony, just as one would eject a ruffianly intruder upon his household. It is only by non-enforcement, by turning a blind eye to the 'blind pig,' by winking at the countless liquor and card-playing clubs, and by opening a 'rum room' on civic account, that the law is allowed to remain in the Maine statute book.
>
> "Such a system is not wanted in Ontario. It is too odious and contemptible for an honorable electorate and should be scorned by the women of our land."

"Good morning," said a local minister, to the Topics man this morning. "I see you believe in short sermons."

The scribe bashfully admitted that he did.

"I'll preach you one now," said the sky pilot.

Knowing that his visitor had a reputation for preaching short, pithy sermons, the newspaper man composed himself to listen.

"We will take as our text," said the reverend gentleman, "the scriptural words, "and Dives was in torment." Now we will divide our sermon into four heads.

"1st—It was hot where Dives was.

The Laurier Government and its journalistic supporters may think they are justified in upholding Preston in his refusal to make known the names of men who received hundreds of thousands of dollars of Canada's money, but in Great Britain people are evidently drawing from the incident peculiar conclusions as to the moral fibre of the Dominion's administrators. Before the Government had finally committed themselves to a policy of secrecy the London Standard, on May 25, published a long article on the subject. The article concludes as follows.

> "It seems evident from the facts that the whole affair has been authoritatively made known to the Canadian Government, Anglo-Canadians find it difficult to understand why, knowing the facts, the Canadian Government does not make a full disclosure, especially showing what are the exact contents of the letters and other documents; and improper relations between the company and the Canadian Government or any Government official. The matter has gone so far that Canada's good name is at stake. Canadian ministers, it is felt, owe it to themselves, and to all friends of Canada here and in the Dominion to set at rest the unpleasant and, one may hope, quite extravagant, suppositions which investigation has so far created."

A MERITED REBUKE.

(Brockville Times.)

To-day is the fifteenth anniversary of the death of Sir John A. Macdonald. As the day recedes farther and farther into the misty past, Canadians of all shades of opinion more readily recollect his virtues than his failings—Hamilton Times (Grit.)

If it were the fifteen hundredth anniversary of Sir John's death it would not be far enough in the misty past for Grit organs of the Hamilton Times stamp to forget to throw a little mud at the memory of the great Canadian statesman, whose chief failing in their narrow minds is that he kept them in their proper place in Opposition.

Pale? Thin? How is it with the children these days? Have they plenty of grit, courage, strength? Or are they thin, pale, delicate? This reminds you of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The County Council.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Denyes, chairman of the House of Refuge Committee, reported as follows:

That the Hendersons had been paid in full and the deed registered as county property.

That full payment was made to N. Cousins for giving up his lease, as previously arranged.

That Mr. Walter Alford, the contractor, has signed a contract to have the building completed by the 1st of August, 1907, the same to be built according to plans and specifications prepared by the architect, Mr. J. M. Miller, which were satisfactory to the committee.

That Mr. Alford has made the excavations, put in the drainage, and the mason work is in progress.

Your committee sold to Mr. Alford the old house on the property for $200.

Your committee ordered that the ground be prepared and an orchard planted, and 245 apple trees of various kinds have been planted by Mr. Reid, he guaranteeing them true to name, planting them and replacing all that die the first year for 25c each.

Your committee also gave the chairman orders to get men and take down the old barn and remove stone and timber, do some fencing, get certain fields ploughed and cultivated and some underdraining done. Considerable work has been done at a cost of $186.06 for labor.

Mr. Denyes said there had been some complaint because the lowest tender was not accepted. The tender accepted was the second lowest tender, and the contractor, Mr. Walter Alford, was well known as a reliable man. The architect, Mr. Miller, said the Council had made a wise choice in accepting Mr. Alford's contract. The committee, after careful consideration, found it was cheaper to give the tender to one person than to divide the work. The orchard had been systematically laid out with various varieties of apple trees, and the cost was $61.25. Four thousand tile will be used for under drainage, which was necessary.

Mr. Kirk wanted to know the difference in the figures of the lowest tenderer and those of Mr. Alford.

Mr. Denyes said that there was a tender of $28,000 for the entire structure and Mr. Alford's tender was $31,000 for the same. The lowest tenderer was a stranger, and there was no way of ascertaining what his securities were, and it was since learned that in all probability he would not have accepted the contract. The committee, taking everything into consideration, did what they considered the best in the interests of the county.

Mr. Kirk was satisfied with the explanation, and said the committee, no doubt, did the best for the county's interest.

Messrs. Rogers, Dryden and Bonter spoke upon the matter and considered the committee had done the best they could in this matter. The county's interests had been well guarded.

On motion the report of the committee was received and adopted.

Mr. Macfarlane introduced a by-law re Hastings Telephone Committee, which was read a first time and referred to the by-law committee.

Mr. J. Whitton, Reeve of Rawdon, addressed the Council, asking for a special grant of $100 towards cutting down a very high hill in the 8th concession of the township. The Township Council would supplement the grant by $100.

On motion the matter was referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Nicholson moved, seconded by Mr. Bonter, that the reports of the School Inspectors be printed in pamphlet form.—Referred to Ways and Means Committee.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on Ways and Means, Mr. Morton in the chair.

Mr. Rogers moved, seconded by Mr. Bonter, that a grant of $100 be made to Stirling village towards repairing the county road through the village, on condition that the village Council grant a similar sum.

Mr. Macfarlane, whilst not objecting to the grant, drew the attention of the Council to the fact that the appropriation for special grants was about exhausted. If they gave any more special grants there would, no doubt, be a deficit.

Mr. Rogers thought the request was reasonable, from the fact that the Village Council would give a similar grant and place the road in good condition.

Mr. Denyes said there was an inducement to give this grant from the fact that the road to be improved was a county road and the Village Council would give a similar grant.

The motion of Mr. Rogers prevailed.

Mr. Morton moved, seconded by Mr. Kirk, that a special grant of $150 be made towards repairing a road leading from Moira to West Huntingdon, in Huntingdon township.

Mr. Kirk spoke in support of the motion. Huntingdon township had never before asked for a special grant on its roads, and this grant should not be opposed.

Mr. Rogers said the road in question should be a county road, but at present it was not. Not only the residents of Huntingdon, but many from Hungerford and other places, would be benefited by having this road placed in a proper state of repair.

Mr. Morton said it was in the interests of the whole county that the road in question should be placed in a proper state of repair, and two of the hills on the road cut down.

A motion to grant $150 to the road in question prevailed.

Mr. Macfarlane moved, seconded by Mr. Farley, that no further special grants on roads be made.

Mr. Best was opposed to the motion, as there were two small grants which should be, and, in his opinion, must be, made to two northern municipalities. The grants in question were only $50 each, and in one instance $50 would be supplemented by the Haliburton Township Council.

Mr. Vandervoort spoke in support of a special grant being made towards building a bridge in the Township of Sidney. This bridge is near Frankford, and leads from an island to the main land.

The motion made by Mr. Macfarlane was defeated.

Moved by Mr. Nicholson, seconded by Mr. Vandervoort, that a grant of $100 be made towards building a bridge over the River Trent to Anderson's Island.

Mr. Dryden was of the opinion that the Township of Sidney, which was a wealthy township, should build the bridge in question.

Upon a vote being taken the motion prevailed.

It was decided to print the School Inspectors' reports in pamphlet form.

Moved by Mr. Cornell, seconded by Mr. Tumelty, that $50 be granted to repair a road in Elzevir township, leading from Mr. J. Clark's to Carroll's Corners.

The motion prevailed.

The following account was passed:

J. W. London ....$ 49.55

Moved by Mr. Cornell, seconded by Mr. Tumelty, that a grant of $50 be made on the road leading from Cooper's to Bannockburn, in Elzevir township.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Best moved, seconded by the Warden, that a grant of $50 be made for repair of road on the boundary between Hastings county and Haliburton township.

A petition was presented asking that $50 be granted to repair a road in the township of Monteagle.

A vote of $25 was granted on the road in question.

A motion prevailed that no amount be paid to the County Judges for postage.

Mr. Rogers moved, seconded by Mr. Tumelty, that a special grant of $100 be given towards the cutting down of Pollock's hill, in Rawdon township, on condition that the Township Council expend a similar amount.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Rogers said that in the township of Wollaston there was an outbreak of smallpox, the cost to the township was over $1,000, and the township, being a poor one, asked the County Council to assist in paying the bills. Every precaution was taken to stop the spread of the disease throughout the county. He moved that a grant of $300 be made.

Mr. Kirk objected to the payment of this amount. Huntingdon and Hungerford had expended a large sum of money on account of smallpox and these townships did not ask for assistance from the county.

Mr. Nicholson would support a motion to give $150 to the township.

Mr. Rogers amended his motion, by making the grant $200.

Mr. Cornell seconded the motion.

Mr. Denyes said that, in several townships in the county, there had been outbreaks of smallpox, and these townships had not asked for any assistance, but he would, in this case, be in favor of giving some assistance.

Mr. Kirk moved, seconded by Mr. Denyes, that a grant of $150 be made.

Upon a vote being taken it was a tie, and the chairman voted in favor of the $200 grant.

JUNE IS LUCKY MONTH TO WED

FRIDAY IS A BAD DAY, BUT WEDNESDAY IS THE BEST OF ALL — OTHER MATRIMONIAL SUPERSTITIONS.

Few girls are dauntless enough to risk being married on a Friday and also in the month of May, which is considered a very unlucky time, while June, September, October and December are deemed the luckiest months of the year, but even then she must avoid the thirteenth day, says an exchange.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday are the best days of the week to be married on, if assurance of happiness is desired, for

"Monday for wealth,
Tuesday for health,
Wednesday the best day of all,
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
Saturday no luck at all."

All brides-elect rejoice when the marriage day dawns brightly, remembering the old adage:

"Blest is the bride upon whom the sun doth shine."

And all are equally certain that
"To change the name and not the letter,
Is a change for the worse and not the better."

The day following the wedding belongs exclusively to the husband and fortunate for him if it is fair.

In earliest times among the Jews the fourth day of the week was considered unlucky for maidens to wed and the fifth for widows. The Romans considered the nones and ides of each month as unlucky.

The postponement of a wedding is even now regarded with such horror that many will be wedded on a sick-bed or in a house of mourning rather than change the date.

It is an overbold woman, indeed, who will let her vanity so far get the better of her as to don her bridal robes in their entirety before the hour set for the ceremony, as such an act presages death and dire misfortune. In fact, the bride's toilet has a great deal to do with her future happiness, and it is a wise girl who remembers all the superstitions pertaining to it.

She should always remember to put her right shoe on first, for to don the left first portends an unhappy married life.

White is the color usually chosen for bridal robes, signifying purity and innocence, but others may be chosen wisely, as the following rhyme asserts:

"Married in white,
You have chosen all right,
Married in grey,
You will go far away;
Married in black,
You will wish yourself back,
Married in red,
You'd better be dead,
Married in green,
Ashamed to be seen,
Married in blue,
You'll always be true,
Married in pearl,
You will live in a whirl,
Married in yellow,
Ashamed of the fellow,
Married in brown,
You'll live out of town,
Married in pink,
Your spirits will sink."

Then no bride must go to the altar without "something old and something new, something borrowed and something blue." Neither must she, after her toilet is complete, look at herself in a mirror. She must see that no bridal guest wears a costume entirely black, as that would bring her sorrow. On changing her gown she must thrown away every pin used in the bridal attire.

No girl who would be a happy bride must take a hand in the making of her wedding cake or the sewing of her bridal gown. To try on the wedding ring before the ceremony is unpropitious. Should the shaking hand of the groom drop this symbol of love in the act of putting it on the bride's finger the ceremony had better be stopped right there. To lose it is prophetic of evil, and many fancy to remove it after it is placed on the finger is unlucky.

The breaking of a wedding ring is surely prophetic of death of one of the married twain.

There is an explanation to this superstition.

"As the wedding rings wears,
So wear away life's cares."

—which is of the same theory that time will cure all ills.

The throwing of rice and old slippers (which should never be omitted) is descended from antiquity.

Cures Rheumatism

"I had an attack of Rheumatism—pains near my heart—which increased to such a degree that I became very anxious—I lost my appetite, and an intense itching or heating of the head made life miserable. I asked a druggist, was there nothing he could suggest that would help me, and he replied 'Why not try ABBEY'S SALT?'

I did so, and can now state positively, and without solicitation that the Rheumatism has disappeared—my appetite is grand—and the itching of my scalp has ceased.

I suggested to my aged Father and Mother that they should try ABBEY'S SALT for their Rheumatism,—and they tell me they have received immense benefit."

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can re-paper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

A variation on the usual cause given by employees for laying down their tools and walking out was that which brought on the strike of the laborers on the Long Island Railway. The men demanded longer hours. The reason for it was that the hours had been shortened from ten to nine, and, as the roads pay by the hour, it meant lighter pay envelopes. It was in reality a strike for more pay.

Canadian Freeman; According to the liquor law, habitual drunkards or the chaps who will not work but hang around hotels and saloons, will be severely dealt with in the future. The law provides that where papers are taken out prohibiting the sale of liquor to such persons and the said party is given liquor, the hotel-keeper or bar tender giving it to him is liable to a fine of $25. and besides the man habitually addicted to the use of liquor will also be punished. He cannot loiter around any hotel, nor in the bar-room, and if a friend gets liquor and gives it to him he is liable to the same punishment as the hotel-keeper who supplies it.

PERSEVERANCE NOT EVERYTHING.

(Detroit Times.)

If Washington had been persevering, he might have carried a surveyor's chain all his life.

If Lincoln had been persevering, he might have been splitting rails or working on a flat-boat yet.

If Garfield had been persevering, he might have ended his days as a mule-driver, an obscure college professor or a more obscure peacher.

And if Mr. Rockefeller had been persevering and had continued to clerk in an oil store, as he once desired to do, he might still be getting $11 a week, and giving 6 cents thereof each Sunday to his Sunday school.

PROVINCE MUST PAY.

Justice Teetzel Orders Government to Give Mrs. McDougall $11,230.03.

Toronto, June 9.—In the non-jury Assizes yesterday Justice Teetzel ordered that $11,230.03 be paid by the Ontario Government to Mrs. McDougall, widow of the late Alfred McDougall. The sum represents two insurance policies which were assigned to the Government on representations alleged to have been made by Hon. G. W. Ross, but which he denies, that McDougall would not be prosecuted for his refalcations. There was $16,681.07 realized on the policies, the Government paying $5,451.04 in premiums and lapses. The balance, $11,230.03, goes to Mrs. McDougall. The Government have $6,906.79 of this, and the balance is in court.

VICTIMS OF WHITE DAMP.

Eight Taken From Mine Dead, Two Being of Rescue Party.

Anaconda, Mont., June 9.—One of the most serious accidents in the history of coal mining in Montana has occurred in the mines of the Northern Pacific at Rocky Fork.

Eight men are dead, all victims of the white damp that filled the corridors of the mine after the fire, which started on Wednesday. Of the dead, two were members of one of the parties that entered the mine in the effort to reach the men known to be there.

Police Fire on Strikers.

Indiana, Pa., June 9.—The new mining town of Erindale on the Buffalo and Pittsburg Railway, five miles from here, was the scene yesterday morning of a conflict between state constabulary and striking coal miners, in which eight strikers were wounded, three of them fatally. During their procession a member of the strikers band fired his revolver at the troop. No one was struck, but the constabulary fired a volley from their carbines. When the smoke cleared eight strikers were lying on the ground and the others had fled.

Proof in Belleville.

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

The Fate of a Crown . .

...BY...
SCHUYLER STAUNTON

Copyright, 1905, by The Reilly & Britton Co.

Paola, struggling madly with his bonds, succeeded in bursting them asunder, and now staggered up to kneel beside Valcour. His eyes were staring and full of a horror that his own near approach to death had never for an instant evoked.

Taking one of the spy's slender hands in both his own he pressed it to his heart and said in trembling tones:

"Look up, sweetheart! Look up, I beg of you. It is Francisco—do you not know me? Are you dead, Valcour? Are you dead?"

A gentle hand pushed him aside, and Lesba knelt in his place. With deft fingers she bared Valcour's breast, tearing away the soft linen through which a crimson stain had already spread, and bending over a wound in the left shoulder to examine it closely. Standing beside the little group, I found myself regarding the actors in this remarkable drama with an interest almost equaling their own. The bared breast revealed nothing to me, however; for already I knew that Valcour was a woman.

Presently Lesba looked up into the little man's drawn face and smiled.

"Fear nothing, Captain Mazanovitch," said she softly; "the wound is not very dangerous, and—please God!—we will yet save your daughter's life."

His daughter! How much of the mystery that had puzzled me this simple word revealed!

Paola, still kneeling and covering his face with his hands, was sobbing like a child; Mazanovitch drew a long breath and allowed his lids to again droop slowly over his eyes; and then Lesba looked up and our eyes met.

"I am just in time, Robert," she murmured happily, and bent over Valcour to hide the flush that dyed her sweet face.

I started, and looked around me. In the gathering twilight the forms of the slaughtered Uruguayans lay revealed where they had fallen, for not a single member of Dom Pedro's band of mercenaries had escaped the vengeance of the patriots.

The head fell back, the light faded from his eyes and left them glazed and staring.

Those of our rescuers who survived were standing in a little group near by, leaning upon their long rifles, awaiting further commands.

Among them I recognized Pedro, and beckoning him to follow me I returned to the house and lifted a door from its hinges. Between us we bore it to the yard and very gently placed Valcour's slight form upon the improvised stretcher.

She moaned at the movement, slowly unclosing her eyes. It was Paola's face that bent over her and Paola that pressed her hand; so she smiled and closed her eyes again, like a tired child.

We carried her into the little chamber from whence Lesba had escaped, for in the outer room lay side by side the silent forms of the martyrs of the Republic.

Tenderly placing Valcour upon the couch, Pedro and I withdrew and closed the door behind us.

I had started to pass through the outer room into the yard when an exclamation from the station-master arrested me. Turning back I found that Pedro had knelt beside Dom Miguel and with broken sobs was pressing the master's hand passionately to his lips. My own heart was heavy with sorrow as I leaned over the outstretched form of our beloved chief for a last look into his still face.

Even as I did so my pulse gave a bound of joy. The heavy eyelids trembled—ever so slightly—the chest expanded in a gentle sigh, and slowly—oh, so slowly!—the eyes of Dom Miguel unclosed and gazed upon us with their accustomed sweetness and intelligence.

"Master! Master!" cried Pedro, bending over with trembling eagerness, "it is done! It is done, my master! The Revolution is accomplished—Fonseca is supreme in Rio—the army is ours! The country is ours! God bless the Republic of Brazil!"

Painfully Dom Miguel reached out his arms to us, and Pedro and I each clasped a hand within our own.

"I am glad," he whispered, softly. "Glad and content. God bless the Republic of Brazil!"

The head fell back; the light faded from his eyes and left them glazed and staring; a tremor passed through his body, communicating its agony even to us who held his hands, as by an electric current.

Pedro still kneeled and sobbed, but I contented myself with pressing the hand and laying it gently upon Dom Miguel's breast.

Truly it was done, and well done. In Rio they were cheering the Republic, while here in this isolated cottage, surrounded by the only carnage the Revolution had involved, lay stilled forever that great heart which had given to its native land the birthright of Liberty.

* * * * * * *

Lesba had dressed Valcour's wound with surprising skill, and throughout the long, dreary night she bathed the girl's hot forehead and nursed her as tenderly as a sister might, while Paola sat silently by and watched her every movement.

In the early morning Pedro summoned us to breakfast, which he had himself prepared; and, as Valcour was sleeping, Lesba and Mazanovitch joined me at the table while Paola still kept ward in the wounded girl's chamber.

The patriots were digging a trench in which to inter the dead Uruguayans, and I stood in the doorway a moment and watched them, drinking in at the same time the cool morning air.

At breakfast Pedro told us more of the wonderful news; how the Revolution had succeeded in Rio with practically no bloodshed or resistance; how Fonseca had met the Emperor at the train on his arrival and escorted him, well guarded, to the port, where he was put on board a ship that sailed at once for Lisbon. Indeed, that was to be the last of Dom Pedro's rule, for the populace immediately proclaimed Fonseca dictator, and the patriots' dream of a Republic of Brazil had become an established fact.

Presently we passed into the outer room and looked upon the still form of Miguel de Pintra, the man to whose genius the new Republic owed its success—the great leader who had miserably perished on the very eve of his noble achievement.

The conspiracy was a conspiracy no longer; it had attained to the dignity of a masterly Revolution, and the Cause of Freedom had once more prevailed!

Taking Lesba's hand we passed the bodies of Bastro and Captain de Souza and gained the yard, walking slowly along the road that skirted the forest, while she told me how Valcour had assisted her to escape from the chamber, that she might summon the patriots to effect our rescue. She had wandered long in the forest, she explained, before Pedro met her and assisted her to gather the band that had saved us. Yet the brave girl's grief was intense that she had not arrived in time to rescue her guardian, Dom Miguel, whom she so dearly loved.

"Yet I think, Robert," said she, with tearful eyes, "that uncle would have died willingly had he known the Republic was assured."

"He did know it," said I. "For a moment, last evening, he recovered consciousness. It was but a moment, but long enough for Pedro to tell him the glorious news of victory. And he died content, Lesba, although I know how happy it would have made him to live to see the triumph of the new Republic. His compatriots would also have taken great pride in honoring Dom Miguel above all men for his faithful service."

She made no reply to this, and for a time we walked on in gloomy silence.

"Tell me, Lesba, have you long had knowledge of Valcour's real identity?"

"Francisco told me the truth months ago, and that he loved her," she replied. "But Valcour was sworn to the Emperor's service, and would not listen to my brother as long as she suspected him of being in league with the Republicans. So they schemed and struggled against one another for the supremacy, while each admired the other's talents, and doubtless longed for the warfare to cease."

"And how came this girl to be the Emperor's spy, masquerading under the guise of a man?" I inquired.

"She is the daughter of Captain Mazanovitch, who, when her mother died, took delight in instructing his child in all the arts known to the detective police. As she grew up she became of great service to her father, being often employed upon missions of extreme delicacy and even danger. Mazanovitch used to boast that she was a better detective than himself, and the Emperor became attached to the girl and made her his confidential body-guard, sending her at times upon important secret missions connected with the government. When Mazanovitch was won over to the Republican conspiracy his daughter, whose real name is Carlotta, refused to desert the Emperor, and from that time on treated her father as a traitor, and opposed her wit to his own on every occasion. The male attire she wore both for convenience and as a disguise; but I have learned to know Valcour well, and have found her exceedingly sweet and womanly, despite her professional calling."

It was all simple enough, once one had the clew; yet so extraordinary was the story that it aroused my wonder. In no other country than half-civilized Brazil, I reflected, could such a drama have been enacted.

When we returned to the house we passed the window of Valcour's room and paused to look through the open sash.

The girl was awake and apparently much better, for she smiled brightly into the face Paola bent over her, and showed no resentment when he stooped to kiss her lips.

CHAPTER XXV.

It was long ago, that day that brought Liberty to Brazil and glory to the name of Miguel de Pintra. Fate is big, but her puppets are small, and such atoms are easily swept aside and scattered by the mighty flood-tide of events for which we hold capricious Fate responsible.

Yet they leave records, these atoms. I remember how we came to Rio—Valcour, Lesba, Paola, and I—and how Paola was carried through the streets

FURNITURE.

What You Should Do to Keep It in Good Condition.

Furniture, to be preserved in good condition, should be polished once a week. If this care is given it, and with ordinary good usage, it will not need to go to the repair shop for many years.

To counteract the ill effects of steam heat, which cracks and warps all the lighter kinds of furniture, the wood should be rubbed regularly with a flannel dipped in equal parts of linseed oil and turpentine and afterward dried with a soft cloth.

Much of the bamboo furniture is improved by washing with cold water and soap. The wicker furniture of the unstained variety should be regularly scrubbed with the brush. And if kept clean in this way it will maintain its state of beauty and usefulness much longer.

The mahogany table with the ordinary stains can be cleaned with tepid water and soap on a soft cloth. After washing, the table should be thoroughly dried and then rubbed with a clean flannel and a little linseed oil or crude petroleum. Only a few drops of the oil should be used at a time, and they should be thoroughly rubbed in until the surface shines without a suspicion of greasiness.

If a piece of furniture has not been polished for a long time it will take several applications at intervals of a few days to make the wood glossy and smooth, but the labor is amply rewarded finally by the well cared for and highly polished finish it acquires.

Rosewood and black walnut should be treated in the same way as mahogany—that is, rubbed with linseed oil or crude petroleum. But the preliminary washing applies only to the mahogany.

Black oak, unless very frequently dusted and rubbed with oil, presents a dishearteningly grimy aspect.

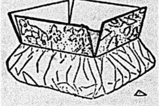
The oil in this case should be rubbed off, and not a particle allowed to remain, as it will simply act as a dust collector. When a wood is very highly varnished it should be washed with tea water—that is to say, water in which tea has been steeped for half an hour. This water will not impair the gloss as does ordinary soap and water.

If the linseed oil is not successful in creating a polish, a wineglass of olive oil, the same quantity of vinegar and two tablespoonfuls of alcohol, shaken together and thoroughly mixed, make a good varnish. This dressing is applied with a soft cloth, and the surface of the wood must be polished with a piece of flannel until thoroughly dry and glossy.—New York World.

HANDKERCHIEF CASE.

A Pretty One That Any Clever Girl Can Make at Home.

No girl need be without a pretty handkerchief case, as it is easy to make one. That shown in the illustration is of white and blue figured silk with linings of white silk. White silk ribbon three inches wide forms the puff or extension and is sewed on very full to give a puffy effect when the covers are closed. To make it, cut six pieces of thin cardboard 4 by 4 inches in size. The same number of pieces of silk are needed, three of the figured material and three of plain white. For the bottom take the cardboard and baste one square of figured silk to one piece and one of plain to the other, placing the two together and sewing over and over as in the old fashioned pin balls of our grandmothers' time.



HOMEMADE HANDKERCHIEF CASE.

The remaining four squares are cut in two, making four half covers, which lap two over the other two when case is completed. These are covered and put together in the same way as the bottom, being sure that the material is cut larger than the half squares of cardboard, so that when sewed together the material will be perfectly smooth. When all have been covered sew the bottom and covers to the ribbon sides, the ribbon for the covers being divided into fourths, as shown in the illustration.

Girls and Their Clothes.

One of the things that many mothers teach their daughters and seem to regard as one of the paramount virtues is that every garment must be put carefully away as soon as removed.

Often as a girl I spent the night with some friend after a ball and the dress and gloves were put carefully away in a clothes chest or wardrobe. What could be worse? No chance to air and always more or less damp with perspiration.

You will find your garments far fresher and more hygienic if you will spread them out, inside exposed, in an empty room for at least twelve hours before putting them in their places. Have a window open in the room if possible. The members of my family always hang their clothes over chairs before open windows at night all the year around. It is good for the clothing and better for the wearer. The mother who teaches her child to fold each garment carefully and pile one on another in a chair is teaching order, but disregarding health. Order may be heaven's first law, but it is equally true that "cleanliness is akin to godliness."—Exchange.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Grieg

EDVARD HAGERUP GRIEG, born 1843, is the most celebrated of Norwegian Composers. And he with MacDowell in America are the chief exponents of the Keltic spirit in modern music—the spirit that dwells on the mystery, weirdness, loneliness, ghostliness, sadness, and magic of hill and stream, forest and glen, mists and shadows, the night, the lover, the wanderer and deathless death.

Grieg received his first music lessons from his mother till he was 15 years old, when he was sent to Leipsic to study under the best masters in composition and pianoforte. He is celebrated as a conductor and pianist. As a composer he has written sonatas, concertos, choral and orchestral pieces, but his best and most popular works are his songs and pianoforte compositions. His music is as glowing and as brilliant as the Norwegian winter and summer; it is full of pathos and weirdness, and often dances with elfish movement.

Grieg's most popular songs are "I Love Thee," "Sunshine," "With a Violet," "With a Water Lily." He is best known by his two orchestral suites "Peer Gynt," originally written as a pianoforte duet. There are magical haunting harmonies in "Ase's Death," and an unearthly oriental quality in "Anitra's Dance." As arranged for the piano they require an instrument like which, with its greatest of modern improvements, THE ILLIMITABLE REPEATING ACTION, and its full, rich, resonant tone, renders perfectly every degree of musical shading, whispering like the leaves or resounding like the heaven's thunder. The Bell Art Piano is the Ideal of the Master Musican.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION — GOLDEN TEXT IS: "THOU ART THE CHRIST, THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD."

After his single miracle in the region near Tyre, Christ returned to Galilee, where at once he worked many miracles, partly because He was back in His own land, partly because of the restoration of His energies through rest, and partly because His ever-growing fame drew to Him ever-increasing throngs of suppliants. Detailed accounts are given of the healing of the deaf man, the feeding of the four thousand, and the healing of the blind man near Bethsaida (Mark 7: 31 to 8: 26.)

(Then our Lord once more turned away from the lake, and withdrew northward. The Pharisees had again been opposing Him, and indications were renewed that the end of His ministry was at hand. Moreover, the disciples had just proved marvellously slow to understand Him. Both reasons would lead Christ to desire a season of quiet converse with those that were so soon to carry on His work alone.

13. When Jesus came into the coast of Caesarea Philippi. He was in the villages, the country districts near the city, where He could teach His disciples with less interruption. This journey is the most northerly one Christ made, reaching to ancient Dan, where, from a cavern in a high limestone cliff, the Jordan springs in a wonderful gush of waters, "a full blown river." He asked His disciples. While they were on the journey to some village, and either after Christ had been praying alone or after He and His disciples alone had been enjoying a prayer meeting. Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? "The Son of Man" is a title which the Jews often gave to the expected Messiah, and in assuming it our Lord was always understood as making Messianic claims.

14. Some say . . . John the Baptist returned to life. Herod thought this. Some, Elias (the Greek form of Elijah). And others, Jeremias (Greek form of Jeremiah). He was expected "to bring back the ark, etc., which he had hid in a cave." Or one of the prophets. "Jeremiah is mentioned as a representative of the prophets, because in the Jewish canon the book of Jeremiah came first of the prophets, following the book of Kings." But the last class, most vague of all, did not define any particular prophet.

15. But——. This is the most solemn question that Jesus ever uttered. This was the most momentous instant of His entire ministry. Whom say ye that I am? "Ye" stands first in the Greek and is very emphatic Decision days are coming to be observed in the Sunday School and the Young People's Society, days on which the scholars and members are brought face to face with the question, "What is Christ to you?" No more important question could be asked.

16. And Simon Peter. His original name was Simon. Christ, when he was first brought to Him, had named him Peter. Answered. He was the spokesman of the twelve always, because, though John, for example, probably saw truth more keenly, yet with his keen, impulsive nature Peter saw truth more speedily. Then, too, he was probably the oldest of the group. Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Words worthy to be printed anywhere in gold. They are the sum of theology, the climax of human knowledge. "Christ" is the Greek, "Messiah," the Hebrew for "anointed."

17. Blessed art thou. It is an honor and a joy to perceive any truth, even truth about a beetle or a geometrical diagram; how much more blessed to perceive the highest of all truths, the religion of God and man! especially since Peter had got at the truth by breaking through barriers of Jewish prejudice and popular misjudgment, had been bold and original. Barjona. The son of John. "Bar," son, is Aramaic, the Syriac Hebrew then in use, the language Christ spoke. For flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee. It was a truth that God alone could disclose—a fact we need to remember, and if we are ever perplexed about Christ, take our doubts in prayer to God.

18. Thou art Peter. Jonah means "Dove." Christ had just called him Bar-Jonah, "the fluttering son of a dove." No longer that, but Peter, a rock. Perhaps Christ had a thought of the great cliff near by, more than a hundred feet high, from which the Jordan flowed. Upon this rock I will build my church. Never did even the lips of Jesus utter more memorable words. It was the laying of the corner stone of the Church of Christ. Yet upon these great words endless discussion has centered, because the Roman Catholics make them the basis of what some call their false and absurd claims of supremacy for the Pope. It is only the most fantastic interpretation, Protestant theologians say, that can see in these words any reference to a church which almost certainly St. Peter did not found, and in a city in which there is no indisputable proof that he ever set his foot. To be sure, this is a promise to Peter, and was gloriously fulfilled when Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost won three thousand souls; but it is a promise to Peter only as representative of the rest of the twelve, who were to enter the promise by making his confession of Christ their own. Church. This word appears here for the first time in the New Testament. It means "called out," and was originally an assembly of citizens; the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament into Greek uses it to signify the congregation of the Hebrew nation. The gates of hell, the land of the shadow of death. It is the place to which all who depart this life descend, without reference to their moral character. Shall not prevail against it, i.e., it shall live forever. What a wonderful prophecy to be uttered at such a time, when his mission seemed almost a failure, and he was about to announce his own death as a malefactor

19. And I will give unto thee. Peter still represents also the other apostles, for the history shows that nothing was conferred upon him which the others also did not receive. The keys of the kingdom of heaven. The ancient Oriental key usually bore not much resemblance to the artistic little metallic instrument which we mean by the word, and which Italian painters pictured in Peter's hands. It was a wooden apparatus, which often would heavily lade a man's arm. There was a crook at one end, so that it could be worn about the neck as a badge of office. The key was a common symbol. When scribes were admitted to their office they received, as its symbol, the "key of knowledge." And whatsoever thou shalt bind . . loose. In a sense common among the Jews, of forbidding or allowing. No other terms were in more constant use in Rabbinic canon law than those of binding and loosing. They represented the legislative and judicial powers of the Rabbinic office.

20. Then charged he his disciples. All the disciples are supposed to say amen to Peter's confession. That they should tell no man. (1) Because Christ wanted no disciples by hearsay or impulse, but those whose faith grew to conviction, as Peter's had grown. (2) Because the disciples were not yet ready to teach the doctrine, and would not be till the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost should give them understanding and power.

21 From that time. Beginning at once, as the account in Luke makes plain. Not earlier, because the disciples' faith in Christ as the Messiah had not been strong enough to endure the revelation of the Messiah's shameful death. Began Jesus to show unto his disciples. Reminding them of Scripture they knew already, and interpreting it. How that he must go. "Must," not because he was forced, but because his going was a part of the plan for the world's redemption into which he had gladly entered. Unto Jerusalem. Because it was the capital of the nation, the place of the temple, the place of the sacrifices which typified his death; and because there his death would be witnessed by the greatest number. And suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes. The three classes which constituted the Sanhedrin. And be killed. Was Christ's death necessary? Not if men had been better; but they were evil, and it was known by the prophets that they would be evil. Christ's death fulfilled the prophecies because it was the necessary result of man's wickedness, of which the prophecies take account. Thus Christ's death was necessary to carry to its full extent and complete the atonement Nothing less than Christ's death upon the cross could show men the supreme horror of sin, and the supreme love of God for sinners And be raised again the third day. In their grief at the disclosure of the cross, the disciples overlooked this. the brighter part of the revelation But Christ's resurrection was as necessary as his crucifixion; for no one could worship a dead Messiah, nor could Christ, without rising from the dead, bring our "life and immortality to light."

22. Christ had been speaking openly, but Peter took him to one side, privately, and began to rebuke him. He would set Christ right! "Something of this officiousness had shown itself already in Simon Peter's relations to his Master. The tension of his recent act of faith and the exaltation of feeling which followed it probably exaggerated this fault of natural character, and led to the astounding conduct described in the next words. Yet Peter was moved by love as well as conceit. Be it far from thee. Thus Peter showed how "far from" him was the true conception of Christ—a being of perfect wisdom, love, and power. After all, Peter had gained only a glimpse of Christ's spiritual kingdom, and still held to the false hopes of a material sway to which Christ's death on the cross would be absolute ruin.

23. But he turned, "seeing his disciples" and perceiving that they had overheard Peter. Get thee behind me, Satan. What a fall is here for the Rock of a few minutes before! Christ, however, is not calling Peter Satan, but recognizes that Satan was using Peter as his mouthpiece for the same temptation with which he had assailed Christ at the beginning of his ministry, the temptation to seek the glories of earthly domain rather than the invisible kingdom which he came to set up in men's hearts. Thou art an offence. instead of a foundation stone; for thou savorest not the things that that be of God, the enduring, foundation things, such as God's plan of salvation through the cross of Christ and our humble reception of it, but those that be of men, the temporary, bubble things, such as gold, and sceptres, and palaces and armies.

24 Then said Jesus unto his disciples. And all the people (Mark), for what he was about to add was of universal application. If any man, now or hereafter, will come after me, following in my footsteps, let him deny himself Christ does not desire asceticism: he has no pleasure in our pains. And take up his cross, "daily," adds Luke. Our cross is whatever we find hard to do or bear for Christ's sake. And follow me, for mine also is the way of the cross, and the disciple is not above his master.

25. For whosoever will save his life. "Life" in the Greek is the same as the word translated "soul" in v. 26. Whoever makes this present existence — its ease and pleasure — his supreme object, shall lose the higher, the only enduring, life; but whoever is determined, for Christ's dear sake, to ignore the lower life will find the higher life—which includes all of the lower worth having, and infinitely more.

26. For what is a man profited. Christ will even present the matter from the standpoint of the most calculating bargain-driver among his listeners. If he shall gain the whole world, the world of material things and temporary enjoyment, such as Satan offered to Jesus in the temporary enjoyment, such as Satan offered to Jesus in the temptation, and lose his own soul? in the high sense, eternal life. Or what shall a man in his senses, seeing things as they are, give in exchange for his soul (life)?

27. For. All views of life are absurdly inadequate that fail to take account of the end of life, of death, of heaven and hell, and of the great judgment day when the Son of man, not forgetting his humanity even then, shall come in the glory of his Father, which he shares with him In that day, those that have been ashamed or afraid of Christ's cross on earth shall find the Lord of heaven ashamed of them (Mark); while those that have borne the cross shall receive the crown, every man according to his works.

Some standing here, etc. There were some before him who would live to see the beginnings of Christ's kingdom, the pledge of Christ's final coming in glory. The marvelous conversion of three thousand at Pentecost, the end of the Jewish dispensation in the fall of Jerusalem, and the spread of Christianity throughout Asia Minor, Greece, and Italy, were within the life-time of the majority of Christ's listeners.

than Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets

Women who Have Taken Them Say So, Too.

Before we began making Health Tablets we submitted the formula to many physicians and chemists for their opinion. We wanted to improve it, if it could be improved, as we were bound to have not only the latest but the best possible medicine for women.

But we found out it couldn't be improved.

A firm of chemists, known all over America, wrote to us:

"We cannot suggest a single change or addition that would improve the formula or make it more beneficial to women."

And the doctors to whom the formula was submitted said the same thing.

And better still, the remarkable results obtained from their use by women suffering from a run-down condition or some female weakness, prove that the doctors and chemists were right.

For after all, results speak louder than words.

We want you to take just one box of these tablets, and you will share the opinion of these doctors and chemists that Is Baby Plump, Rosy and "Good"?

That is the normal condition of a healthy baby. If your baby is thin, pale and peevish there is something radically wrong, and ten to one the trouble is with its food. Either the food is lacking in nourishing qualities, or, being unsuitable, is not assimilated, and, as a consequence, baby is miserable and fails to thrive.

What is absolutely necessary in such a case is a concentrated and nourishing food, and, at the same time, easily digested.

The ideal infant food is Phosphorized Oil and Iron—the original and only combination of Oil with Iron and Phosphorus. Babies like FERROL, it always agrees with them, and never fails to give the most gratifying results.

Immigrant Attempts Suicide In Picton.

WAS ILL AND DESPONDENT—HAD BELIEVED TOO MANY IMMIGRATION AGENTS FAIRY TALES IN ENGLAND — FELL AMONG GOOD SAMARITANS.

On Saturday evening last, says the Picton Gazette, a young Englishman made application at the Queen's Hotel for a bed. He was evidently in a condition which denoted that he was not well. He was given the required accommodation, but on Sunday morning he did not arrive for breakfast at the usual hour, and after a time Mr. Lou Williams proceeded to his room to make enquiries, and found that the young man was ill, and without means, and would partake of breakfast, but admitted that he had no money to pay for the same. Mr. Williams informed him that he would give him his breakfast, which he did, after which he accompanied him to the Salvation Army officer. After a time the young man, who is, perhaps, twenty years old or thereabouts, went to Dr. Wright for medical treatment. Here he remained ill on a couch for some time, awaiting the return of the doctor, who was in attendance on a patient in the country. The doctor applied to Mr. Williams to take the young man in, but he stated that he could not do so, whereupon, through the good offices of the captain of the Salvation Army and others, accommodation was obtained for him, temporarily, with Mrs. Pope, a nurse, at the west end. While there he showed unmistakable evidences of despondency, and on Wednesday made the attempt with a bread knife, to cut his throat. He had frequently expressed the desire, in his despondent condition, to end his life, but had resisted this inclination until his feelings overcame his better judgment. The young man's name is N. Parker, and he came from London, Eng., paying his own passage out. He arrived here some few weeks ago, finding employment with an Athol farmer, subsequently going to Belleville, Cobourg and finally drifting back to Picton. When in London he was employed as a clerk. He is very gentlemanly in his manner, and feels, in his despondent state, that he made a mistake in listening to the fairy tales of the immigrant agents to come to this country. The young man was attended, after his attempt at suicide, by Drs. Whiteman and Heaslip, and is becoming more rational and cheerful and is still at the home of Mrs. Pope.

Chicago Man May be Rector of Kingston.

Kingston, Ont., June 8.—The report is current that to Rev. Dr. Stone, of Chicago, a former Canadian, has been offered the rectorship of St. George's Cathedral, as successor to the late Dean Smith. Dr. Stone will be here to preach the ordination sermon on Sunday, and also the sermon before the Synod.

Boy's Nose Broken By a Baseball.

A son of Mr. W. W. Easton, of the 3rd Concession of Thurlow, a lad of 16 or 17, was last evening playing baseball with some other boys at the Union cheese factory, near Canifton, when a ball struck him fair on the nose, crushing it. The lad was brought to this city to have his injuries attended to.

County Fathers Visit House of Refuge Site

The members of the County Council yesterday afternoon, at the conclusion of the session, visited the House of Refuge, which is in course of construction. The site selected for such a building could not be improved upon. It is upon an elevation which commands a delightful view of the bay in either direction. The foundation of the structure is about completed, and the large stones which form the bases for the windows, doors, etc., are being placed in position. The work is progressing nicely, and the building, when constructed according to the plans, will be one which will not only be a credit to the county, but a most desirable home for those compelled to go there. Mr. Walter Alford, of this city, has the contract.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store

Canoeists Had a Very Narrow Escape

At a few minutes after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon some small boats which were upon the bay were caught in a squall, which was rather severe while it lasted. A canoe containing two young men was upset, but they were soon rescued and escaped with a ducking. It was extremely fortunate that a fatality was not recorded.

Belleville Speakers At Varsity Dinner.

At the commencement dinner of the University of Toronto, held last evening, Messrs. E. Guss Porter, M. P., and W. N. Ponton, of this city, were among the speakers. Mr. Porter is thus reported by the World:

"E. Guss Porter, M.P., of Belleville, brought the allegiance of the graduates of the Bay of Quinte district to the new graduates in convocation assembled. The keynote of the University should be union, and he trusted the graduates would keep in touch with their great alma mater. Graduates were members of a body politic and should reach out from the centre and radiate out to all parts of the world; wherever graduates, empire builders as they are, were, they should feel the kindly touch of their alma mater."

The Globe has this to say of Col. Ponton: "Col. Ponton referred feelingly to the late Judge Dean and his great speech at convocation, and others who had within the year passed over to the great majority. He emphasized the spirit of union that characterized the sentiments of the evening. He thought the graduates should do their part to nurture and support their alma mater, with not only sentiment, but practical aid as well. The opening of the grand new convocation hall ought to mean another contribution of thousands of dollars to the University endowment. He put in a strong plea for more attention to modern languages."

Matters of Moment To Military Men.

The Fifteenth Regiment last night had their last parade before inspection, so far as drilling is concerned, and the turnout was certainly a creditable one. As the men were formed up and marched off the market square many favorable comments were heard as to their soldierly appearance and steady marching. Col. Halliwell was in command. Both bands were in attendance, and the music furnished by the Regimental band at the hospital lot was all that could have been desired.

To-morrow morning the Regiment will have their final church parade for the season, and will attend divine service at Christ Church. The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, will preach.

The annual inspection will commence on Monday evening next, when three companies will be inspected by Col. Gordon, inspecting officer, of Kingston. On Tuesday evening the remaining companies will be inspected, and on Wednesday evening the general inspection will take place.

No Quorum.

The Board of Education did not meet last evening, as but five members were present at 8 o'clock, the hour of meeting. Those in attendance were; Messrs. J. F. Wills, Chairman; G. A. Bennett, I. Diamond, B. Mallory and A. A. Roberts.

WORKS OF MERCY AND NECESSITY.

WHAT THE NEW LORD'S DAY ACT LAYS DOWN AS THE LAW.

Ottawa, June 8. — "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor and do all that thou hast to do."

Modern law-makers for Canada have interpreted this. The Lord's Day Act, as amended by a special committee has been reprinted.

Clause 4 provides, among other things, that a domestic servant who is employed on Sunday is to have a full day off during the ensuing week. Cold dinners will be the order on the Sabbath if this becomes law, or the household duties must be suspended for a whole day later on.

Works of mercy or necessity may be done on the Sabbath, and these include;

1. Any necessary or customary work in connection with divine worship.

2. Work for the relief of sickness or suffering, including the sale of drugs, medicines and surgical appliances by retail.

3. Transmitting or delivering telegraph and telephone messages.

4. Repairs to furnaces and maintaining necessary fires.

5. Work necessary for producing electric light and gas.

6. Work incidental to the conveying of travellers.

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

7. The continuance to their destination of trains and vessels in transit when the Lord's Day begins.

9. Making repairs to railway tracks or doing other necessary railway work.

10. Work before 6 a.m. and after 8 p.m., of railway yard crews.

11. Loading, unloading or operating ocean-going vessels which otherwise would be unduly delayed or in imminent danger of being stopped by the closing of navigation.

12. Caring for live stock and perishable products.

13. Operation of any authorized ferry or boat.

14. Hiring horses and carriages.

FOR NEWSPAPERS.

15. Any unavoidable work after 8 p.m., in the preparation of the regular edition of a daily newspaper.

16. Work after 4 p.m., in connection with setting bakers' sponge.

17. Delivery of milk and ice and the work of domestic servants.

18. The operation by any Canadian electric railway company whose line is international or interprovincial, on any line or branch now regularly so operated.

19. Unless employes on boats which complete their trips every day are given the Lord's Day free, such employe shall be given a full day during the week.

NO EXCURSIONS.

20 Excursions are barred by clause 6.

21. Under clause 7, Grimsby Park and other similar resorts will not be able to charge entrance fees on the Lord's Day.

22. No gun, rifle or other engine shall be used for any purpose on Sunday.

23. Foreign newspaper or publications classified as newspapers cannot be brought into Canada for sale on the Lord's Day.

Any constable is given authority under the act to enter suspected premises other than a dwelling house.

St. Thomas' Church.

To-morrow, Trinity Sunday, the services in St. Thomas' Church will be as follows;

8 a.m.—Holy Communion.
11 a.m.—Choral Celebration of the Holy Communion with sermon.
7 p.m.—Shortened Evensong with sermon.

There will be a short sacred organ recital after the evening service, given by Mr. Spooner, and Mrs. Shaw, of Montreal, will sing "Sun of My Soul," by Adams.

Jumped the Track.

At an early hour this morning the engine and some cars of a freight train left the track at Bowmanville. Fortunately no person was seriously hurt. The auxiliary from here was sent to the scene of the wreck to clear the track.

Local Legal.

The Magistrate delivered judgment in the wages case of Swan vs. Phillips, holding the plaintiff entitled to the balance of wages claimed and costs less $4, the allowance for washing done for him by the wife of the defendant. The question of jurisdiction in the Magistrate here to hear a case of wages for services rendered along the bay shore of the Township of Ameliasburg was decided in favor of the plaintiff, the original hiring having taken place at the City of Belleville. William Carnew for complainant; F. E. O'Flynn for defendant.

The Canton's Parade

Canton Belleville, No. 6, Patriarchs Militant, paraded last evening to Victoria Park where they were drilled at some length by Lieut. R. H. Ketcheson. The I.O.O.F. band furnished music and at the park rendered some selections which were much appreciated by the large number of spectators who were upon the park. The band played one dashing march which is as good as anything heard since the days of Sousa's famous "King Cotton." The Canton and band looked very "slick" and marched splendidly.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ONTARIO STORM SWEPT

Hamilton's Loss Is Calculated at $250,000

St. Thomas, Chatham and Sarnia and Surrounding Districts Swept by Wind and Hailstorm—Buildings Unroofed and Wrecked and Trees Blown Over—Dangerous Railway Track Washout at Brockville.

Toronto, June 9.—A storm of wind, rain and lightning swept over Western Ontario yesterday between Hamilton and the border line, and did enormous damage. In Toronto, although the electrical display in the afternoon, and again at night, was vivid, and the downpour heavy, no great damage is reported, except to the telephone and telegraph services, which were badly demoralized.

The observatory reported that, "in Ontario and Quebec thunderstorms during the day were both numerous and of marked severity. An important depression which has been hovering over the Northwestern States for the past few days is gradually breaking up."

Boy Drowned At Belle Isle.

A Detroit boy on the way to a Canadian summer resort was blown off Belle Isle bridge and drowned.

One man was crushed by a falling tree near London and may die. Two men are reported to be killed near Springfield.

The 90-foot elevator tower at Port Stanley was blown over.

East of Windsor all wires were down and marks of the storm's devastation were everywhere in evidence.

The cyclone swept through Rodney, West Lorne, Dutton, Sheddon, Zorra and Fingal, lifting everything movable in its course.

Maxwell Church, on the sixth line of Plympton, was struck by lightning, which tore a hole in the roof.

$250,000 Damage At Hamilton.

Damage is reported as follows:

Hamilton—Damage estimated at $250,000; roofs of brick houses blown 50 feet; 500 feet of roof at Deering Works blown off; trees and windows innumerable broken; yachts smashed.

St. Thomas—Magnificent avenue of trees on Wellington street nearly all ruined; M. C. R. shops unroofed; Trinity Church damaged; shop struck by lightning; man's skull fractured by falling tree.

Rodney—Bender Hotel and Patterson House unroofed; walls of store collapse; trees foot thick broken.

Aylmer—Magnificent $7,000 barn blown down.

Chatham Suffers Severely.

Chatham—Storm terrific; Park street Methodist Church steeple blown down; trees suffer greatly; Dowsley Axle Works roof riddled by hail; livery stable destroyed; telephone and telegraph poles and wires blown over; many buildings unroofed.

Sarnia—1,700 square feet of roof at lumber mill ripped off; trees unrooted and blown against house; new house blown over; lightning sets fire to one shop. Fishermen reached shore with great difficulty.

Niagara Falls—Two wings of General Hospital, under construction, crushed in; ten workmen narrowly escape.

Brockville—Storm unequalled in last 40 years. Timely discovery of a washout of a large section of the track of the Brockville, Westport and Northwestern Railway by a farm hand saved the passenger train, which he took prompt measures to stop.

Beamsville—Several barns were struck by lightning, and that of H. Cousins was burned with all its contents. Only one team of horses were saved. Loss $5,000.

THE RUSSIAN SITUATION.

Grows No Better As the Days Go By—Czar and Goremykin.

St. Petersburg, June 9.—According to reliable reports from Peterhof, Emperor Nicholas has about decided to retire Premier Goremykin.

A sensation has been caused by the disclosures of M. Vladimiroff, a correspondent of The Twentieth Century, formerly The Russ, who declares that six out of the eight men executed at Riga were innocent and adds that they were forced to confess by tortures which put the Spanish inquisition to shame.

In the Lower House of Parliament yesterday M. Sipiaguine of Sebastopol, a nephew of the late Minister of the Interior of that name, proposed a resolution instructing President Mourimhoff to go to Peterhof in the name of the House and request the Emperor to suspend all death sentences.

After an exciting debate the House rejected M. Sipiaguine's proposition and passed the Constitutional Democratic resolution offered by M. Naboukoff.

THE MEAT SCANDAL.

Mr. Reynolds Testifies He Has Nothing to Modify In Report.

Washington, June 9.—James B. Reynolds, the co-author with Mr. Neill of the beef report, was before the House committee on agriculture in continuation of its beef inspection hearings. As to Mr. Neill's testimony there was nothing in it he wished to modify. In particular he wished to substantiate Mr. Neill regarding the shoveling of meat from the floor of the Nelson Morris Co. He saw the operation.

To Inspect Tinned Meats.

London, June 9.—The officer selected by War Secretary Haldane to inspect tinned meats for the British army is Lieut.-Col. Percy Eyre Hobbs, chief instructor of the Army Service Corps School of Instruction at Aldershot.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, June 9.—On motion to go into supply yesterday afternoon Mr. Clements (West Kent) addressed the House on the tariff question, and these members followed him: Mr. Martin (Wellington), Mr. Henderson (Halton), Mr. Clark (South Essex), Mr. McKenzie (South Bruce), and the House then went into supply on the Marine and Fisheries estimates.

DITTO IMPERIAL LIFE

Amounts Taken From Books and Then Put Back Again.

Some Juggling With the Accounts to Deceive Government Inspectors—Making Things "Seem"—"A Generous Act" of Which the Like Was Never Before Done in Canada—Dummy Shareholders.

Toronto, June 9.—The Imperial Life Insurance Co., which Hon. George A. Cox said he brought into existence so that his son, Frederick W. Cox, might be general manager of an insurance corporation, is now under investigation by the Dominion Insurance Commission. Mr. Thomas Bradshaw, the actuary of the company was on the stand throughout yesterday. A large number of members of the staff of the different Cox financial corporations were set down as shareholders in the Imperial despite the fact that all of the dividends were paid the Central Canada Loan and Savings Co., which owned a large percentage of these shares.

The complaints of policyholders of the Canada Life were confined to certian subjects, and Mr. Shepley selected several as being generally representative of all the rest. He said that the grievances of policyholders were set forth in hundreds of letters which had reached the commissioners. These complaints could not be investigated individually, but he thought those selected would cover the entire ground. The first selected was that of Policyholder Keenan, who in 1887, at the age of 65, accepted $5,000 insurance, paying annual premiums of $449.60 When the amount paid reached $6,752.90 the policy lost. Early this year the company offered a surrender value of $2,049.

Another man wrote that within six months the Canada Life had offered him three different surrender values. Mr. Sanderson said that in this case the agent was charged by the policyholder with making misrepresentations, and the company was anxious to settle.

The Salary List.

On the stand in the afternoon, Mr. Bradshaw told of the duties of the executive committee, which met three times a month. They looked after investments, etc.

The salary list was taken up by Mr. Tilley. F. G. Cox, managing director prior to 1905, received $6,000, and in that year his salary was raised to $8,000. Mr. Bradshaw, secretary and actuary, received $2,500 from 1897 to 1899; $3,500, 1899 to 1902; $5,000, 1902 to 1905, when it was raised to $6,000, his present salary. The directors received $7.50 for each meeting they attended but no other fees.

Mr. Bradshaw explained their agents' balances in Mr. Blackadar's report. At the end of 1901 there was $3,412.44 agents' balances, but this was taken off the books by Vice-President Ames giving his cheque for the amount. At the beginning of the next year this was transferred back. The result was to keep the item out of the blue books. At the end of 1902, over $8,000 was advcaned to agents. In 1903 the agents' balances amounted to $11,404.03. Mr. Ames, however, had dropped out of the company and witness said that Senator Cox took his place and paid the cheque, to square the balance.

Making Things "Seem."

"Was this paid back to Senator Cox at the beginning of the year?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No, it was not paid back until Aug. 3, 1904," answered Mr. Bradshaw.

"Why was this?" queried Mr. Tilley.

"The minutes will show that," said witness.

Mr. Tilley read the resolution of a meeting of the executive, held Aug. 3, by which Senator Cox was paid back his loan, with interest.

"How was that money treated in the books after Senator Cox was paid?"

"An individual account was opened, and later written off as an expenditure."

"The item then appeared in the blue book of 1904 amounting to $95.12," said Mr. Tilley.

"What happened in 1905?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"The account was considerably reduced, to $6,546.85," said witness, "of which the company hold a paid-up life policy of $5,000, and two other policies amounting to $3,000."

"Is that shown in the annual statement?"

"No; it was written off. Other houses would treat them as bad debts."

Commissioner Kent wanted to know if no returns were required by the Government, would these transactions have taken place?

Mr. Bradshaw admitted that they would not.

Would It?

"Would it be fair to call this 'juggling?'" laughed the commissioner.

S. H. Blake, K. C., appearing for the Imperial Life, asked witness, through Mr. Tilley, if he considered Mr. Ames' guarantee in 1901 was flimsy. Witness answered that it was the best guarantee, as Mr. Ames was a man of wealth.

Mr. Tilley then asked witness of further payments made to the company by Mr. Ames.

Mr. Bradshaw said that Mr. Ames gave $25,000 to assist the company to meet expenditures in 1901. He explained that when the company commenced business, Messrs. Senator Cox, A. E. Ames and J. W. Flavelle paid amounts to the company from time to time to assist in the establishment of business. For these payments the company was under obligation. The amounts were as follows: In 1898, $700; in 1899, $10,000; in 1900, $5,000; in 1901, $10,000; in 1902, $35,000; in 1903, $24,000.

Mr. Tilley could not find these amounts in the returns. Mr. Bradshaw explained that these were gifts to the company.

"Was the object to keep down these items in the company's accounts?" asked Mr. Tilley.

Mr. Bradshaw became excited. He leaned far over the edge of the witness box.

A Generous Act.

"It was an exceedingly generous act. We were proud of it. It was never done in Canada before. It was all done for the benefit of the policyholders."

"Now, will you answer my question?"

Mr. Bradshaw admitted that the money was received to help the company keep down its expenses.

The revelation of investments was touched upon. Mr. Bradshaw said that in reference to Sao Paulo loans, he considered these bonds a perfectly authorized investment, for the reason that the company was incorporated in Canada. In December, 1900, $30,000 was advanced on Sao Paulo bonds; also, on Jan. 2, another loan, through the National Trust Co., of $70,000. The $100,000 was paid back in July, 1902.

Mr. Tilley went over all the dealings of the Imperial Life in the Sao Paulo Light and Tramway stocks. The stocks were kept out of the return by the transfer of cheques as per usual.

Mr. Tilley asked if any other stocks had been treated in the same way. Mr. Bradshaw did not know of any.

Unauthorized Investment.

In 1902, the Imperial made a loan of $152,752.87. This was shown in the minutes as the purchase of $38,742 Twin City, $18,165 Dominion Coal, $9,945 British America, $25,024 Western Assurance, $60,181 Ontario Bank.

"Of these, Dominion Coal and Twin City were unauthorized?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"Yes," answered Mr. Bradshaw; "but we had bought some Dominion Iron and Steel and some Dominion Coal before this."

"You knew they were unauthorized?"

"Oh, yes."

Mr. Bradshaw showed Mr. Tilley how the transaction was treated in the company's books. Mr. Tilley read the changed minute, which made the $152,752.87 a loan to George A. Cox.

Mr. Bradshaw explained that the loan was to Senator Cox on Mr. Ames' securities, and that the Senator hypothecated these to the Imperial Life. The securities had a market value of $170,000.

Mr. Tilley spent considerable time before adjournment in dissecting the minutes to find out where the mistake had been made. Mr. Bradshaw would give no information. Mr. Bradshaw will be in the witness box on Monday.

NONE TOO GENEROUS.

Major Moodie Tells of the Provisioning of the Arctic.

Ottawa, June 9.—The commander of the Hudson Bay expedition, J. D. Moodie of the Mounted Police, gave evidence before the committee yesterday morning.

The only thing he had bought for the Arctic expedition was police huts and clothing. He was going to buy 100 good cigars for himself, but had been told they would be provided. The provisioning of the Arctic was none too generous for the length of trip and kind of work.

It would be a criminal thing to send men north without properly providing for them. Men sitting around for eight or nine hours a day would be very unhappy without a pipe. The cigars and cigarettes were only issued on holidays.

Liquor Saved Man's Life.

"Did you consider it a wise precaution to take a supply of liquor?" asked Mr. Macpherson.

"I would not have gone without it," replied Major Moodie.

"Would a man who took liquor stand more hardship than one who did not?" asked Dr. Stockton.

"If we were traveling in the winter liquor would be the worst thing a man could take, but I have in the north seen liquor save a man's life. On the Arctic expedition, we did not give men liquor when on land trips. It was a different thing with men cooped up on shipboard," was the reply.

Major Moodie said almost all the rum, sherry and whiskey was brought back and returned to the stores. The gin was not touched.

In answer to a question, Major Moodie said the crew of the boat was not supplied with clothing enough to protect them from the Arctic climate. They had to have garments issued to them from police supplies.

TWO REGISTRARS REMOVED.

Charges Were Made and Were Held to Be Proven.

Toronto, June 9.—Premier Whitney yesterday announced that two county registrars had been removed from office for cause. In both cases the charges were investigated and found to be proved.

The removed officials are:

Charles Edward Whelihan, registrar for South Perth.

W. W. Brown, registrar for East Northumberland.

In their places these have been appointed:

H. Frederick Sharpe of St. Mary's, registrar for South Perth.

Arthur Gordon Willoughby of Colborne, registrar for East Northumberland.

More Land For Fruit Farm.

Toronto, June 9.—M. F. Rittenhouse, a Lincoln County "old boy," who has made millions in Chicago, who some time ago presented a fine school to his native village of Jordan, and more recently an experimental fruit farm to the Provincial Government, has purchased the fifty acres of Oscar Harris of St. Catharines, and makes it an additional present.

D. R. O. Is Found Guilty.

Prince Albert, Sask., June 9.—James Sinclair was convicted Thursday night on the charge of conspiracy to stuff the ballot boxes in recent provincial elections. Sentence was suspended, and Sinclair was released on his own recognizance. He pleaded not guilty. The other three deputy returning officers were not present, and their whereabouts are unknown.

Long Terms For Robbers.

Toronto, June 9.—Douglas Dyson, for highway robbery in Stanley Park and shooting at a G. T. R. constable, was yesterday sentenced to five years in Kingston Penitentiary on each charge. James Douglas, for assisting in the hold-up said "Thank you, sir," for a sentence of three years.

T. Chase Casgrain Injured.

Montreal, June 9.—Thomas Chase Casgrain, K. C., ex-M. P., one of Montreal's leading lawyers, is laid up with a broken bone in his foot. He fell down stairs Thursday night.

One of Three Things Always Cause

RHEUMATISM

Do you know the system rids itself of waste matter through bowels and kidneys? Yes, but by the skin as well.

As a matter of fact, the skin rids the system of more urea than the kidneys do.

If the skin, or bowels, or kidneys are unhealthy—they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to joints and nerves—causing Rheumatism.

One never inherits Rheumatism. One does inherit weak kidneys, irregular bowels and bad skin action.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

will positively cure Rheumatism because they increase the eliminating action of skin, kidneys and bowels—and make these three organs so vigorous and healthy that there can be no urea or waste retained in the system to poison the blood and irritate the nerves.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are fruit juices, combined with tonics—the whole forming the most effective cure for Rheumatism.

GOREMYKIN WILL NOT RESIGN.

Regiment Near St. Petersburg Practically in State of Mutiny.

St. Petersburg, June 11.—The report of the retirement of the Goremykin Ministry was definitely killed late Saturday night, when the Premier returned to St. Petersburg from a visit to the Emperor at Peterhof, and authorized the statement that he had not tendered his resignation, and had no expectation for the present of retiring from his post.

The debate on the agrarian question continued until 6.30 p. m., and after the reading of a number of interpellations regarding the "hunger strikes," the political prisoners at Warsaw, Minsk and Simbirsk, and the prospective famine conditions in the Volga region, the House adjourned.

The Novotcherkassk Regiment, which is located at Oktaht, near St. Petersburg, is practically in a state of open mutiny. It was under orders to proceed to the Baltic Provinces, but the men refused to go.

Terrorists Rob Stores.

Warsaw, June 11.—The revolutionary movement is increasing. Between 6 and 7 o'clock Saturday evening, in different parts of the city, bands of terrorists simultaneously attacked 20 Government alcohol stores and threatened the clerks with revolvers, and robbed them of cash and stamps. In some of the stores fights ensued and infantry patrols were called out to restore order. Two terrorists and one soldier were killed and one terrorist, a Cossack officer, a policeman, a soldier and three clerks were wounded. It was a well-organized plot and resulted in the destruction of large stocks of liquors owned by the Government.

Police Chief Killed.

Bielostok, Russia, June 11.—Chief of Police Derkatchoff, against whose life several attempts have been made, was shot and killed yesterday by several unknown persons while he was out driving. His coachman was severely wounded.

Six Killed In Riot.

Warsaw, June 11.—Six persons were killed in the rioting here Saturday. The disturbances are reported to have been organized to avenge the workman Marczowski, who was executed in the citadel Saturday morning for attempting to kill a police officer.

Paris, June 11.—It is announced that Admiral Fournier is going to London as a guest of King Edward. He will discuss with the King a plan for the participation of French warships in the coming Anglo-Russian naval fetes, in the course of which the British squadron is to visit Kronstadt and the Russian squadron England.

Dies On His Way Home.

Heart Failure Strikes Premier of New Zealand.

Rt. Hon. R. J. Seddon, After a Long Tour in Australia, Expires Suddenly From Heart Failure After Embarkment to Return to New Zealand—Made Imperialist Speech Saturday—Sketch of His Active Career.

Sydney, N.S.W., June 11.—Richard John Seddon, Prime Minister of New Zealand, died from heart failure last evening, aboard the steamer Owstrey Grange, on which he had embarked yesterday morning to return to New Zealand. The Owstrey Grange put back into Sydney. Mr. Seddon was 61 years of age.

His death was totally unexpected. He came to Australia in the middle of May to consult with Alfred Deakin, the Prime Minister of Australia, on important questions, mainly those concerning the New Hebrides. During his stay here he visited the principal towns, making vigorous speeches and receiving deputations on various matters interesting to Australia, such as colonial preference and alien immigration.

RT. HON. R. J. SEDDON.

On Saturday he made a speech at Sydney, declaring that it was a suicidal policy for the colonies to send trade to foreign countries, thus enabling them to strengthen their navies. Trade he said, should go to the motherland to assist in strengthening the British navy.

When Mr. Seddon sailed yesterday morning he appeared to be in his customary health.

Sketch of His Career.

The Right Hon. Richard John Seddon was born at Eccleston, Lancashire, in 1845, and emigrated to Australia in 1863, where he carried on his business of mechanical engineer. Removing to New Zealand, he was elected in 1879 to the House of Representatives, and has held his seat ever since. From 1891 to 1893 Mr. Seddon acted as Minister of Mines, and from 1891 to 1896 acted also as Minister of Public Works and Minister of Defence. In 1893 he became Premier, and since then has been, in addition, colonial treasurer, postmaster-general, Minister of Labor and Minister of Native Affairs.

In New Zealand he enjoyed unlimited confidence and popularity and was recently again returned to power by a large majority of votes. Mr. Seddon was chiefly responsible for the series of measures on socialistic lines which have created so much interest and attention, and it was his ambition to make New Zealand an example to the world in all that makes for the true happiness of the people. His energy and enthusiasm were unbounded, and it is matter of additional regret that he should have died during the year of New Zealand's first international exhibition.

TO REPEL INVADERS.

New Admiralty System to Be Tested With Greatest Fighting Fleets.

London, June 11.—Although "war" has not yet been declared, the mobilization of the British fleet was practically completed to-day. It is ready to meet all eventualities and repel the expected attack of an imaginary enemy now assembled off the west coast of Ireland. The greatest aggregation of fighting ships ever assembled totaling 225 warships of various types and 63,000 men is participating in the mimic warfare, which is designed to test the efficiency of the new Admiralty system for the defence of the British coasts and commerce on the high seas.

To Convoy Merchantmen.

One of the most interesting features is to be the collecting of British merchantmen at certain points and conveying them to home points. The force is divided into two fleets, the red (British) consisting of 235 vessels, including 86 torpedo boats and submarines, and the blue (the enemy) consisting of 90 warships without torpedo boats or submarines.

Admirals Sir Arthur Wilson and Lord Charles Beresford command the red fleet, while Vice-Admiral Sir William May commands the "Enemy."

VANDALISM BY RAILWAY.

Alleged by Hibernians In Removal of Memorial Stone.

Montreal, June 11.—There is a row here in Irish circles over the removal of the memorial stone erected to 6,000 victims of ship fever to St. Patrick's Park. The Hibernians are moving in the matter.

The Grand Trunk wanted the place for their tracks, but the Irish societies declare that no permission was given, and it appears that the stone was moved at 2 o'clock in the morning.

"Neptune" Is on Guard.

St. John's, Nfld., June 11.—The Colonial Government has commissioned the whaler Neptune as an additional fishery cruiser to enforce the Foreign Fishing Vessels Act along the west coast of Belle Isle Strait. It is reported the Americans purpose starting a new herring fishery this summer. This action will prevent evasion of the bait and fishing law.

COMMANDER SPAIN'S DIVORCE.

Senate Discusses the Report of the Special Committee.

Ottawa, June 11.—The Senate discussed the report of the Divorce Committee, recommending that the application of Commander Spain for divorce be refused, the committee holding that the plaintiff had submitted an agreement containing admission of improper relations and a promise not to oppose the application, which amounted to collusion. It was pointed out that the resistance of divorce by the respondent had broken the collusion and Senator Kerr, Toronto, moved to refer the case back to be heard on its merits, and, if necessary, obtain the opinion of the Minister of Juctice on the question of collusion.

This motion was defeated, and the report was adopted.

Has There Been "Hogging" of Land in the Northwest?

The statement has gone forth that the area of available grain-growing land in the Northwest is nothing like as large as has been represented. The large grant to railway companies and the sales to land corporations have placed on the market nearly all the odd sections. The even sections, supposed to be reserved for homesteading, have, in many cases, been hogged by political favorites without any attempt on their part to comply with the regulations. That this fraud has been extensively carried on, there can be no reasonable doubt. The Winnipeg Free Press, Mr. Sifton's paper, recently called public attention to the matter in the following terms:

"The Free Press has reason to believe that this fraud is being practiced on a large scale. In some districts the homestead lands are all tied up in this way. No doubt the official records in the land offices show that each of these quarter-sections has been duly entered for in the name of some individual and the conditions fixed by the Act complied with. Superficially the record is probably quite correct; but behind the forms of law a daring, cold-blooded hold-up and swindle is being perpetrated. It is an outrage that men who come to this country in response to invitations from the Government, should be unable to secure homesteads within reasonable distance of railways and towns because they are being "hogged"—and that without a shadow of legal right—by the big land companies. The attention of the late Minister of the Interior was drawn to this matter, it is understood, and it was his intention to have an investigation. * * * This fraudulent homesteading is, of course, an incident of the progress of the country. Five years ago a homestead was of no particular use to anybody but a genuine farmer; but now when land is worth from $8 to $15 an acre and rapidly rising, a quarter-section of land is a nice plum and there are plenty of persons who are working their wits in order to get one without giving value for it to the country.

These parties can only be headed off by the most rigid inspection and the drastic application of the law. It may not be possible even then because of the ingenuity of the men who are in this business of making money out of homesteads may easily prove too much for the officials of the Government. But certain it is that if our homesteads cannot be reserved for the people for whom they are intended—bonafide settlers coming from other lands to find a home—it will be necessary to put an end to our present system and stop free grants altogether."

The manager, who was born near Cincinnati, still claims that as his home, and declares that many players, mostly of Irish extraction, have recently refused to sign contracts with his team, owing to the mistake."

The ethics of spending money are thus discussed by a religious publication, The Church Times; "The stately life and the simple life commonly go together. It is not Timon of Athens, but Sir Gorgius Midas who wants suppressing. Costly gems and fine apparel have their place in a kingdom of righteousness, which otherwise is apt not to rise above the ideals of the back parlor. It is not necessarily vulgar ostentation and a sin to give a large sum for a vase or a cabinet, or for anything else which ministers to the refinement and elevation of life."

A few days ago one of the eastern Methodist conferences regretted that the youth of Canada is more prone to honor athletic than intellectual greatness. It was also deeply regretted that the press of Canada devoted too much space to sports. That irreverent Philistine, Toronto Telegram, under the caption, "The Heroes of Youth, hands the fault-finding Conference the following trenchant Roland for its Oliver;

"It is a sad fact that the youth of the land does not pick its heroes from among the Rhodes scholars instead of from among the Marathon runners.

"It is a sadder fact that the Conferences of the Church pick their heroes from among the millionaires in the membership, instead of from among the superannuated Soldiers of the Cross, who have preached three times a Sunday on a salary that may have averaged $550 per annum in the forty or fifty years of battle for their Master.

"Where is the Conference that honors good deeds in the records of its older members as much as it honors millions in the bank account of its richer members?

"The Conference that makes heroes of rich men is in no position to rebuke the youth of a land that makes heroes of its strong men.

"Leave the boys to the worship of the Marathon runner. He is admired for the strength of his legs. The idolatry of athletics is a mistake. It is not a sordid folly. The boys will outgrow it and live to join the Conferences in the worship of the stock jobber, the company promoter, the treasury exploiter, the combine magnate. He is admired for the length of his pocketbook."

Madoc Demands That R.R. Line Be Opened.

WILL URGE THE GRAND TRUNK TO OPEN BRANCH TO ELDORADO — MINES WOULD THEN SHIP.

Madoc, June 9. — This town has long felt the need of the opening of the line between here and Eldorado. The feeling has grown so strong that a public meeting was called to discuss the matter, and a strong committee was appointed to wait on the Grand Trunk and endeavor to come to some agreement whereby this branch could be opened.

The branch line was built by the Government, aided by a grant from the town. Its non-operation is doing an injustice to the town. With this branch in operation the mines adjoining would ship hundreds of tons of ore. Mr. Mikel, City Clerk of Belleville, was present, and stated that the city was anxious to assist in any way.

The committee will try and induce the traffic manager or some expert of the G.T.R. to meet them and consider matters relative to this portion of the road.

FAULTY DIGESTION.

CAUSES PHYSICAL AND MENTAL BREAKDOWN — MI-O-NA WILL STRENGTHEN STOMACH.

Few people realize the intimate relation between the mind and the stomach. Worry and excessive mental work re-act on the digestive system, while on the other hand the greatest cause of nerve and brain impoverishment is a weak or faulty digestion.

Just as soon as you find that your food is not properly digested, that you taste it after eating, that the tongue is furred, the breath heavy, the appetite poor, the head occasionally dull and aching, begin the use of Mi-o-na.

This reliable remedy contains no pepsin and is an absolute strengthener of the digestive system. In fact, it is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach, excepting cancer. It is not a patent medicine, and its formula is furnished to physicians, druggists, and all intelligent people who may desire it. Mi-o-na differs from any other remedy on the market in its lasting effects.

Mi-o-na costs but 50 cents a box. If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

THE ANT.

Facts About One of Nature's Most Industrious Creatures.

When spring comes with all its wealth of opening buds and new flowers, the ant is preparing for a season of profitable industry.

It comes out of its winter quarters and locates a new home where it can store away, during the summer months, the sustenance for the long winter days.

Just as industrious as the ant—but in a different way, are the countless—infinitesimal germs which burrow into the scalp and eat away at the roots of the hair.

As they burrow away Dandruff forms, and if the germs are not all killed, Baldness results.

Newbro's Herpicide is the only known remedy which kills the germ.

The Cheese Board.

The fact that a goodly number of cheese were unsold on Saturday rather surprised some members of the local Cheese Board.

It was rather a quiet session, and there did not, for a time, anyhow, appear to be much anxiety on the part of either sellers or buyers to do business. Bidding started at 10 1-4, then jumped to 10 1-2, but still there was nothing doing. Then the representative of Jas. Alexander bid 10 7-8 for the whole board, which was again declined with thanks. Finally the selling started and F. W. Brenton and Son got 750 at 10 15-16 cents, Mark Sprague took 330 at 10 15-16 cents, and Jas. Alexander & Co. secured 1,500 at 10 7-8 cents. About 1,500 boxes were left unsold, 10 7-8 cents on the curb being refused. About 4000 boxes were boarded, all but one lot of 50 being white.

Notwithstanding the fact that a lot of cheese was unsold, farmers and sellers were much encouraged, as the price secured was higher than at the country boards during the week. Compared with the same date last year the highest price Saturday shows an advance of 1 5-8 cents.

About eleven hundred more cheese were boarded to-day than on June 10 last year.

The pasture in this district at present could hardly be better, and the rain of the past week or so has given the grass such a firm hold and good start that even a long spell of dry weather would not upset conditions very badly.

Farmers are smiling with good reason.

A Polish Sport.

One of the favorite sports of a Polish country gentleman is to capture a wolf alive, and as his mode of doing it is probably new to many Englishmen I will briefly describe it. A wolf being driven into the open, the well mounted horseman pursues it, armed only with a long whip and some rope. The wolf after a time tries to take rest, but the rider forces it on with his whip till, after repeated attempts at rest, it sinks exhausted. The rider then springs from his horse, jumps astride the wolf and, holding it by the ears, secures it with the rope. Most men require the assistance of a mounted companion, who ties the wolf while the other holds its ears with both hands, and in this way the capture is comparatively easy, but to do it single handed is a difficult feat. Nasty bites and even dangerous wounds result should the hunter have miscalculated the strength of the animal. No one, however, is considered a perfect sportsman till he has done this, yet many never succeed. Of the large party assembled only our host, two of his stalwart brothers and one other man had obtained this blue ribbon of Polish sport.

Couture and His Dainty Pupil.

An old pupil of Couture tells how the master came into his schoolroom one day when the model was in exceptionally good condition, the light especially fine and the circumstances of the seance altogether auspicious. As he entered one of the students got up and went to the tub of water in the corner, leaving all the rest buried in their work. "What are you going to do?" asked Couture roughly. The student showed his hands, which had some paint on them, and replied that he was going to wash them. Couture dabbed his thumb in some paint on the palette of the nearest student and made a smear on the dainty pupil's forehead. "You'd better wash your face, too," he said. The face washing was the last act of the students when they had finished their work for the day. The dainty pupil took the hint to heart, apologized and sat down at his easel without visiting the tub. If he had not done so he would never have entered the school again.

The Earth's Swift Motion.

Everybody knows that the earth makes one complete revolution on its axis once in each twenty-four hours, but few, however, have any idea of the high rate of speed at which such an immense ball must turn in order to accomplish the feat of making one revolution in a day and a night. A graphic idea of the terrific pace which the old earth keeps up year after year may be had by comparing its speed to that of a cannon ball fired from a modern high pressure gun. The highest velocity ever attained by such a missile has been estimated at 1,626 feet per second, which is equal to a mile in 3 2-10 seconds. The earth in making one complete revolution in the short space of twenty-four hours must turn with a velocity almost exactly equal to that of the cannon ball. In short, its rate of speed at the equator is exactly 1,507 feet per second. This is equal to 17 miles a minute.

The Empresses of Russia.

During the eighteenth century no less than four empresses held sway over Russia, and if perhaps the throne was unjustly usurped in more than one instance it can at least be said of all of them that they reigned more wisely than the emperors of that period and that they have left names more famous than those of their male predecessors and successors. With all her many faults Catherine the Great proved a wise and powerful monarch, and much that disfigured her history may be forgotten, seeing that she almost totally abolished the custom of subjecting all Russian prisoners to a system of ghastly torture besides repealing many other cruel and barbarous laws.

Washington's Hand.

George Washington's hand was described as that of a giant. On the last occasion of General Lafayette's visit to this country he remarked to Mr. Custis when referring to a former visit, "You were holding to a single finger of the good general's remarkable hand—the greatest feat you could perform at that time." Washington was the champion jumper of his day. In one match he covered 21 feet 3 inches, easily beating all competitors.

The Pursuit of Happiness.

"What I want," said the earnest citizen, "is to see a state of affairs which will give every man a chance to work."

"Yes," answered the cheerless person, "but that won't give entire satisfaction. What nearly everybody is looking for is a chance to do nothing and make everybody else work."

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness," she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

TIMELY TOPICS.

IS THERE NO LIMIT?

(S. E. Kiser.)

Mother's eating carrots, lettuce, greens and beets;
Father lives on onions, we've quit having meats;
Pancakes in the morning, breakfast food and rice—
Well, we're saving money and it's worth the price.

Sausage? Bah! We wouldn't feed it to the pup!
If you speak of beefsteak sister's nose goes up.
We have eggs for dinner, bread and milk for tea,
And we must be getting richer rapidly.

Every morning father, as he reads the news,
Seems to get discouraged, seems to have the blues,
And he pounds the table, saying things are wrong—
Vegetables seem to keep him pretty strong.

Every day somebody tells about some more
Packing filth we hadn't heard about before;
It is nearly time to hear again, I think,
That the milk is doctored and unfit to drink.

Onions, prunes and carrots, lettuce, turnips, rice—
Well, they might be better, still they're pretty nice,
Yet before to-morrow someone raking muck,
May discover filth in these things,—darn the luck!

PEPYS AS A PLAYGOER.

The Time When Women First Appeared on the English Stage.

In the methods of producing plays Pepys' period of playgoing was coeval with many most important innovations which seriously affected the presentation of Shakespeare on the stage. The chief was the substitution of women for boys in female roles. During the first few months of Pepys' theatrical experience boys were still taking the women's parts. That the practice survived in the first days of Charles II.'s reign we know from the well worn anecdote that when the king sent behind the scenes to inquire why the play of "Hamlet," which he had come to see, was so late in commencing he was answered that the queen was not yet shaved. But in the opening month of 1661, within five months of his first visit to a theater, the reign of the boys ended. On Jan. 3 of that year Pepys writes that he "first saw women come upon the stage." Next night he makes entry of a boy's performance of a woman's part, and that is the final record of boys masquerading as women in the English theater. I believe the practice now survives nowhere except in Japan. This mode of representation has always been a great puzzle to students of Elizabethan drama. It is difficult to imagine what boys in Shakespeare's day, if they were anything like boys of our own day, made of such parts as Lady Macbeth or Cleopatra. Before, however, Pepys saw Shakespeare's work on the stage the usurpation of the boys was over.

It was after the Restoration, too, that scenery, rich costume and scenic machinery became, to Pepys' delight, regular features of the theater. When the diarist saw "Hamlet" "done with scenes" for the first time he was most favorably impressed. Musical accompaniment was known to prerestoration days, but the orchestra was now for the first time placed on the floor of the house in front of the stage instead of in a side gallery. The musical accompaniment of plays developed very rapidly, and the methods of opera were applied to many of Shakespeare's pieces, notably to "The Tempest" and "Macbeth."—From "Pepys and Shakespeare," by Sidney Lee, in Fortnightly Review.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

How soon we learn that the average man's bark is about all there is to him.

When people say anything good about you, ever notice what a few are present?

We all of us claim to be natural, but we all of us know that the only time when we are not putting on is when we are asleep.

Somehow the hundred dollars some other man has always looks larger and as if it should go further than the hundred dollars you have.

There are not many sights more depressing than to meet a farmer's wagon on a country road going out from town with a coffin in it.

Hawaiian Huckleberry.

On the island of Hawaii are great thickets of the ohelo, or Hawaiian huckleberry (Vaccinium reticulatum), which the natives consider sacred to Pele, the goddess who is supposed to preside over the famous crater of Kilauea, and which, together with white pigs and chickens, are thrown by them into the boiling red lake during an eruption to appease the wrath of the aggressive dame and thus cause the rivers of lava to cease flowing on their destructive course. These berries grow in clusters on low bushes right on the very brink of the brimstone beds and are so numerous that a bushel may be easily gathered in half an hour. In appearance they somewhat resemble a cranberry, and the flavor is pleasantly suggestive of grapes.

The Word "Expire."

"Expire" in its literal sense is breathing out. Inspiration and expiration together constitute respiration. Izaak Walton observed that "if the inspiring or expiring organ of any animal be stopt it suddenly dies." The Romans spoke of "breathing out" the breath of life instead of "dying," by way of euphemism, just as they said "Vixit" (he has lived) instead of "he is dead." In all languages the reluctance frankly to say "dead" or "die" appears; hence such words and phrases as "pass away," "decease," "demise," "the departed," "defunct," "the late," "no more," "if anything should happen to me."

Perpetuating the Species.

There is a stringent law in Japan that when one camphor laurel is cut down another must be planted in its place. The tree is hardy and long lived, attaining to an enormous size. It is covered with a small leaf of a vivid green color. The seed, or berries, grow in clusters, resembling the black currant in size and appearance. And the wood is employed for every purpose, from cabinetmaking to shipbuilding.

He Guessed Right.

"Ah, me," exclaimed Mrs. Nagget, "my shopping was most unsatisfactory today!"

"Huh," grunted Nagget; "trying to get something for nothing, I suppose!"

"Yes, dear. I was after a birthday gift for you."

The Other Side.

"Do you think a little learning is a dangerous thing?"

"Possibly. But it isn't half so dangerous as the same amount of ignorance."

A MURDEROUS WEAPON.

The Explosive Harpoon, the Whale Hunter's Chief Reliance.

The explosive harpoon, which is the modern whale hunter's chief reliance, is a truly murderous weapon, six feet in length and strong in proportion, made chiefly of malleable iron and admirably designed for the slaying of the immense creatures. Its most striking feature next to the bomb head, which is operated by a time fuse and explodes in the vitals of the whale, is the anchorlike device that prevents the harpoon "drawing" out of the body again under the terrific strain of the wounded monster's frantic efforts to free itself. This consists of four hinged barbs, which lie along the shaft before it is fired, but which are forced apart and imbed themselves in the whale's body after he is hit, so that if the prize escapes, which sometimes occurs, it is only by breaking the rope.

When "fish" are numerous and there is a chance of killing more than one in a day a novel method is adopted with the first victim. When it is seen to be dead a hole is bored through its back into its stomach and air is pumped into it by a pipe from the steamer's engines until it is inflated like a great balloon. The orifice is then closed with a wooden plug, and a man is left alongside in a small boat to establish ownership, while the whaler steams off in quest of other prey. As many as five whales have been killed by a ship in one day, four is not an unusual "bag," and threes and twos are commonly got. A single ship killed twenty-two in a week, and the record year's work for one is 258, an amazing number when it is remembered that on stormy days it is impossible to cruise at all, as the sprays bury the gun, and that during the winter months fishing is abandoned. During that period the whales "strike off" the coast to escape the ice floes, to which the rorquals are not partial, being in this respect unlike their arctic congeners, whose habitat is now the remotest section of Hudson bay and the channels which strike north from its farthest bounds into the polar sea itself.

LINCOLN'S CARELESSNESS.

His Hat His Favorite Receptacle For Letters and Papers.

When Lincoln was postmaster of New Salem he used to tuck the letters inside his hat and deliver them whenever he happened to meet the persons to whom they were addressed. As this is a fair example of his business system, it may readily be imagined that the office of Stuart & Lincoln was not a model establishment, where there was a place for everything and everything in its place. And it was not. Indeed, as a managing clerk the junior partner would have been a hopeless failure, and as an attorney, in the technical sense of the term, he would never have distinguished himself. He disliked everything connected with the drudgery of legal routine, hated drawing the declarations and pleas, despised the artificialities and refinements which were even then beginning to creep into the pleadings and disregarded forms whenever it was possible to do so.

There was nothing mechanical, precise or methodical about the man, and in all those housewifely virtues which characterized the careful, orderly, exact solicitor he was utterly deficient. He never knew where his papers were, and apparently the only attempt he ever made to better the disorder was to write on one of his bundles of papers which littered his desk, "When you can't find it anywhere else, look in this." But that was long after the firm of Stuart & Lincoln had dissolved, and even then we find him explaining to a correspondent that he had placed his letter inside an old hat and had thus neglected answering it, which shows he had not wholly outgrown the habit of his postoffice days. Indeed, his hat continued to be his favorite receptacle for papers as long as he lived, and he never acquired any sense of order.—Frederick Trevor Hill in Century.

Moon Cure For Bald Heads.

The superstition in agricultural communities that the phases of the moon affect the germination and growth of seed has a parallel in a queer belief that the moon also influences the growth of hair on the head. Here is an old recipe. The baldheaded should take "two ounces of boar's grease, one dram of the ashes of burned bees, one dram of the ashes of southern wood, one dram of the juice of a white lily root, one dram of oil of sweet almonds and six drams of pure musk. Make an ointment of these and the day before the full moon shave the place and anoint it every day."

The Brute!

"This hat of mine," stormed the wife, "has been out of date for ten solid years."

"I should certainly have thought," responded her shameless husband, "that the styles would have swung back to it at least once in that length of time."

A Saving System.

"I saved a big pile of money today," said Mr. Hardhead.

"That is lovely! How?" said his wife.

"Instead of going to law with a man for what he owed me I let him have it."—London Tit-Bits.

perched upon the shoulders of the free citizens, while vast throngs pressed around to cheer and strong men struggled to touch the patriot's hand and load him with expressions of love and gratitude. And there was no simper upon Paola's face then, you may be sure. Since the tragedy at Bastro's that disagreeable expression had vanished forever, to be replaced by a manliness that was the fellow's most natural attribute, and fitted his fine features much better than the repulsive leer he had formerly adopted as a mask.

Valcour, still weak, but looking rarely beautiful in her womanly robes, rode in a carriage beside Francisco and shared in the fullness of his triumph. The patriots were heroes in those early days of the Republic. Even I, modest as had been my deeds, was cheered far beyond my deserts, and for Lesba they wove a wreath of flowering laurel, and forced the happy and blushing girl to wear it throughout our progress through the streets of the capital.

Fonseca invited us to the palace, where he had established his headquarters; but we preferred to go to the humbler home of Captain Mazanovitch, wherein we might remain in comparative retirement during the exciting events of those first days of rejoicing.

Afterward we witnessed the grand procession in honor of the Dictator. I remember that Fonseca and his old enemy Piexoto rode together in the same carriage, all feuds being buried in their common triumph. The bluff general wore his most gorgeous uniform and the lean statesman his shabby gray cloak. And in my judgment the adulation of the populace was fairly divided between these two champions, although the Dictator of the Republic bowed with pompous pride to right and left, while the little man who was destined to afterward become President of the United States of Brazil shrank back in his corner with assumed modesty. Yet Piexoto's eyes, shrewd and observing, were everywhere, and it may be guessed that he lost no detail of the day's events.

Paola should have been in that procession, likewise, for the people fairly idolized the former Minister of Police, and both Fonseca and Piexoto had summoned him to join them. But no; he preferred to sit at Valcour's side in a quiet, sunlit room, effacing himself in all eyes but hers, while history was making in the crowded streets of the capital.

Meantime Valcour mended daily, and the roses that had so long been strangers to her pale cheeks began to blossom prettily under the influence of Francisco's loving care.

They were happy days, I know; for Lesba and I shared them, although not so quietly. For the dear girl was all aglow with the triumph of Liberty, and dragged me as her escort to every mass-meeting or festival and every one of the endless processions until the enthusiasm of her compatriots had thoroughly tired me out. The Liberty of Brazil bade fair to deprive me of my own; but I bore the ordeal pretty well, in Lesba's society.

Then came a day when I obtained my reward. Valcour had made a quick recovery, and now needed only the strengthening influence of country air; so one bright morning we all boarded a special train and traveled to Cuyaba, reaching safely the de Pintra mansion in the early evening.

Captain Mazanovitch was with us. He had retired from active service to enjoy his remaining years in his daughter's society, and although he seldom allowed one of us to catch a glimpse of his eyes, the face of the old detective had acquired an expression of content that was a distinct advantage to it.

I had chosen to occupy my old room off the library, and early on the morning following our arrival I arose and passed out into the shrubbery. Far down the winding walks, set within the very centre of the vast flower gardens, was the grave of Dom Miguel, and thither I directed my steps. As I drew near I saw the square block of white marble that the patriots had caused to be erected above the last resting-place of their beloved chieftain. It bore the words

"MIGUEL DE PINTRA

Savior of Brazil"

and is to this day the mecca of all good republicans.

Lesba was standing beside the tomb as I approached. Her gown was as white as the marble itself, but a red rose lay upon her bosom and another above Dom Miguel. She did not notice my presence until I touched her arm, but then she turned and smiled into my eyes.

"'Savior of Brazil!'" she whispered softly. "It is splendid and fitting. Did you place it there, Robert?"

"No," I answered; "the credit is due to Piexoto. He claimed the privilege for himself and his associates, and I considered it his right."

"Dear uncle!" said she; and then we turned reverently away and strolled through the gardens. Every flower and shrub lay fair and fresh under the early sun, and we admired them and drank in their fragrance until suddenly, as we turned a corner of the hedge, I stopped and said:

"Lesba, it was here that I first met you; on this exact spot!"

"I remember," said she, brightly. "It was here that I phophesied you would be true to the Cause."

"And it was here that I loved you," I added; "for I cannot remember a moment since that first glimpse of your dear face that my heart has not been your very own."

She grew sober at this speech, and I watched her face anxiously.

"Tell me, Lesba," said I at last, "will you be my wife?"

"And go to your country?" she asked, quickly.

I hesitated.

"All my interests are there, and my people, as well," I answered.

"But I cannot leave Brazil," she rejoined, positively; "and Brazil needs you, too, Robert, in these years when she is beginning to stand alone and take her place among nations. Has not Fonseca offered you a position as Director of Commerce?"

"Yes; I am grateful for the honor. But I have large and important business interests at home."

"But your uncle is fully competent to look after them. You have told me as much. We need you here more than they need you at home, for your commercial connections and special training will be of inestimable advantage in assisting the Republic to build up its commerce and extend its interests in foreign lands. Brazil needs you. I need you, Robert! Won't you stay with us—dear? For a time, at least?"

It bore the words: "Miguel de Pinta, Savior of Brazil."

On those terms I compromised with Lesba, and we were married on the same day that Valcour and Francisco Paola became man and wife.

"I should have married you, anyway," Lesba confided to me afterward; "but I could not resist the chance to accomplish one master-stroke for the good of my country." And she knew the compliment would cancel the treachery even before I had kissed her.

Dom Miguel's old home became our country residence, and we clung to it every day I could spare from my duties at the capital. It was here our little Valcour was born, and here that Francisco came afterward to bless our love and add to our happiness and content.

The Paolas are our near neighbors, and often Captain Mazanovitch drives over with their son Harcliffe to give the child a romp with our little ones. The old detective is devoted to the whole noisy band, but yesterday I was obliged to reprove Francisco for poking his chubby fingers into the captain's eyes in a futile endeavor to make him raise the ever-drooping lids.

The five-year limit expired long since; but I have never been able to fully separate my interests from those of Brazil, and although our winters are usually passed in New Orleans, where Uncle Nelson remains the vigorous head of our firm, it is in sunny Brazil that my wife and I love best to live.

THE END.

Hot Pipe Bites the Tongue.

"You see smoking tobacco advertised every now and again guaranteed not to bite the tongue. Dealers sell it, of course, but inwardly they smile at the idea." So spoke a tobacconist. "You see, it's this way. The fire in the pipe will bite the tongue if the tobacco burns too fast—namely, if it is a very loose long cut tobacco or a very short, dry cut and not packed closely enough in the bowl. There is a point where tobacco may be too closely packed to draw and a point where it may be so loosely packed that it burns fast, and minute sparks pass through the stem and reach the smoker's mouth. These are the causes of burnt tongues."

The Elephant's Trunk.

An elephant's trunk answers that animal as nose and hand. He also uses it for drinking, drawing up the water through his trunk and then pouring it into his mouth. The elephant has a singular habit when suffering from the heat of poking his nose down his throat into his stomach and withdrawing a quantity of water, which he then squirts over his back and sides to cool his body. As during a warm day this operation is repeated about once in every five minutes riding an elephant in the sun is no pleasant undertaking.

Upside Down.

"So you don't believe in college education?"

"No, sir. After graduation I nearly starved to death practicing law."

"But you look prosperous now."

"Yes, sir. I went into vaudeville and made a fortune balancing a barrel on my feet while standing on my head."

Young Linguists.

"It's a queer thing about children—babies," said the proud father. "If I say 'cat' to my boy, the nearest he can get to repeating it is 'tat,' but if I make up a word like 'oobljooble' that youngster can speak it more fluently than I can."

THE DOUBLE CHIN.

Correct Treatment For the Lower Part of the Face.

There is scarcely any one who retains the contour of the lower part of the face after the age of thirty. Either the underjaw becomes thin or the dreaded double chin arrives, and both could be prevented if a few precautions were taken against the tendency of nature to play tricks with this part.

The correct treatment for the lower part of the face is to rest the face in the palms of both hands, with the fingers resting on the temples. The thumbs will then be along the jawbone, and the cheek will rest against the full flat of the hand. In this position knead the face gently, always bearing in mind the "lifting" process of the flesh on the face. The same treatment applies for the double chin and the emaciated face. As many people will doubt this statement, it is best explained that either condition has been brought about by sluggish circulation, and this results sometimes in an insufficient and sometimes in a superfluous deposit of fatty tissue. Therefore massage, which equalizes matters, repairs the wrong in both cases. It builds up wasted tissues and causes to be absorbed any unhealthy deposit of fat.

Of course a good skin food must be used throughout these exercises, and all creams that have animal or mineral fats encourage the growth of hair, so must be avoided. In buying cream it will be found the dearest of economies to buy the cheapest.

HER CONFIDANT.

That Is What a Mother Should Be to Her Daughter.

As one grows older it seems harder and harder to enter into the plays and fancies of the children around us, even if they are our very own. There are mothers who have such busy lives that any exertion that is not absolutely necessary is really an impossibility, but many are too lazy mentally and physically to keep in touch with their children, mothers who wail aloud that their children do not give them their confidence.

No child who had absolute confidence in her mother ever went very far wrong.

One cannot help being struck by the lack of sympathy between the average mother and daughter or father and son, especially as the children grow up, and the fault seems to be largely with the parents. They are so apt to be the parents, not the friend and companion to whom the children would go with even the silliness of youth and have them received as such, not as things of lasting importance, and to be referred to again and again after they have passed and are sinking into oblivion.

"Oh, I can't tell mother anything, she lays so much stress, so much importance, on every trifle and never forgets it or lets me. I wish I had a mother I could tell things to," is the cry one hears continually from schoolgirls.—New York Press.

KITCHEN HELPS.

Use soap and wood ashes to brighten pans and kettles that have been used over an open fire.

Grease the upper inside edge of the pan in which chocolate is being made, and it will not boil over.

An old bookcase set on the table, back to the wall, makes a respectable imitation of a kitchen cabinet and saves many steps.

Always place a knife which has been used in cutting onions immediately under the cold water spigot to prevent the odor from clinging to the blade.

When washing a sieve don't use soap. A brush and clear water are generally all that is needed, but soda should be used if the sieve be greasy.

Every well appointed kitchen should boast of one good sieve and a first class skimmer of the wire gauze sort. These are quite essential in addition to the ordinary perforated utensils.

Value of a Correct Walk.

A woman who leads a very active life has a theory that the preservation of a good figure depends to some extent on the manner of walking. Many people, she says, as they advance in years allow themselves to walk heavily and without elasticity, so that the whole weight rests on the lower part of the limbs at every step, the only effect of exercise being weariness of the legs and feet. Instead of this the body should be held erect and poised so as to have a perfect balance. In this way the muscles are braced and strengthened throughout, the lungs must of necessity be well expanded, and it seems quite reasonable to suppose that the tendency to increase of weight may be checked. At all events a lighter step and a brisker and more enjoyable manner of walking can be kept up, and that in itself is a very great gain.

An Economical Dinner.

Fore quarter of lamb is the most economical roast to be had and one of the very best. Order a large piece, at least seven pounds, and have five or six chops taken off first and then two pounds of the neck and rib ends for a stew or lamb pie. The shoulder blade and bits of bone are to be made into a soup with the ordinary vegetables and either a cup of beans, mashed, or a cup of tomatoes to give body to it; the whole, of course, served clear.

The roast may or may not be stuffed in the pocket left by the shoulder blade's removal. The peas may be canned ones for convenience or a fresh vegetable, such as cauliflower, may be substituted. If one wishes to have this a company dinner, a simple green salad may follow the lamb, with French dressing and wafers.—Harper's Bazar.

ORTON'S ORDERS

By CHARLES WILSHIN

Copyright, 1905, by J. W. Muller

It was, of course, a very foolish thing to write a letter of acceptance to the man one intended to refuse, and yet Aline took a childish delight in writing the dainty little note and thinking of the expression that would come to Orton's face if he should read it.

Then she tucked it into the flap of her lap desk and on her last remaining sheet composed the letter in which she sought to make her refusal as easy as possible.

It is no easy thing to make a pen say "no" when the heart cries "yes," and the rest of the party was ready to start for the woods before she had completed it.

Of course she could not say that it was her stepmother's order and that it was obedience to command and not the answer of her heart. She could only hope that he would see how the matter stood and understand that she had not been flirting with him through those long weeks before Marquand and his money had appeared upon the scene and had been pleased to bestow his attentions upon her.

Until then Mrs. Appleton had regarded Jack Orton with favor. He had money, not much, but enough for two, with excellent prospects, but he could not hope to compete with Marquand, and Mrs. Appleton wondered why Aline should be so stubborn as to continue to care more for Orton.

There had been one scene after another, usually terminating in Mrs. Appleton's hysterics, and at last the girl's will had been broken down, and the negative she could not utter was now signed to paper and intrusted to Billy, who promised faithfully to take it to Orton's room and place it on his table.

Billy was perfectly honest in his intentions, but just as he was scampering through the hall the cook called that she had an apple turnover for him, and, tucking the note in his pocket, he turned his attention to the turnover.

HE WAS JUST ABOUT TO MAKE A FORMAL OFFER OF HIS HAND.

It was perhaps an hour after that that Orton, coming back from the postoffice, found Billy on the front piazza playing train. He was the conductor and the other children were passengers. Billy had a punch used for progressive euchre games and was collecting tickets with an enjoyment dashed only by the fact that he had no engineer to whom he could signal. Billy was supremely contemptuous of girls and declined to allow either of his three fair passengers to act in that capacity.

It was with evident joy that he hailed Orton's advent and installed him in the front chair with earnest injunctions to run the train carefully and to stop in case the emergency signal was given on the bell rope. Billy had ridden much on the branch line that summer, and he had followed Burton, the signal conductor, about until he had learned all about his workings.

Jack Orton entered upon the performance of his duties with a solemnity becoming in the engineer of the flier, and if he discovered an unheard of number of cows upon the track it was all a part of the game.

They pulled into the next stop seven minutes ahead of the schedule, and Billy came running up to compliment his engineer.

"Take her a little slow when we pull out," he commanded, with an odd little imitation of his model's manner. "I've got a train load of foolish women, and they get scared when you run so fast. Got your orders?"

"I thought," laughed Orton, "that the conductor got the orders."

Billy blushed apologetically. "Guess I forgot," he explained. "I'll run over to the telegraph office."

The "telegraph office" was the nearest open window, but the operator was shamefully supplied with stationery, for Billy dug into pocket after pocket without result. Then he spied Aline's lap desk and darted toward it. There was a half sheet in the flap, and presently he came toward Jack.

"Here's your orders," he said gravely. "Mine says, 'Clear track to Robert's Crossing.' That's what yours say?"

"Right," confirmed Jack. "All ready, sir?"

Billy dashed down the line of chairs and with a wave of his arm swung on to the train and began collecting and punching tickets already punched almost beyond the semblance of paper. So engrossed was he in his occupation that it was several minutes before he noticed that his engineer had stepped off the train and was striding through the rain. He, too, left the flier, with its precious feminine freight, and started off after him.

"Aren't you going to play any more?" he demanded as he caught up with the man. Orton started.

"I declare, Billy," he laughed, "I had forgotten all about being engineer. I want to catch the crowd at the woods. You'll forgive me this time, won't you, old fellow?"

"I guess I can get Gracie Arnold to be engineer," said Billy doubtfully. "But, I say, can I have those orders? I want some more tickets."

Orton laughed. "Here's a whole lot of paper," he said, drawing some old letters from his pocket. "I need the one you gave me." And he was off down the road.

The chestnut grove was only a couple of miles away, and he was soon there. He had not been invited to be one of the party. It was Mrs. Appleton's own party, and Orton had not been popular with that lady since the advent of Marquand, but he went in search of the party with a happy heart.

He found Aline and Marquand apart from the group. She flashed him one glance of welcome from her eyes, then dropped the lids on them while the red spread over her face. In the instant of greeting she had forgotten the note, and with recollection of the cold, formal phrasing of her letter she became ashamed to meet his glance.

Marquand regarded the intrusion in no pleasant fashion and began to sulk. He had been assured by Mrs. Appleton that Aline would accept him, and this nutting party had been arranged to make an opportunity for his proposal. Mrs. Appleton had drawn the others deeper into the woods, and he was just about to make formal offer of his hand when Orton came up.

He was just contemplating the possibility of saying something that would give Jack a hint to take himself elsewhere when that young man spoke up.

"I say, Marquand," he began, "I wish you'd look up the others for a bit. I've something very particular to tell Miss Appleton."

Marquand looked at Aline for encouragement in his refusal, but she would not return his glance. He paused irresolute for a moment and then strode off to search for Mrs. Appleton.

Aline looked up with a frightened glance. "I told you not to come," she murmured. "What will they say?"

"I was acting under orders," he insisted, holding out the letter. She seized it and looked at it.

"I wrote you another," she faltered. "Where did you get this?"

"Billy was playing train, and I was the engineer," he explained. "He was looking for train orders for me, and as he had used up a letter he had in his pocket for tickets he had to make a raid on your desk. When I saw this I could not wait for your return. I obeyed orders, like a good engineer."

"I think it was fate," she murmured. "I will obey the orders too."

And Orton never knew how much he owed to Billy.

Knew Her at Once.

Minister Wu once talked at a mothers' congress in Washington. He told how mothers-in-law were reverenced in China. Then he said that all the mothers before him would be mothers-in-law some day, and therefore he would tell them something that they might remember and profit by. "A parlor maid," he began, "answered a ring at the doorbell one morning and a few moments later ascended to her mistress. 'If you please, ma'am,' she said, 'the strangest lady is downstairs. She won't give her name, and she has taken off her coat and hat, and she opened the two closets and rummaged through them, and then she looked at the windows and shook her head, and she rubbed her finger over the mantel and the piano, and then she held it up to see the dust on it, and now she is'—But the mistress interrupted calmly. 'Dear me!' she said. 'My husband's mother wasn't expected back from Texas till December.'"

Worldly Wisdom.

There is a certain young minister who has been remarkably successful in paying off the debts of the various churches to which he has been assigned from time to time. A brother minister who was laboring earnestly by means of bazaars, fairs and other affairs to accomplish a like happy result at his own church went to him and inquired the secret of his success.

"And I observe that you never have to resort to my present methods," he concluded.

The successful one smiled.

"No," he replied. "You see, when we need money some good sister suggests a bazaar. Then I call on the husbands of the married ladies of the membership and explain to them that in order to raise a certain sum we are finding it necessary to hold a bazaar. We have never had to actually bring the affair off."—Harper's Weekly.

Mozart's Memory.

Mozart had a memory for music and for nothing else. On attending the papal mass at the Sistine chapel he was greatly impressed with the musical service and asked for a copy, but was told none could be given him, as the music was not allowed to go out. He went to the next service, listened attentively, went away and wrote down the whole from memory. When "Don Giovanni" was first performed, there was not time to copy a part for the harpsichord, so Mozart conducted the entire opera, about three hours long, and played harpsichord accompaniment to the songs and choruses without a note of music to assist his memory.

FAULTS OF CHILDREN.

Investigate the Causes Before Resorting to Punishment.

A large amount of so called haughtiness among children may be accounted for upon grounds which quite exclude the desirability of punishment for its correction, says a writer in the London Lancet. It may be due to the fact that the child has had insufficient sleep or is overtired after a long day's excitement.

Children may be restless or restive as the direct result of being undertired. They may have been confined at home for the whole day owing to the inclemency of the weather, and as a consequence the only apparent outlet for their restrained physical energy is found by annoying those who have charge of them.

There are also some cases in which an incipient physical or mental disorder may manifest itself by symptoms which very strongly resemble willful perversity unless the possibility of the onset of an illness is borne in mind. It is notorious that ill timed punishment in these cases at times has precipitated a severe attack. Stuttering and shyness are also likely to be aggravated by being noticed. A deaf child is often inattentive and has been occasionally classed among the mentally defective.

It has been said that many children are punished for the faults of their teachers. This is undoubtedly true when such faults exhibit themselves as a continually close atmosphere in the schoolroom or a prolonged strained and cramped attitude of the pupil's body while he is seated at work. Frequent periods of exercise in the open air are essential in order to arouse the circulation and to stimulate the mind if a mischievous disposition is to be combated.

FOR PINS AND THREAD.

A Cushion and Spool Case to Use When Traveling.

For the convenience of the traveler a cushion such as is here portrayed is one of the new ideas. It is simple, decorative and not alone serves as a pincushion, but as a spool case, the number of spools being determined by the size of the cushion. A fine grade of white linen canvas is chosen for the foundation brier stitching in a delicate shade of pink, blue, lavender or yellow, imparting the decorative touch and color note. Two circular pieces of canvas about six inches in diameter are bound separately with narrow satin ribbon in the desired shade and headed by feather stitching in silk to match. The two pieces are caught together at the edge at intervals just wide enough to let an ordinary spool of thread slip in, the spools being held in place by narrow ribbon run through each one and caught in a smart bow at either side. The cushion is placed in the center of the two circles of canvas and securely fastened by stitches of silk corresponding to the ribbon binding. Being flat, the cushion takes up little room in bag or trunk, and if washing ribbon and silk are used the canvas foundation may be easily laundered.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Where Christianity Began.

The hills of Bethlehem are full of caves, natural and artificial, and many of them have historic significance. There is the milk grotto, in which Joseph and Mary are said to have concealed themselves before their flight into Egypt to escape the evil designs of Herod. The snowy whiteness of the soft chalk out of which it is hewn is ascribed to the spilling of a few drops of the Virgin's milk when she nursed the infant Jesus. Another grotto is pointed out as that in which St. Jerome for more than thirty years led the life of a hermit when bitter factional dissensions had forced him to leave Rome. On a western hill a rock strewn plateau, around which stately terebinths stand guard, marks a place where the ancient Hebrews brought their sacrifices unto the Lord. It is a solemn place, well fitted to excite devout thoughts—a place where a man might well keep communion with his Maker. In its broader features Bethlehem is almost unchanged since the days of David.

Vegetable Rennets.

Those who would like to make cheese on a very small scale are often troubled to get proper rennet to produce coagulation of the milk. A scientist says that if the leaves of the common butterwort are placed in a strainer and the milk fresh from the cow is poured over it the milk will soon become thick and has a most delicious flavor. The yellow bedstraw also possesses the properties of curdling milk, and the natives of Cheshire prefer it as a rennet to all other sorts. The leaves and flowers are put in the strainer, and the milk is slowly poured over them. The flower heads of the garden artichoke also possess the property of coagulating milk. In view of the carelessness sometimes noted in people who prepare rennet in the ordinary fashion this vegetable rennet is worthy of attention. The leaves, properly cleaned and prepared, would be very much safer and more hygienic than animal substances which may go through chemical changes that unfit them for food.

Old Statues.

Herodotus makes Solon tell Croesus of several men happier than he. Two brothers, Cleobis and Biton of Argos, he said, when oxen were lacking to draw their mother, the priestess of Hera, to the temple several miles distant, harnessed themselves to the cart. When the mother, proud of her sons and moved by the plaudits of the crowd, had prayed to Hera that her sons might receive the best gifts the gods had to bestow, they lay down in the shade of the temple and never waked. Herodotus says that their statues were sent to Delphi. Homolle found at Delphi two statues practically identical, of finest archaic work, made early in the sixth century B. C. Since one of them bore the signature of an Argive sculptor, Polymedes, in archaic letters, we may believe that the story of Herodotus is based on fact and that we have before us today the identical statues.—Chautauquan.

Proficient.

When western Iowa was newly settled the farmers in an isolated section banded themselves together as a school district and proceeded to choose one of their number committeeman. A log schoolhouse was erected, and soon a young woman came that way seeking a chance to teach. The committeeman was designated to ascertain her fitness.

When the time for the ordeal arrived the public official was at his wit's end. He had been examined himself often enough, but that was when he was attending district school fifty years before. The very thought of conducting an examination himself, and for a teacher at that, staggered him. He could not think of a question to ask.

The young woman sat waiting, and the old man teetered nervously on his tiptoes.

"Well, now, Miss Burden," he said cautiously at last, "kin you say the alphabet back'ards?"

Miss Burden could, and did.

"Fine!" cried the committeeman. "I'll just indorse your certificate." He wrote it thus:

"Fully profeeshunt."

'TIS THE SPRING FEVER

THAT MAKES US ALL LIKE HARTS PANTING AFTER BROOKS.

OLD LONGING FOR THE WOODS

To Those Who Must Repress the Desire Owing to Exigency of Their Situation in Life a Great Peace May Come to the Tired Soul by Contemplating the Text of Dr. Talmage's Sermon.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 10.—Like a breath from the cool woods in the midst of summer heat this sermon comes with its vivid pictures of animal life and their spiritual application. The text is Psalm xlii, 1, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks."

What is the spring fever? What is that tired feeling which creeps over one as the months of May and June draw near? What is that exhausting sensation which makes the hand sluggish at its work and the brain dull as it tries to originate a thought and the legs heavy as lead when we get up in the mornings just preceding the summer? We vehemently deny the accusation that we are lazy. We never have been lazy in our lives. We daily go to our office and begin work even a little earlier than usual. We stay there longer than at any other time of the year. But in spite of ourselves the results of our work are not only less in quantity, but far poorer in quality than at any other time of the year. We wonder what ails us, and we go to the doctor to get a tonic. The doctor tells us: "You are bilious. Your liver is torpid." Or he says, "You are overworked and must let up." But deep down in our hearts we know what is the matter. We have just the old longing for the woods. In the springtime it comes to us as naturally as the buds come to the flower gardens. It is not medicine we want, but the mountain air, with the tree branch for a covering and the soft grass and the leaves for a bed.

But with most of us the longings must be repressed. We may, however, give our thoughts a rest by dwelling on such a theme as I have chosen for this morning's treatment. I said to myself, "Probably there are many with the same longing so I will choose a text that will carry our thoughts away to the woods and the waters," and as I thought this beautiful text of the psalmist sprang to my mind, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

Ah, yes, I said to myself, we are all like panting harts. We are like the hunted and the thirsty deer seeking the water brooks. And, strange to say, as soon as I uttered the text in my study a wonderful peace came to my soul. I seemed to see the great, gentle eyed stag and deer and fawn watching me from the thickets. I seemed to hear the birds singing their love ditties. I seemed to see the trout leaping out of the brooks. I seemed to see the great cliffs rising above the valleys and the baldheaded mountains, like grim and grizzly patriarchs, standing sentinel over all. Yes, I said to myself, for a little while at least I can go.

Goodbye, old city! We are about to leave you now. We are going to climb way up the mountains for a little while, and as we lie down upon the bank of a creek or river by one of the beautiful deer licks we learn, in the first place, that the hart is dependent upon the water brook for his physical existence. He is not like the camel, that can store up his drinking water and carry it about with him for days; he is not like the lizard or the rattlesnake or the horned toad or the Gila monster, that live in the desert week in and week out, month in and month out, seemingly without water, or, if they do get water, they must absorb it from the bristling cactus, which grows everywhere around. But a deer is like a human being. Take water away from him, and he will die. Thus you can never find the deer far away from the water brooks. He has two reasons for his dependence on the stream. First, he is not a carnivorous animal. He does not live on flesh, but on herbs, and he must live where the water makes the grass spring up into life. In the next place, he must himself be able at least once or twice a day to daintily step out of the woods, lift high his head to sniff for dangers and then gently move down and put his delicate lips into the cool waters of the babbling brooks. And so certain is the deer to go to the waters to drink in the evening or the early morning that if a man is a lazy hunter and knows where the animals are accustomed to drink all he has to do is to go there and hide in the bushes, and instead of having to stalk the deer he will find the deer coming up within easy rifle range.

But these water courses suggest another thought. What bountiful provision God has made for the wants of all creatures. How the forest teems with herbage for the hungry deer and water for him when he is thirsty. Thus as God gives drink and food to the deer I find that he is daily providing for our hunger and slaking our thirst. Would that we might all feel that as God is feeding the birds of the air and is making the grass of the fields to grow and is caring for the timid deer of the forest and the prairies, so he is feeding and clothing us. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks for daily sustenance, so may my heart pant after thee, O God!"

But not alone for daily sustenance must the deer go to the water brooks. He must also run there for safety when the hounds and the hunters get after him. He must run even as the human soul must run to the divine water brooks when temptations and persecutions get on his trail. The more you study the figure of the hart being pursued by the dogs the more you can see your own life being beset by temptations and by persecutions. Unless you have other strength given to you than your own, you, like the hart, must surely die.

Like the noble hind were you started forth in life. Tall, straight, broad of antlers were you. The rich, good blood of many noble generations was flowing in your veins. Your eye was quick and clear, your ear keen and alert. Your foot was as swift as the wild gazelle's. If simply one dog had come near you you could have grappled with him and overcome him, but Satan as a sportsman never hunts his game with but one mangy cur. When he starts forth for his prey he lets loose a whole pack of hounds. As you look back into your past life it is not the baying of one dog that you hear, but of myriads of dogs. Their calls seem to have come from all directions when one of these hounds gave the signal that he had struck your trail. You knew then, as the stag knows when he hears the call of the deep throated hound, that your safety is not in the point of your antlers, but in the swiftness of your flight.

When the hounds of temptation and persecution get upon your trail you are in almost exactly the same position as the belated Russian traveler who is caught in a snowstorm upon the wild, desolate moors. You have often read the stories of those tragedies. Now we can see the man bundled up in his furs in the sleigh quietly driving toward his home. The hour grows late; the stars begin to come out. Suddenly there comes echoing over those Russian moors a weird call. The man shudders. He turns his head sharply over his shoulder to listen. He wonders if there is a mistake. Then comes that strange call again. He mutters to himself: "Wolves! Wolves! O God, save me! The wolves!" He grips the lines and the whip and begins to beat his horses into a mad run. Nearer and nearer comes the call. Then shadowy forms are seen leaping after him. The man turns and raises his rifle and sends a bullet between a pair of the gleaming eyes. For a little while the pack halts to banquet off the quivering flesh of one of their own dead. Then on and on comes the pack again, and again the rifle speaks. Then one horse is sacrificed. Then another. The race is a run for life. If the man is not able to reach the inclosure of the house he himself must be offered up to the unappeasable hunger of the wolves. Is not that the way trials and temptations come after you? Did they not come as a pack of hungry wolves? Did they not come as wild dogs upon the track of a deer?

You could have stood the poverty. You could have stood the death of your child. You could have stood the calumnies and the misrepresentations of the world if those misfortunes had assailed you singly and alone, but your troubles tried to overthrow you. They came upon you as a pack of wild dogs on the track of a deer. Their voices sounded like the calls of the coyotes. I remember well when I first heard the coyote's call. It was blood curdling to me, for I had never heard the like of it before. I was then a novice at camping. We were away off in the mountains on the outskirts of an Indian reservation. I was alone in camp at the time. It is a strange sensation to be alone out in the woods, to feel that though you may put your hands to your lips and utter the loudest of halloes, yet the only answer which will come to you is the echo of your own voice which the cliffs throw back upon your ears. Well, I was alone in the woods. Suddenly the whole river bed below me was filled with the most awful sounds. There came floating up the wildest, weirdest, strangest of choruses. At times the voices that I heard in that chorus arose like the anguished wailings of lost souls. At times they sounded like the yelling of fiends or the gloatings of inquisitors in the dark ages. At times they seemed to be the mocking and the derisive laughter of a lot of depraved children. They seemed to be not one voice, but millions of voices. I found out after awhile that those voices came from a pack of miserable coyotes on the track of a jackrabbit running for his life. That is the way the bayings of the hounds must sound upon the startled ear of the fleeing stag. That is the way the voices of the hounds of temptation and persecution sounded to us when Satan first let loose his hellish pack upon our trail. Temptations did not come at us as a little cur might growl and snarl at our heels. They came to us like a pack of starving wolves baying upon the track of a deer. Then there was only one means of safety for us, and that was the safety of flight. As with the hart panting after the water brooks so was it with us.

"But," you say, "the deer should not be afraid of the baying of the dogs if he can only hear it in time. Why," you say, "just go out to any of our zoological gardens and study the hoof of the deer. Never was there a hoof or a leg like it. Truly the speed of the deer is as swift as the wind. The dog's speed is as nothing compared to it." That is true, my friends, in one sense, but false in another sense. A deer is like a racing horse which has been trained to run a quarter of a mile. For that distance he can travel as fast as an express train, but try to run him two or three miles and his wind will leave him, and he will be helpless. Now, the deer is swifter than the hound in the short run, but the hound has the greater staying powers. In the long race he will outrun the deer. Unless the deer's tracks are destroyed, the pursuing dogs will certainly overtake their prey and pull down his proud antlers into the dust. Now, what does the deer do to obliterate those tracks? He runs as the fugitive slave used to run when startled by the hounds baying upon his tracks—he runs until the bulging eyes almost burst from their sockets. He runs until the hemorrhage almost gushes from his gaping mouth. He runs until he reaches the water brooks, where is his only hope of safety.

When the deer comes to the brook or the creek he leaps into the centre of it and runs up or down stream; then, coming to the edge of the river, he runs along a little farther; then he makes a great leap off into the woods and is gone. The dogs soon reach the edge of that river or creek, but they yelp in vain. They hunt this way and that, but the scent has vanished. Oh, my friends, have you and I tried to makes the enemies of our souls helpless by seeking the divine water brooks? We cannot longer fight those temptations and persecutions. You and I know that they are coming nearer and nearer to destroy us each day. Will we flee to God's water brooks? Will we wade down into God's great river of mercy and be protected by his love?

But as I see the strong, powerful deer heading toward the water brooks I also see the poor wounded hind limping there. No one but a hunter with a heart of stone could find enjoyment in this almost helpless animal's slaughter. Perhaps the bullet has cut a deep hole in the side, out of which the blood is flowing. Her tongue is hanging from her mouth; her strength is almost gone. But off in the distance she sees the water. She limps on to the bank; she wades down; she dips her parched lips into the cool stream; then she plunges in and swims out. Aha! She is saved; she is saved; Yes, she is saved, just as the poor, wounded, bleeding human soul can be saved by God's love if that soul will plunge just once in the water brooks of divine mercy and love.

There are two other facts to which I still want to call your attention. The first is that water brooks not only saved the hunted deer by throwing the dogs off the trail, but also by making it possible for the deer to run in a straight line away from the dogs. I was very much surprised to find out that these water brooks are to the deer what the compass is to a hunter in the woods—it keeps the deer from traveling a circle.

The pursued deer unless drawn by the scent of water always runs in a circle. No sooner has a deer been shot at and the dogs been turned loose than at once the deer unless he has the guiding scent of water seems to lose his reasoning faculties. He will run like the wind. He will run on and on—five, ten, fifteen or even twenty miles—but unless he can scent the water brooks from afar he will always travel in a circle and come back to the very place where the hunter first shot at him—back to the place where he will be shot at again. This circling flight of the deer is universally recognized. Some of the different state Legislatures have enacted game laws which make it a felony for any man to hunt the deer by the means of hounds. Why? If they did not make such a law the deer of those states would seen be exterminated. The circling flight of the deer makes it a very simple matter for a few hunters to stand in one place and shoot at the running game again and again until the deer have been entirely slaughtered.

Ah, my friends, as I thought of the poor deer traveling in a circle how quickly my mind thought of man as a human hart traveling in a circle without the aid of the divine water brooks! We think at times that by our own strength we can overcome our sins. Do we? Alas, we seem to travel in a circle. Is not that old taste of liquor coming back? Is not that old desire of sin continually gathering strength and assailing us harder and bitterer every time? If we have not the aid of the divine water brooks are we not continually traveling in a circle? There is only one sure way for you to escape sin, and that is to plunge into the divine water brooks. But more than that, there is only one way for you to keep free from sin in the future, and that is to scent God's water brooks from afar, for if you do not as sure as you live you will circle around. The circle may be large or small, but it is certain to be a circle, and you will come back to that very sin which nearly destroyed you some weeks or some months or some years ago.

But if it is impossible for the deer to save his own life from the pursuing hounds it is even less possible for him to save the life of his young by his own strength. The deer knows he cannot do this, and so his chief duty toward his young is to conceal them during their years of helplessness. Then, as soon as the young are strong enough, he leads them to the water brooks and teaches them how they can there escape the hounds. First they conceal the young. Did you ever see the birth chamber of a little fawn? The guides tell you it is very hard to get into the royal palaces of Europe to see the private rooms where the princes and princesses of the royal houses of England and Germany and Italy and Russia were born, but it is not more difficult than to find the birth chambers of the fawns. When the does are about to become mothers they hide themselves far, far away from the eyes of beast or man. There, in the darkest jungles, the little ones come into the world. So carefully are the helpless fawns hidden away from the merciless eyes of the hunter that Job speaks of these secret birth chambers by asking the difficult question, "Canst thou mark where the hinds do calve?" But as soon as the young fawns are strong enough the hind leads her young to the water brooks. She seems to say: "Daughter, I cannot protect thee. Only the water brooks can protect thee. This is the way to escape the dogs and the wolves." Are we like the hinds, leading our little ones to the water brooks? Are we saying: "Come, child, I cannot guide thee. I cannot save thee. Only God can care for thee. Come, let me lead thee to him." Oh, the helplessness of a hind or a hart caring for their young!

Thus, my friends, you find two symbols in these words of my text. In the first you find the poor hunted sinner seeking the spiritual water brooks and there finding safety; in the second we can find the sinner, hounded and persecuted by sin, refusing to seek the divine water brooks and consequently being destroyed.

There is a beautiful legend that many centuries ago Diana was chased by a hunter. Diana when she turned and saw him said, "Begone, thou human stag and die the death of a hunted beast!" Immediately horns began to grow from the young man's forehead; his fair white skin became covered with a reddish hair; his foot changed into the cloven hoof of a deer. Then through the woods the doomed man heard the cries of his late companions, who were out hunting. He heard the yelping of his own dogs. Though Actaeon turned and ran for his life, those dogs overtook him and tore him limb from limb. Oh, my friends, are we, like Actaeon, straying into forbidden paths, pursuing vain pleasures? Is it possible that we, like Actaeon, are being hunted by trials and temptations? Then in our danger let us fly to the refuge God has provided. Shall we be like the psalmist of old and say, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God!"

Look After the Hustler.

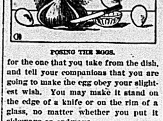
The pig is a hustler every day.
Be slow to condemn an old sow that does good work.

OBEDIENT EGGS.

You Can Make Them Stand Just How and Where You Please.

Let us tell you how you may have a little fun. Puncture the shell of a raw egg with a pin, and through the hole thus made extract the contents. When the shell has become thoroughly dry pour fine sand through the pin hole until the egg is about one-fourth filled. Then seal up the hole with white wax, and your imitation egg will be as natural in appearance as a real one.

The next time boiled eggs are served at breakfast, substitute your sand egg for the one that you take from the dish, and tell your companions that you are going to make the egg obey your slightest wish. You may make it stand on the edge of a knife or on the rim of a glass, no matter whether you put it sideways or endways.



POSING THE EGGS.

The only precaution necessary is to tap the egg gently every time you desire to place it in any position, so as to make the sand settle at the bottom, and the weight of the sand will keep it as you wish it to be. This is called the obedient egg.

Now let us tell you how to make the disobedient egg, with which you may have even more fun than with the obedient one. Make the hole in the shell large enough to allow you to introduce half an ounce of fine shot, together with a little powdered sealing wax.

This done, seal up the hole neatly with white wax and then warm the egg gently over the fire. This will give you a fixed center of gravity in the egg, and no matter how you may pretend to place it the weight of the shot, held in a mass by the sealing wax, will drag it away from its position just as soon as you release it.

FUNNY PEOPLE.

They Tattoo Their Bodies and Walk on High Stilts.

The first travelers who visited the Marquesas Islands (in the Pacific ocean) found them peopled with a magnificent race of athletes. Their clothes lasted until death, for their costume was the skin with which their Creator covered their bodies. These islanders beautifully decorated themselves with tattooing, from the crowns of their heads to the tips of their toes. As they are an enormous race this was no small undertaking. Their chiefs were chosen on account of their size, and several of them have measured six feet ten inches in height.

These people are the greatest stilt walkers in the world. This seems strange, for they are big enough without the aid of stilts. On stilts they execute performances which would drive the stilt walking clown at the New York Hippodrome out of his mind with envy. On them they run races, jump, dance, and a great mark of politeness in the islands is for one stilt walking savage to trip another one up—one should say down, for the tripped person usually comes down with a vengeance.

The stilts the Marquesans use are a little different from those of our boys. In place of straps the block of the Marquesas stilt curves over so as to hold the foot more securely.

Can You See Air?

If air cannot be seen, what is it that we see quivering above a field on a hot summer day, or even above a hot stove in the house? That question has puzzled many a head, both old and young. The answer usually given is that it is heat, but heat cannot be seen, and therefore it is not heat.

The explanation of the phenomenon is really quite simple, like all such things, when we hear it. As a matter of fact, it is air that we see quivering, but heat makes invisible. The quivering is caused by the upward passage, close by each other, of small currents of air of different temperatures, in which the rays of light are irregularly refracted, and this makes the currents visible.

Conundrums.

Why is the port of Plymouth like a very wonderful phenomenon in acoustics? Because it includes a part of the sea called the sound, and that is the only sound that you can see.

Why are bakers very self denying people? Because they sell what they knead (need) themselves.

Penny Sad and Penny Glad.

When a little penny's dingy
  And a dull and ugly brown
From the fingers of the butcher boy
  And every one in town,
I feel sorry for the penny,
  And I say it is too bad—
Don't you think the little penny must be sad?

Then I rub it on the carpet
  With all my main and might
Till it gets all warm and shiny
  And so pretty and so bright
That I'm sure it has forgotten
  All the troubles that it had—
Don't you think the little penny must be glad?

"Unto One of the Least of These"

By RICHARD BARKER SHELTON

Copyright, 1905, by Ruby Douglas

Van Ruyven followed the butler up the wide stairs, inwardly amused at his own trepidation. It was most absurd, he told himself, for a man to feel as he did under these circumstances. There were certainly no logical grounds for his vague fears. Still there was the haunting possibility that the bishop might raise objections. Remote this possibility was, to be sure, but none the less potent. Van Ruyven remembered the time there had been a case pending against him in the courts. It was a silly case, trumped up by an ambulance chaser. His lawyer had told him from the first it was nothing to worry about. And yet he had been more or less disturbed until the jury had brought in its verdict in his favor. His position now as he mounted the stairs in the wake of the solemn butler seemed analogous.

At the head of the stairs the butler drew aside the leather portiere, and Van Ruyven entered the big, dim study. A fire crackled cheerfully upon the hearth and sent flickering shadows dancing up and down the rows upon rows of books. Near by a green shaded lamp threw a soft light upon a table littered with books and papers.

As Van Ruyven crossed the threshold a fine figure of a man rose from his seat by the table and came forward with outstretched hand.

"Arthur, I'm glad to see you," said the bishop, with a smile that left no doubt as to the sincerity of his words. "Sit down here by the fire and give an account of yourself. I count myself in luck that you take the trouble to come up here to see me when Edith is in the house."

He drew two comfortable chairs before the fire and motioned Van Ruyven to one of them.

"Now, then, what sort of absolution do you want this time?" the bishop went on lightly, "or perhaps you came up here because you knew I'd let you smoke."

Van Ruyven smiled. "Thanks, I will smoke if you don't mind," he said, drawing out his cigar case. He selected a cigar with as much care as if the fate of an empire hung upon his choice, clipped the end and slowly lighted it. He smoked abstractedly for a moment or two before he turned to the bishop.

"The fact is," Van Ruyven began, "I have come to you tonight with a very delicate mission."

"Ah, I see." The bishop's words were formal, noncommittal, but his clean shaven, kindly face lighted up with a smile of understanding, and there was a hint of mischief in the gray eyes. Van Ruyven was looking into the fire again. He puffed nervously at the cigar.

"And this delicate mission?" the bishop suggested mildly.

"I came, sir," said Van Ruyven, speaking very slowly, "to ask you if you would have any objections to me as—as Edith's husband—that is," he amended quickly, "if Edith herself has no objections. You see, I haven't ascertained that as yet."

The bishop straightened himself in his chair. With his broad shoulders and his iron gray hair he was a decidedly imposing man. Just now he regarded his guest with an odd expression, half of affection, half of amusement.

"So you came to me first," he said quietly. "Rather a rare procedure in these degenerate days. You show a delicate deference, sir, to certain ideas that I inherit from my ancestry on the other side of the Mason and Dixon line. I think I shall have to index you as a master tactician," he ended playfully.

"Then you have no objections in the matter?" asked Van Ruyven.

"Bless my soul, no," laughed the bishop, "and if I read Edith rightly she has none either."

He leaned forward in his chair and regarded the younger man intently. His face became suddenly grave.

"There is something about Edith, however, that I must confide to you," he said, "something that no one alive knows save I, myself. Under the circumstances, Arthur, you should know it too. I disclose it under the seal of the confessional as something you must never mention at any time nor under any stress."

Van Ruyven bent his head slowly in acknowledgment of his obligation.

"Edith," said the bishop very gently, as if even the confession of it cost him a pang, "is not my own child."

Van Ruyven sat up in surprise. "Not your child?" he repeated incredulously.

"No," said the bishop. "Years ago, when I was in charge of a very humble country parish, she was left on the steps of the rectory one night, a tiny mite, wrapped in an old horse blanket. We intended at first to send her to an asylum, but there was something about those big dark eyes and those tiny arms even then that cried out to us. You know there were never any children of our own, and she came to fill the vacant niche in our lives." He paused a moment and smiled reminiscently. "I thought you ought to know of this, even if"—

"My dear bishop," Van Ruyven interrupted, "I doubt if she could have been really more yours had she been born to you. Why, she has your ideas and your traits. She even has your penetrating way of looking at one."

"I don't think the accident of her birth has made very much difference with her or with me," the bishop said. "My own daughter could not have been more to me, Arthur." The bishop's eyes were moist in his earnestness. "She has never once disappointed me. Even her intentions seem to be mine."

* * *

There was a commotion downstairs, then the sound of footsteps on the polished stairs and a vigorous knock on the lintel. The portiere was whisked aside, and an excited maid came into the room—so excited that she gave no heed to the bishop's frown of mild reproof at her unseemly entrance.

"Plaze, sor," she gasped, "Miss Edith do be wantin' yer downstairs at wance, sor. They's been a baby lift on the doorstip."

The bishop almost sprang from his chair. "A what?" he said.

"A baby, sor, lift on the doorstip, sor."

"There seems something almost ominous in this coincidence, Arthur," he said nervously. "Pardon me a moment. I'll be back directly."

After the bishop had left the room Van Ruyven tiptoed cautiously into the hall and peered over the banisters. It was indeed a strange group that stood in the hall below—Mrs. Briggs, the housekeeper, with the much swathed foundling in her arms; Edith, tall and stately, standing near by, her arms and neck showing like ivory against the dark tapestry on the wall; the bishop peering into the depths of the old shawl that wrapped the child; two maids craning over his shoulder and the statuesque Higgins explaining to such as cared to listen how he had come to find the bundle when he had answered the bell.

"And what'll we do with it?" asked Mrs. Briggs when Higgins' tale of woe had come to an end.

"Do?" said Edith. "Why, we'll take it to the home, of course."

"My dear," the bishop remonstrated mildly, "why not keep it here with us? To take it to the home seems to me to be very much like casting it into outer darkness. Of course we can't look after all the waifs, but suppose we take this one, who has been left at our very door, and give it a chance in the world."

Edith laughed unsympathetically. "Why, father, dear, what a silly idea," she began. "Of course we can't keep it."

"'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these,'" quoted the bishop.

"A very pretty sentiment," said the girl, "but most unpractical. You haven't the least idea what instincts this child may have. You would probably give it every advantage in the world only to have it disappoint you at every turn. It would probably grow up a most ungrateful little wretch. They always do."

Van Ruyven tiptoed back into the study and sat down before the fire. He heard the group below go into the reception room, and their voices came up to him inarticulately. For a time he sat there, smoking in a preoccupied manner. Then he heard Edith's voice in the hall below giving orders to the servants.

"Higgins, telephone for the carriage, and Mrs. Briggs get on your things, please, and be ready when it comes. We'll take the child to the home. I'll go with you. I can't conceive why father had such absurd notions about keeping it here."

A little later the front door slammed, there was a rumble of carriage wheels without, and then Van Ruyven heard the bishop's steps slowly ascending the stairs. He came into the study and stood for awhile looking silently into the fire.

"Did you hear it?" he asked at length, turning abruptly to Van Ruyven. The younger man nodded. The bishop sank rather heavily into his chair.

"She's not mine! I was mistaken!" he burst out. "She is no daughter of mine, after all!"

Van Ruyven rose. "I think I'd best go now," he said simply. "Please don't tell Edith that I have been here nor why I came."

The bishop looked at him narrowly. "It will be hard for her," he said, "but I think you are justified."

Suddenly the bishop's head drooped. There was a stifled sound very like a sob.

"She said it would grow up an ungrateful little wretch, and she was right, Arthur; she was right."

Salt.

The other day the writer saw a young girl upset some salt at the table and then pick up a pinch and throw it over her left shoulder. She said that if she didn't she would quarrel with her best friend. It seemed silly to think that the spilling of the salt was going to make the quarrel, and it seemed just as silly to think that the tossing of some of it in a certain direction was going to help matters. But, like most old superstitions, there is some reason back of it.

Salt, as you know, is a great purifier. It prevents decay, is a tonic and strengthener and is necessary to the health and even to the life of men and animals. The ancients looked upon it as always pure and lasting and made it the token of friendship. Out of this undoubtedly grew the idea that when salt is spilled friendship is broken. The Arabs regard salt as sacred, and a Bedouin in the desert, who would rob and kill you perhaps otherwise, becomes your friend and protector against all enemies if he eats salt with you, his way of offering hospitality.—New York Times.

Earthly Riches.

The thief had broken through and was stealing.

"Serves 'em right," he said, "for layin' up their treasures so nice an' convenient on top of this bureau where I can git at 'em."

The moth and rust meanwhile were at work in other portions of the elegant and costly mansion.—Chicago Tribune.

Fifteenth Regiment At Christ Church.

LAST CHURCH PARADE OF THE SEASON WAS WELL ATTENDED —MEN MARCHED WELL — A PRACTICAL AND TIMELY SERMON.

The Fifteenth Regiment paraded for divine service yesterday morning, it being the last turnout before inspection. That the men have been well drilled was evident from the manner in which they kept step. The day was all that could have been desired for a parade, and in consequence the ranks were well filled. Both bands were in attendance and the marching music furnished by the Regimental band was excellently played. The place of worship was Christ Church, and that edifice was filled. The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, preached, and his discourse was in keeping with the occasion. After the usual prayers had been said and hymns sang, the Rev. gentleman delivered the sermon, the text being from Romans, 12th chapter and 18th verse;

"If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peacefully with all men."

In his opening remarks the Rev. gentleman said he took great pleasure in extending a hearty welcome to the Regiment to Christ Church. He welcomed them in a three-fold sense; First, because they were citizens of this country and loyal subjects of His Majesty the King; secondly, because they constituted a part of what he conceived to be the framework of our national existence. The fact that they had donned the military garb meant that they were willing to offer themselves and willing if necessary to pour out their life's blood in defence of the country's institutions and our beloved land. The glitter of their array and the clang of their steel was a warning against danger; thirdly, he welcomed them to the house of God, as their act of worship was symbolic of our country's religion. It indicates a recognition of mutual dependance and good will between church and state, and either needs the other to complete society. He might upon this occasion be pardoned for referring to the condition of our country. The hearts of Canadians were in these days of marvellous prosperity, buoyed up, not only by a prosperous condition and good times, but by the wonderful promise of greatness which this country offers. Progress is the watchword of the day. To accelerate this progress great streams of humanity are pouring into our country by land and sea. By thousands they come to add to our population and our country's greatness. With the ambition that characterizes a progressive people, we are anxious for the material prosperity of our land. We desire to produce great men, great statesmen and great scholars. We are anxious to establish and endow institutions of charity and learning and discipline such as will elevate the tone of our people and develop culture. We are also striving, each in his own sphere, to sow the seeds of the gospel and impress the gospel message upon the hearts and lives of the people who are populating our glorious land of promise. That our manhood should be truly great and noble, the Master's life must be made the model of every Christian's life. Not least among those things that go to make up a country's greatness is her military equipment, her defensive and protective forces. In fact here is the measure of national greatness because of national security. There is something in a country's soldiery that appeals in a mysterious way to the highest instincts of humanity. A few years ago, when our soldiers were leaving this country for South Africa in the Empire's interests, what acclaim was given them, not because they were going to fight, not because so much for their courage, but because there was crystalized in those battalions the country's loyalty. It was the overflow of the country's patriotism and the country's ambition. That we have the material in Canada, in the native Canadians, for military greatness, few will question. There is not a more sturdy or a more healthy race under the sun than the native-born Canadian. The Riel rebellion, though a small thing historically, called out of our Canadians a spirit that has never been surpassed. There is, however, another question to consider and one of great importance. Christ came to bring peace and goodwill to all men. All should desire peace. But we must remember that peace must oft be purchased by the lives of men through war. History has shown that, though might is not necessarily right, still right must often be championed by might. Truth will only triumph at the surrender of the false. The seed of the church was sown when the blood of the martyrs stained the sod. Out of evil comes forth good. Christ anticipated all this when He said "I came not to bring peace, but a sword." If it be possible, live peaceably with all men. God's chosen people fulfilled the commands of their leaders when they destroyed great kings and slew them that were cruel. They were justified, as they were upon the side of right. It is with feelings of pride that we see portions of the globe painted red. There is the result of British prowess. Beneath it all is a principle. The highest liberty is enjoyed under the Union Jack. The cross of Christ may follow where the British banner waves. God is on her side because she is on the side of right. The spirit of England is the spirit of her brightest daughter, Canada. That our country may acquit itself with honor and right it is necessary that the individual life should be righteous. Every one, soldiers and civilians, are units of our nation. We should therefore see to it that our lives are with Christ, that the righteousness of Christ is ours and aspire to that which is high and honorable, as well for the sake of our King and country as for the welfare of our immortal soul.

During the offertory the choir sang the anthem, "Conquering Kings," the solo parts of which were well rendered by Miss Hilda Bell and Mr. Ed. Henthorn.

The parade went up Coleman St. to the upper bridge and down Front St. to the market, the men stepping out with a fine swing to the strains of a splendid sacred march, played in an inspiring way by the band.

St. Michael's.

During the benediction at St. Michael's last evening, the congregation was favored with a solo by Mr. Halstead, of Winnipeg, a splendid baritone singer, who rendered "Come Unto Me," in magnificent style.

John Street.

Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of this church, last evening concluded his series of sermons upon the Lord's Prayer. These discourses have been very thoughtful and helpful, and have been deeply appreciated by the congregation. During the service last night Mr. D. A. Cameron sang a solo entitled, "Abide With Me."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the above church last night the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached the second in his series of sermons on "Divine Propulsion." The subject of the morning sermon was "Trinity Sunday and its Lessons." The choir was in exceptionally good form.

St. Andrew's.

Rev. J. A. Petrie, B.D., yesterday conducted services at this church in the absence of the pastor, and his discourses were much appreciated. In the evening his text was from 1st Samuel, 16th chapter and 7th verse:

"But the Lord said unto Samuel, look not upon his countenance or on the height of his stature, because I have refused him, for the Lord seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

During the service Miss N. Lazier sang a solo, entitled, "Callest Thou Thus, O Master."

Tabernacle.

Rev. J. Ferguson yesterday morning occupied the pulpit and the basis of his remarks was from Isaiah, 1st chapter, 16th and 17th verses. In the evening Rev. Prof. Doxsee, of Albert College, preached.

Bridge Street.

In the absence of the pastor yesterday, Mr. Hunter, of Albert College, occupied the pulpit, and his sermons were highly appreciated. During the evening service Mr. S. R. Burrows sang the solo part of the anthem, entitled, "How Long Wilt Thou Forget Me, O Lord?" and Misses M. Vermilyea and G. Price sang a duet entitled, "Angry Words."

Bethel Hall.

A good audience assembled in Bethel Hall last night to hear Mr. Daniel Morrison, the Scotch evangelist. He spoke from Psalm 95 and Hebrews 3rd and 4th chapters, "To-day if ye will hear His voice harden not your hearts." The speaker dwelt on the sin of hardening the heart and refusing to hear God's voice, while they have the opportunity, as ere long God will speak in judgment and man will be compelled to hear God's voice, but now He is dealing with the world in grace and salvation as a free gift is offered to all who accept God's Son.

Baptist.

Pastor Emerson preached at both services yesterday. Morning subject, "The Man with the Muck Rake." Text, Matt. 7: 1—3. Evening subject, "Why Did Jesus Die?" Text, 2nd Cor., 5—15. This was the third of a series of sermons on the subject, "Questions Men are Asking." Christ, said the speaker, is the great central figure in Holy Writ. We are attracted to Him by His wonderful personality. If, then, He be so great a personage, why the ignominous death on the cross? The sacrifice was a voluntary one, and throughout His ministry the Master was looking forward to it. In His death three facts are established; 1, the sinfulness of man as evidenced by the crucifixion. 2, the love of God in giving His Son to die. 3, man's yearning after God as evidenced by the people turning from their sin to seek Christ. The one great lesson we learn from the cross of Christ is the lesson of unselfishness. "No man liveth to himself." The great problem confronting us to-day is, To whom do I live? Myself or God? Selfishness is the cause of nearly all the suffering in the world. Selfishness nailed Jesus to the cross. Why did Jesus die? It was to bring us back to God. In conclusion the preacher urged his hearers to trust in the finished work of Christ on the cross and thus enter into life eternal. The choir rendered an anthem entitled, "Beyond our Sight."

Pope's Collapse Caused By "Angina Pectoris"

FEARS EXPRESSED AT THE VATICAN THAT HIS HOLINESS WILL NOT LIVE LONG.

Rome, June 11.—(Special). — That the real cause of the collapse of the Pope is "angina pectoris" was revealed to-day at the Vatican, where fears were expressed that the days of the present Pontiff will be short.

CO-OPERATIVE FRUIT GROWERS

HELD A MEETING IN THE CITY ON SATURDAY — A PROMISING OUTLOOK.

A meeting of several of the leading fruit growers in the district surrounding Belleville was held in this city on Saturday afternoon, and steps were taken to handle the apples of the different growers joining the association this year on the co-operative plan. A business committee consisting of Ald. Jas. Knox, W. S. Morden, Henry D. Leavens, Samuel Sills and F. S. Wallbridge was appointed to arrange for a building for the packing of the apples and for the sale of same and the engaging of a manager for looking after the packing of the apples, etc.

The different fruit growers in attendance gave to the secretary the number of barrels that they would require for putting up their apples, so that the secretary could ask the different barrel manufacturers in this vicinity for tenders for the supply of barrels for the different growers joining the association.

The association has made a good start in the way of membership, as already 14 of the leading growers in this locality have joined in the movement and a number of others will no doubt connect themselves with it in the near future.

A letter was read at the meeting from the chief of the Fruit Division at Ottawa, stating that one of the principal advantages of the formation of a co-operative association among the apple growers, in addition to uniformity of pack that would be made of the fruit, was that the department were now and would be until the packing season, sending out communications to large buyers in the Old Country giving them the names of the different apple co-operative associations in Canada, so that they could send their representatives to Canada and buy on a large scale from the different co-operative associations, as a number of the buyers will want from 5000 to 20,000 barrels and would only visit points where they could buy in large quantities and at the same time get a uniform pack.

The chief of the Fruit Division would strongly recommend the apple growers in this section to get into line in the co-operative movement.

HELD TO BE NOT PROVEN.

Beachville Man Was Filling Orders as Fast as Possible.

St. Catharines, June 11.—The Crown failed in its attempt to convict Arthur W. Smith of Beachville, Oxford County, of fraud, in alleged advertising for sale and taking money for goods he could not supply.

Chief of Police Zettes, Woodstock, said he had received letters from parties all over the country making inquiries about Smith, stating they had sent him money and did not receive goods.

W. H. Pook, Canadian Express agent at Beachville, gave evidence favorable to Smith. He said he had received many shipments of potatoes and had also shipped away Yorkshire hogs, collie dogs, potatoes, strawberry plants, etc. Smith had been there about three years.

The customs officer at Woodstock also testified to shipments received by Smith.

The magistrate said he would have to base his opinion on the evidence given in the case and he could not convict upon it. He added that while Smith was certainly sending out strange circulars and advertisements, he thought that farmers who jumped at conclusions as in this case, showed little judgment. It was quite plain the man was filling orders as fast as he could get the goods.

Tramp Had Money.

Victims of Lightning at Port Robinson, Little Britain, Zurich, Inwood, and St. Williams—Wind Was of a Velocity of From 50 to 85 Miles Per Hour and Storm's Duration Did Not Exceed Half an Hour.

Toronto, June 11.—It is possible a million dollars of damage was done by the cyclone-like storm that struck Southern and Western Ontario Friday afternoon. Although of but half an hour's duration in any one place, it unroofed or blew down houses and factories, and played havoc with trees and vegetation. Lightning set fire to several valuable barns and killed at least three persons. Hamilton suffered very severely, the estimate being $250,000. The storm centre of Western Ontario was from Chatham to Hamilton and Niagara Falls The storm swept along the north shore of Lake Erie and covered the 140 miles between Chatham and Hamilton in an hour and forty minutes. Its velocity was from 50 to 85 miles an hour, accompanied by hail and lightning.

Several Fatalities.

St. Thomas, June 11.—Friday 35 men were at work building a new barn, four miles northeast of Springfield, owned by James McClintock, when the terrific windstorm struck them. A number of men were in the act of raising a large beam when the wind struck the building, which collapsed, crushing down on the men. Two, named William Clapton, aged 35 years, and M. Willson, a lad of 17 years of age, who were working in the basement, were killed instantly. Willson, father of the young lad killed, is also seriously injured and his hand was badly crushed. It had to be amputated. Several others were also seriously injured.

One Dead; One May Die.

Watford, June 11.—The house of John Maddock, three miles from Inwood, was struck by lightning on Friday evening. Mrs. Maddock and her daughter Minnie, 21 years of age, were in the cellar at the time. Miss Maddock was instantly killed, and her mother so severely shocked that she may not recover.

Killed In Doorway.

St. Williams, June 11.—Thomas Carr, 21 years of age, son of Liman Carr, on the 7th concession of Walsingham, was instantly killed by lightning about 3 o'clock Friday afteroon while standing in the doorway of his house. His mother, who was a few feet from him in the yard, was severely stunned and is still in a dazed condition.

Paralyzed by Shock.

Brockville, June 11.—During the fierce electrical storms of the past few days, lightning struck houses and barns right and left and reports of the same are reaching here from the rural districts. In the vicinity of Westport a son of John Cook, a farmer, was rendered unconscious for several hours by the shock. He is yet partially paralyzed, but will recover.

LIGHTNING DEALS DEATH.

Alleghany Valley, Pennsylvania, Badly Struck by Electric Storm.

Pittsburg, Pa., June 11.—From many points in Western Pennsylvania tonight come reports of death and damage by the severe thunder and electric storms. In half an hour several thousands of dollars' worth of damage was done.

At Kittaning, James Mitchell and his 15-year-old son, who were sitting on a porch, were struck and killed by lightning, and the house was set on fire. The rest of the family were stunned.

Death was also dealt by the storm at Punxsutawney where Clyde Blose, aged 18, and Bert Weiss, aged 20, were struck and killed by lightning while standing in the doorway of a barn. Laird Blose, a brother of Clyde, was also struck. He is not expected to live.

River Overflows Banks.

Steubenville, O., June 11.—In consequence of the heavy rain Saturday, Rushrun, Deeprun, Saltrun and Shannonrun overflowed over four miles of the country near the Ohio River. Much farm property was damaged, many farm buildings were swept away and some live stock was drowned. Many persons had narrow escapes from drowning.

The Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad is washed out three to six feet deep for three miles, and it will be several days before traffic can be resumed. The Wheeling & Lake Erie also was under water in many places.

Kaiser Has Newspaper Seized.

Cologne, June 11.—The authorities have confiscated an issue of The Westphalian Rhenish Gazette, containing an article entitled "The Patched Up Triple Alliance," in which the despatches exchanged between the two Kaisers and the King of Italy are criticized in a manner that is considered insulting to the Emperor William and Emperor Francis Joseph. It is the first time that this important German paper has been seized by the authorities.

PRESIDENT AND PACKERS.

Former Has Secret Service Men Preparing Another Damning Report—Latter Say They Don't Care.

Washington, D.C., June 10.—President Roosevelt has Government employes busily at work in the preparation of another report attacking the packing houses of Chicago, and this report will be sent to Congress in a short time if action on the meat inspection legislation is delayed.

Under the orders of the president two secret service men were detached from their duty of detecting counterfeiters and sent to Chicago to collect information regarding the use of preservatives and coloring matter in packing house products and methods in the preparation of canned and potted foods. These agents have been in Chicago several weeks. They have been very hard at work and have collected twenty-two affidavits bearing on the subject the president ordered to be investigated. These affidavits come, for the most part, from former employes of the stock yards and packing houses.

The packers profess to be utterly indifferent to what the president does.

DEATH STOPS WEDDING.

Wm. Walker, Guelph, Who Failed to Appear at His Wedding, Found Dead.

Guelph, June 11.—The lifeless body of William Walker, who was to have been married to Miss Mary Smith on Wednesday last, but who disappeared shortly before the hour set for the wedding ceremony, was found floating in the River Speed, near Goldie's mills, Friday. He had committed suicide. The deed is attributed to the fact that he had been laboring under mental depression for some time past and the excitement attendant upon the wedding no doubt intensified his weakness.

Three years ago he was to have been married, but failed to appear for the ceremony, returning a few days later in a state of mental collapse.

Coroner Dr. Robinson is holding an inquest.

Tribe Exterminates Itself.

St. Petersburg, June 11.—One of the most terrible stories of Nomadic vicissitude ever told has just reached St. Petersburg. It is to the effect that an entire tribe, the Tchuktchees, numbering about 2,000, has just perished by its own act as the last avenue of escape from famine. The tribe inhabited one of the bleakest parts of Yakotsk. After the elders of the tribe had spent a day in consideration; the almost incredible decision was that each father should first kill his family and then himself. On the following day the appalling tragedy was carried out in the open air in a general assembly. The only exceptions were a few old men without families, who, when left to themselves, had not the determination necessary to commit suicide.

Bryan For President.

Washington, D. C., June 11.—With four states pledged to his support and others falling into line, William Jennings Bryan will, in August, return from his travels to find his star again in the ascendant and his boom as Presidential candidate in 1908 under full headway. Conservatives and Radicals of 1896 are flocking into camp, so far as the developments of the last few weeks indicate, and gold Democrats and free silver men alike are acclaiming the former leader as the "logical candidate."

ELEVEN TORN TO PIECES

Most Horrible of Accidents by Dynamite Explosion.

Not Enough Left of a Single Body to Make Identification Possible — Air Filled With Debris and Fragments of Human Bodies—Limbs of Men Found Hanging on Trees 100 Yards Distant—Accidents Elsewhere.

Lancaster, Pa., June 11.—Eleven men were blown to pieces and five others were seriously injured by the explosion of a dynamite plant near Pequa, along the Susquehanna River. The dead are:

Benjamin Gebhardt, aged 22; Benjamin Rineer, 21; Geo. Rineer, 20; Fred Rice, 23, married; Collins Parker 18; Phares Shoff, 18; William Funk, 19; John Boatman, 17; an unknown man; two unknown men, residents of York County.

All except the last two lived in the immediate vicinity of the dynamite plant. The seriously injured are:

Walter Brown, Martin Rineer, Geo. Gray, Charles Cramer, Jacob Scoff.

Most Horrible of Accidents.

The accident was one of the most horrible in the history of Lancaster County. The victims were literally torn to pieces, not enough remaining of a single body to make identification possible.

The cause of the explosion is not known. The two unknown residents of York County who were killed had just started to drive from the place with a load of dynamite. They had scarcely gained a distance of 50 feet when the plant blew up with a detonation that was plainly heard 15 miles away. A great cloud of smoke covered the site of the factory, and when it had cleared away there was not a vestige of the horse, wagon or men who had left the factory only a moment before.

The air was filled with debris, and fragments of human bodies and pieces of flesh and limbs were found hanging to the trees nearly one hundred yards from the scene of the disaster. The remains of those who had been killed were gathered up and placed in soap boxes, identity being impossible. The injured, some of whom it is thought will die, were taken to their homes in the vicinity.

The dynamite plant was owned by G. R. McCabe & Co. of Pittsburg.

Aged Woman Killed by Train.

St. Catharines, June 11.—Mrs. Arabella McGeachie, about 80 years of age, who lived on Thorold road, this city, was struck by a Michigan Central train near Queenston Heights on Saturday and instantly killed. She had been visiting her son, John McGeachie, who is caretaker at Brock's Monument, Queenston Heights. A bruise on the side of her head was the only indication of the cause of death.

Killed in a Coal Mine.

Strathcona, Alta., June 11.—Robert Burkett, a coal miner in the mine of the Strathcona Coal Co., was killed by a cave-in of the room in which he was working. He was alone, and it was some time before his companions discovered what had happened. His neck was broken. Deceased was a single man about 30 or 35 years old. His home was near Smith's Falls, Ont.

Carried Over Dam.

St. John, N. B., June 11.—While attempting to cross St. John River to get to dinner, Donald Blizzard of the Donald Fraser Lumber Co., this city, was carried over the dam and drowned. The freshet was high and the current very strong. Blizzard, who was only 42 years of age, leaves a wife and large family.

Binghamton, N. Y., June 11.—Rev. George Horton, a retired Presbyterian clergyman, was instantly killed while driving into his yard near Oxford Saturday. The wheel of the wagon caught, throwing him out and breaking his neck. He was 75 years of age.

Dies by Inches in Muck.

New York, June 11.—Michael McDonald, ship's carpenter, aged 30, met a slow and horrible death in the muck of Elizabeth River Saturday evening. The muck gripped him like some hideous, slimy, clinging monster, and held him fast in its treacherous, suffocating embrace while the tide crept in from the sea and mercifully swept over his head. He was taking a short cut to his home to greet a brother who had just returned from sea after a three years' cruise.

Steamer Ashore.

Halifax, N.S., June 11.—A wireless message received by Marine and Fisheries Department yesterday says that the Steamer Etolio of the Elder-Dempster Line went ashore on the southwest ledge, off Cape Sable, at 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and is hard and fast on the rocks.

BISHOP OF SELKIRK DEAD.

Right Rev. W. C. Bompas Passed Away On Saturday Night.

Seattle, Wash., June 12.—A special to The Post-Intelligencer from White Horse, Alaska, says: The Right Rev. Wm. Bompas, for forty years Bishop of the Diocese of Selkirk, died Saturday night at his home at Caribou Crossing, aged 78 years. His life of hardship, self-denial, privation and loneliness, was probably unparalleled in the history of missions. For nearly thirty years he never once came out to civilization, and during that prolonged period he spent months within the Arctic circle.

Sketch of His Life.

Rt. Rev. William Carpenter Bompas was born in London, England, in 1835, and received his education there. He was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Lincoln in 1859; was curate of Sutton-le-Marsh, Lincolnshire; New Radford, Nottinghamshire; Holy Trinity, Louth, and of Alford, Lincolnshire. In 1865 he was ordained to the priesthood by Archdeacon Machray in St. Paul's Cathedral, and was sent out to the Northwest Territories by the Church Missionary Society. In 1874 he was appointed Bishop of the Diocese of Athabaska. Afterwards, when the diocese was divided, in 1884, he became Bishop of Mackenzie River, and in 1891 Bishop of Selkirk. Deceased was the author of "History of the Diocese of Mackenzie River," "Northern Lights on the Bible," and the "Symmetry of Scripture."

The sympathy of the whole Anglican Church will go out to his devoted wife, who is now aged and feeble, but who, though a woman of highest culture and refinement, shared all his toils and privations.

Mother Superior Dead.

The late mother superior was born at Matilda, Ont., in October, 1822, was educated in a convent, and early decided upon a religious life.

Sir Hector Langevin.

Another Of the Fathers Of Confederation Is Dead.

Prominent in Conservative Administrations, He Had a Long and Notable Career—Until a Year Ago He Took a Lively Interest in Political Affairs—Death Was Expected, But Created Sorrow—Retired in 1896.

Quebec, June 12.—Although the end had been expected since Sunday, the news of Sir Hector Louis Langevin's death last evening, at 9.15, created sorrow throughout the city. He was one of the fathers of confederation. Sir Hector Langevin, since his retirement from the Thompson Cabinet, and, later on, from public life, had lived in absolute retirement with his son-in-law, Hon. Thos. Chapais.

He was beloved by his family, yet his circle of close friends was limited, and when the ex-Minister of Public Works took his daily walks he was generally unaccompanied. Up to a year ago he took a very lively interest in public affairs.

His Career.

Hon. Sir Hector Langevin, K.C.M.G., C.B., K.C., was born at Quebec in 1826. He was a son of Lieut.-Col. Jean Langevin, assistant civil secretary under the Earl of Gosford and Lord Sydenham. He received his education at Quebec Seminary, leaving at the age of 20 to study law in the office of the late Hon. A. N. Morin, Montreal. Having completed his law studies under the late Geo. E. Carter, he began practice as a barrister in Montreal in 1850, removing to Quebec a year later.

In 1856 he was elected to the city council, and in his first year as mayor, 1857, he entered the wider political field, being returned to Quebec Parliament as member for Dorchester. In 1864, on his being made a Q.C., he was appointed solicitor-general for Lower Canada, and, two years later, became postmaster-general in the coalition Government.

A Father of Confederation.

Mr. Langevin is regarded as one of the fathers of confederation. He took a prominent and vigorous part in its advocacy, and gained the reputation of being a powerful speaker in the cause. He was one of the delegates on behalf of Lower Canada to the Charlottetown conference of 1864, and the Quebec convention of that year. He also attended the conference at London, Eng., two years later, when the terms of union were finally settled.

Having continued to represent Dorchester, he, in 1867, took a seat in the Dominion House as member for that county, becoming Secretary of State at the opening of the new Parliament, being sworn in also as a member of the Privy Council. A year later he was created a C.B. In 1872 he was returned by Quebec Centre by acclamation.

In 1870, Mr. Langevin was created a knight commander of the Roman Order of Pope St. Gregory the Great. In 1871 he visited British Columbia to gain information as to requirements at the C.P.R. terminus there, and published a report thereon.

Party Leader in Quebec.

He became leader of the Conservative party in Quebec on the death of Sir George Cartier in 1873, in which year he went down in the defeat of the Government. He was elected from Charlevoix in 1876, but in the general election of 1878 unsuccessfully contested Rimouski. He was, however, called to the Cabinet of the new Conservative Government as postmaster-general, and was returned for Three Rivers by acclamation. In the following year he was made Minister of Public Works, which office he retained till 1891. He continued to sit for Three Rivers till 1896, when he voluntarily retired from public life.

Hon. Mr. Langevin was a widower, his wife, who was a daughter of the late Lieut.-Col. Chas. H. Teter, J.P., having died in 1882.

Liberal Extravagance—Taxation and Trade.

The Liberals promised in 1896 a reduction of taxation. The tone of their campaign speeches was that an expenditure of $38,000,000 a year was too great a burden for a population of six millions. Their leaders made a distinct pledge to reduce this expenditure by four millions a year. This was to be in relief of the people's payments to the Government. How this promise has been disregarded, how debt and taxation have been increased by the Liberals in office was forcibly shown by Mr. Cockshutt, of Brant, in his speech on the budget. He found that the expenditure had risen from thirty-eight millions to eighty millions, the amount taken from the people was $9 per head instead of $5 when the Conservatives ruled Hon. Mr. Paterson claimed that the pledge had been fulfilled by a reduction of the rate of taxation. How this pretence worked out was illustrated by Mr. Cockshutt by taking the case of a municipal assessment commissioner; "A man owns a lot which is assessed at $1,000, the rate is 22 mills, and the assessment commissioner says; Your taxation will be $22. But the hon. Minister comes to the householder and says: I am going to reduce your taxation or your rate of taxation, and the householder finds that his property is assessed at $2,000 and the rate is 20 mills. and the Minister takes $40 when the former assessor took $22, and in the face of that he tells the man he has reduced the taxation or reduced the rate of taxation." Hon Mr. Paterson defended this method of public finance as he defended the carnival of extravagance that is bringing the blush of shame to the faces of so many honest Liberals throughout the land.

Mr Cockshutt contended that the tariff had been fixed to encourage the importation of goods which should not be imported, but should be made in Canada. 'What is the sense," he said, "of a country such as ours, with its immense resources and wealth, having a balance of trade against it, of $65,000,000 in the present year? Is that a justifiable state of things in a country as prosperous as this? These goods ought all to be made in this country. What existed when they went into power? The total balance of trade against us in 1896 was only $3,000,000, and that is the position which Canada should be in to-day. Why should we be importing more than we are exporting? Let us take a leaf out of the book of the United States in that respect. You cannot continue to have this vast balance of trade against this country without doing it an injury, and these gentlemen are discounting the future in order to fill the coffers of the Government. And what are they doing with the money when they get it? It is squandered in the most barefaced way that has ever been known in any country of like size under the sun. I know of no parallel I would like the Minister of Finance to state, if he can, a single country under the sun, with the population of between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000, that is spending over $80,000,000 a year?"

If this money were spent in solid advantage, there need be no complaint, but the investigation of accounts within the past few weeks shows that it is frittered away. The list of silverware for the steamer employed in breaking ice in the St. Lawrence is a mere sample of the prevailing extravagance, where teapots and sugar bowls were bought at $20, $30, $40 and $50, when $5 and $10 would have been ample, and have bought better articles than many a member of Parliament has on his table.

The Test.

"How do you like your new music teacher?"

"He's no good."

"Why, what makes you think so?"

"Yesterday I played a common tune clear through, and he didn't say it would take a week's practice to offset the harm done."

REALISM IN CHICAGO.

(New York World.)

"Cattle killing on the stage will be one of the features of my play. 'The Jungle,' which George H. Brennan will produce in Chicago about September 1," said Upton Sinclair yesterday.

"The third act will make audiences sit up, ~~I think.~~ The curtain rises, showing the spectators' gallery over the killing bed, and the platform on which the man with the hammer stands. You see the heads of the cattle, and afterwards the hindquarters as they are strung up after the killing. During the action a folding door opens from time to time into the hog-killing room, and you see the hogs moved along the board and hear the squeals of the hundreds of pigs, produced by many phonograph records of the real thing.

"The climax of the act is when Jurgis and Connor grapple on the edge of the platform over the pen filled with wild Texas cattle. Jurgis hurls him into the pen, and you hear his screams and see the rush of the men to his assistance, while Jurgis, leaning over, curses his enemy — in Lithuanian, of course."

THE JOKE WAS ON UNCLE DAN.

(Mail and Empire.)

Dan Derbyshire, the member for Brockville, felt the other day that he ought to strike a blow for the Government of which he is an unwavering supporter. When therefore somebody mentioned in the House that the Marine Department had paid $1.14 a bushel for potatoes, Dan explained the reason why. The price, Dan announced, was quite moderate—the regular figure in the Winter season Moreover, the potatoes were of superior quality, and Dan challenged the anti-grafters to buy them cheaper in any market in the civilized world. Then it was discovered that the price paid had been but 50 cents a bushel, and Dan's explanations fell through. Since then the member from Brockville has not been prominent in the debates.

The County Court.

JUNE SITTINGS BEGAN THIS AFTERNOON — THE GRAND JURY.

The June sittings of the County Court and General Sessions opened at 1.30 this afternoon, before His Honor Judge Deroche.

The following composed the Grand Jury;

W. A. Shaw, Sidney; Thos. Keegan, Hungerford; Hy. Pringle, Belleville; Jas. Wallace, Belleville; John Bartley, Deseronto; Fred Bell Deseronto; W. T. Brown, Madoc; W. J. Atkins, Madoc; R. Badgley, Tyendinaga; John F. Devolin, Marmora; P. Fargey, Huntingdon; J. C. Warrington, Belleville; M. Sprague, Belleville.

Mr. M. Sprague was selected as foreman of the Grand Jury.

In his opening remarks His Honor referred to the lamented death of Judge Lazier, who, had he been living, would no doubt have presided over the sittings of this court. The late Judge was an honorable man, and his loss was a serious one to the city and county at large. The duties of the Grand Jury at this session would be light, as there were no matters of a criminal nature to be brought before them. They would be required to visit the jail and other institutions upon which public money was expended. When they had performed this duty they would be discharged.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M.P., on behalf of the Hastings County Bar, congratulated Judge Deroche upon his elevation to the Bench.

His Honor replied briefly and in an appropriate manner.

The first case taken up was that of King vs. Burnham. The accused is charged with having committed perjury. Mr. Anderson for Crown and the accused conducted his own defence.

SPORTING NOTES.

Peterboro has dropped out of the O.L.A., because they could not have their own way.

Montreal's Eastern League team has won seven out of the last nine games played.

Manager Barrow of Toronto says his team has been consistently robbed by the umpires. The old gag, which dates from the time of Noah.

Globe: Jack Toft is no longer with the Torontos. The veteran, whose head work and great knowledge of the weaknesses of the Eastern League batsmen, combined with his skilful coaching of the pitchers, has been responsible for many victories won by the Torontos in past seasons, has regretfully packed his big mit, mask and chest protector away. Toft performed like a young colt in the early days of the season, but injured his foot in the last game of the first home series, and while away he was of no use to the team. At Newark he made two bad throws, which practically lost Toronto the contest, and after the game he told Manager Barrow he "guessed he was all in," and asked for his release. Manager Barrow granted the request.

HOW YOU SHOULD WEAR A PANAMA.

SOFT STRAW HATS WITH BROAD BRIMS AND LOW CROWNS FOR OLDER MEN.

A man's straw hat is becoming year by year more what it was originally intended for, a matter of individual comfort, rather than of 'de rigueur' style. This season even more than has heretofore been the case the masculine members of the family can invest in one, on the spur of the moment on a hot day, without getting into the usual peck of trouble with his female relatives on his arrival home in the evening.

Although the regular cow's breakfast hat is still confined to the rural districts, says the Toronto Star, the city man can come perilously near arriving at the same effect with the Panama when worn in the latest style. This requires that the broad brim be turned straight up from the brow, while the brim behind is turned down to cover the back of the neck. Worn in this way you are right in the latest English fashion, and can defy the carping critics. Panamas, of course, when of good quality are high in price, but $10 will get a good average one, the prices ranging from $1.50 to $18. A considerable number are being sold this year, and they will be much in evidence.

One of the most popular hats this year will be the very broad-brimmed, low-crowned soft straw, which came into fashion generally last summer. This is particularly desirable for men verging upon middle age, with its accompanying fullness of figure. The mild suggestion of bucolic comfort notwithstanding, these hats have managed to retain a certain degree of modishness for a second season, which is greatly to their credit, and undoubtedly due to their unusual comfort.

The leading style at the leading shops this season for young men is made of either smooth or rough sennet, with a 3 1-2 inch crown and a 2 3-8 inch flat brim. This is a very dressy hat indeed with a summer suit, the price ranging from $2.50 to $4. Another is one with a lower crown and wider brim, in fact, the height of the crown and width of brim are exactly the same, viz., 2 3-8 inches. This also is being worn by really well-dressed people. Another style for a somewhat older man, who still wishes to be in the swim, has a 3 1-2 inch crown and 2 1-2 inch brim. This is the newest London style, but perhaps a little in advance of the fashion here, although it is much in vogue in New York this year.

Although a great many well-dressed men prefer the plain black band, a great opportunity is given this season for the exercise of taste in colors as they are being used more than ever before, one dealer in the downtown district having no less than 292 varieties to select from, so that it will be a peculiar taste indeed that cannot be suited.

The County Council.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Council resumed at 9 o'clock, with Warden Lancaster in the chair.

On motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole on By-laws, Mr. Farley in the chair.

A by-law to equalize the assessment for 1906, a by-law to levy rates upon the various municipalities of the county for 1906, and a by-law authorizing the Hastings Telephone Company to erect poles and string wires thereon upon certain county roads for telephone purposes, were passed through their various stages and numbered respectively 610, 611 and 612.

After a brief discussion in reference to the Police Magistrates of the county and their new jurisdictions, it was resolved to appoint a special committee to look into the matter and report. The committee selected consisted of Messrs. Macfarlane and Merton and the County Clerk.

On motion the Council adjourned until Tuesday, the 4th day of December.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Coster Leaves £20,000.

A curious sight was witnessed recently in South London in connection with the funeral at Bow Cemetery of "Jock" Hewett, the "king of the costers," who died at his home in Ferries road, Streatham, leaving a fortune of £20,000, made out of selling cheap food to the poor. Many hundreds followed the hearse in barrows or other vehicles, and the procession passed by the Brixton, Newington Butts, East Lane, Walworth, Old Kent Road, and High street, Whitechapel, coster markets en route for Bow, where "Jock" was known and respected.

Gladstone's Grandson Rises.

Young Mr. Gladstone comes of age in two or three months, and will then enter into possession of the Hawarden estate, which has been managed during his minority by his uncles, Herbert and Henry Gladstone.

Might as Well Sleep.

A juryman went to sleep the other day during the closing speech of one of the counsel in the case in an English court. The judge had him awakened and sternly rebuked him. "My lord," said the juror, "I was under the impression that I was sworn to give a verdict according to the evidence, not according to the speeches."

DEAD MEN'S SHOES.

Peculiar Beliefs About Them That Exist in the Old World.

"Dead men's shoes" is a common expression, but means much in many parts of the old world, where the boots of the dead are accorded much importance.

In Scotland, in the northern parts of England, in Scandinavia, as well as in Hungary, Croatia and Roumania, the utmost care is taken among the lower classes that each corpse is provided with a pair of good shoes before being laid into the ground. If the dead person happens to be a tramp and to have been found dead barefooted there will always be some charitable soul to furnish a pair of good boots for interment along with the corpse.

An inspector of police in Scotland has been known to purchase of his own accord a new pair of boots and to place them in the grave, reopened for the purpose, of a murdered stranger who had been inadvertently interred barefooted the day before.

This practice, which likewise prevails among the Tsiganes as well as in many parts of Asia, is attributable to the belief that unless the dead are well shod when buried their ghosts come back to haunt the locality where they breathed their last in search of a pair of boots.

The shoes are popularly supposed to be needed to pass in comfort and safety the broad plains which the departed soul must traverse before it can reach paradise. Among some nations these plains are declared to be covered with furzes, thorns and morass, while other races say that they consist of burning sands. These plains of suffering are popularly credited with forming a sort of antechamber to hell. It is for this reason that the boots of the dead are called "hell shoes" in Norway, Sweden, Finland and Denmark.

STRIKING EYEGLASSES.

No Law Which Declares It an Aggravated Offense.

It is the common opinion that for striking a man with glasses on there is a severer penalty than for striking him under similar circumstances when he is not wearing glasses. Careful search, however, does not bring forth any statutory provision which declares the offense greater when the man who is struck wears glasses. The prevalence of this idea is due, no doubt, to the probability of the judge in such cases giving the convicted the extreme penalty. The legal term for assault under such circumstances is "mayhem," signifying that the assailant has in one way or another deprived his victim of the power of defending himself.

During an altercation from which a struggle is apt to ensue any one wearing glasses would be wise to remove them, unobserved if possible, however, because if noticed it might act as a signal to begin hostilities.

Many think that glasses would be a source of general protection in these cases and often take advantage on that ground, but this is wrong, because no court would hold it worse to strike a man with glasses than one without unless the assailant struck directly at his opponent's eyes, with the intent to wound or maim him, and whether one were hit elsewhere than on the eyeglasses would not enter the case at all. —Jewelers' Circular-Weekly.

When Spencer Traveled.

When Herbert Spencer went on a long railway journey it was his practice to have reserved for him a first class compartment. Across the carriage he used to have a hammock swung, in which he traveled to avoid the vibration and concussion. There was something funny in the spectacle of the staid philosopher traveling in this fashion, and so it appeared to the people who witnessed the preparations for his departure. The inquisitives were soon disappointed, for as soon as Spencer recognized that he was being made the object of unsolicited attention he would shout out in stentorian tones to the porters—he used to have four to look after him—"Draw down those blinds!"

Origin of Ox Tail Soup.

During the reign of terror in Paris in 1793 many of the nobility were reduced to starvation and beggary. The abattoirs sent their hides fresh to the tanneries without removing the tails, and in cleaning them the tails were thrown away. One of the noble beggars asked for a tail, and it was willingly given to him. He took it to his lodging and made (what is now famous) the first dish of ox tail soup. He told others of his good luck, and they annoyed the tanners so much that a price was put upon them.

Ambition becomes displeasing when it is once satiated. There is a reaction, and as our spirit till our last sigh is always aiming toward some object it falls back on itself, having nothing else on which to rest and having reached the summit it longs to descend.—Corneille.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness.' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably, answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

As chipper as a man could be.

He shook my hand an' slapped my back,
He took to me right off, kersmack.

He showed me all about the town,
By jucks! that feller done it brown.

He set 'em up. I couldn't pay
A cent fer nothin', anyway.

I never seen his beat to josh,
I laffed till I most bust, b'gosh!

He was so plague-taken nice, by heck!
Of course, I had to cash his check.

He said he'd see me later on,
What's that? You say it was a "con?"

Mebbe it wus; you ought to know,
That feller was a corker, though.

I took his check an' went next day
Right to the bank an' where they pay,

I hoved it through the winder, too,
Jest like I seen the others do.

An'—shucks! they didn't have no doubt,
They counted me the money out.

The seal fishery is the great event of the season in Newfoundland. It gives employment to 5,000 men at the ice, and to hundreds ashore in skinning and preparing the oil. It brings plenty of cash to men and merchants, and puts every one in a good humor for the great campaign of all, the summer cod fishery. This year has been an enormously successful one in this business Last year the catch was 174,000, but this season already over 300,000 seals are accounted for, and at least from 50,000 to 60,000 more will be captured.

Notwithstanding the inroads made by Liverpool, Manchester, and Bristol into the Canadian traffic, the statistics show that London still leads the way as the port of entry for the Canadian dairy produce. It imports twice as much cheese as Liverpool, the next largest importer, and three times as much as Bristol, its total importation being about 50,000 tons. Of Canadian butter, London's importation is 5,000 tons, while Bristol's is 4,000, and Liverpool's 3,000. It is estimated that Canada's trade this year will reach £100,000,000. Judging exports and imports according to population, Canada stands third among the nations in the scale of trade. Belgium is first with £29 per capita, Great Britain second with £20, and Canada third with £17.

At the recent Empire Day banquet in London under the auspices of the Canadian Society, Lord Durham, who fittingly responded to the toast of the "Dominion of Canada" made the interesting announcement that the biography of his grandfather, so well known to readers of Canadian history, will be published during the present year. The author has had free access to the family papers, and the work will contain much authentic information hitherto unpublished.

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.: A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, June 11.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle came weaker on account of increased supplies, and prices show a decline of ½c, with sales at 11c to 11½c. Advices from Glasgow were very bad, and sales reverted show losses to shippers of $6 to $10, and in some cases as much as $12 to $15 per head. Demand for ocean freight has been good, and all June space has been booked at steady rates, and some July to London at 32s 6d, which is an advance of 2s 6d per head. Exports for the week were 2001 cattle.

Receipts were 1200 cattle, 60 milch cows, 800 calves, 300 sheep and lambs and 1500 hogs. A feature of the hog situation of late has been the continued strength in the foreign markets for Canadian bacon, and our calves of Saturday note a further advance in prices in Bristol of 1s to 3s, and in Liverpool 1s, while private advices from London also show an advance of 1s to 2s. Receipts of hogs here to-day were 1500, of which fully half had been contracted for in the west by some of the leading packers. The market was strong and prices advanced 10c per 100 lbs. The demand was good and sales of selected lots were made at $7.90 to $8 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

The butchers were out strong and trade was fair, but there was a decline in the prices of cattle. Prime beeves sold at 5c to 5¼c per lb.; pretty good animals, 4c to 4¾c, and the common stock 2½c to 3¾c. There was a good demand for milch cows, and Mr. Davis of Cote St. Luke paid $00 for five good milkers; the other cows sold at $30 to $60 each. There were only a few good calves on the market, and these sold at $5 to $8 each; the others sold at $1.50 to $4 each. Sheep sold at 3¾c to 4¼c per lb., and the lambs at $3 to $5 each.

Gin Pills Cure Kidney Troubles.

OR YOUR MONEY BACK.

Read this letter from Mrs. Gargill. Has it not the ring of truth? Does it not describe your own sufferings? And does it not point the way to quick relief?

"For three years I suffered more than I can tell with terrible pains in the small of my back. When I stooped over, it seemed as though I would never be able to straighten up. I tried Kidney Pills for a year and a half, but was getting worse all the time, until advised by my neighbor to try "Gin Pills," as she had been almost similarly affected, and had been completely cured by them. I took three boxes of Gin Pills, and almost from the first dose I began to feel better. Now I am pleased to say I can do as good a day's work as ever in my life without feeling tired out. Before getting Gin Pills I had to have a girl to do my housework, but now I can do it all myself, including the washing. I will always recommend Gin Pills for kidney trouble.

"MRS. GARGILL, Winnipeg, Man."

Don't suffer the agonizing tortures of Kidney Trouble. Don't let it run into dreaded Bright's Disease. Cure yourself now with Gin Pills—the pills that cure. Sold at all druggists on a positive guarantee that they cure or you get your money back. 50c box—6 for $2.50.

If you will write asking for it and tell us the paper in which you saw this we will send you a trial box of Gin Pills absolutely free. The Bole Drug Co., Winnipeg.

The GOLDEN EGG

By M. J. Phillips

Copyright, 1906, by Beatrix Reade

When Buckley asked the sanction of his employer, Professor Rudolph Kinfein, to the marriage of that young man and Kinfein's niece, Donna, he expected that there would be extraordinary conditions attached to Kinfein's approval. Kinfein was a wealthy and eccentric scientist, metallurgist and physician, who dabbled in various strange matters for his amusement. Buckley, his assistant, had grown in time to understand the old man's oddities and to have a profound respect for the intellect which had already made several valuable scientific discoveries.

Kinfein smiled benevolently and combed his long white beard with his fingers when the younger man spoke. "Well, John," he began, "Donna is twenty-two, and of course she will marry some time. I suppose you are no worse than other men. Now, if I impose a task upon you before I give my consent you will agree to perform it?"

"If I can," replied Buckley cautiously.

The old gentleman chuckled. "It won't be very hard, John." From a private compartment beneath the laboratory shelf he drew out a box and handed it to Buckley. "Open it," he said.

John did so and revealed an oval yellow object nearly the size of a football and practically of the same shape. It seemed to be of metal.

"Now, John, there's your golden egg," went on the scientist. "I fixed it up for you in my leizure moments. If you open it inside of a month you get Donna and a wedding présent too. If not, you'll have to wait awhile.

"What tools may I use in opening it?"

"That's the point, John. You may use your own two good hands and any instrument which does not weigh over fifty grains."

"Fifty grains!" repeated John, amazed. "Why, that's less than a quarter of an ounce."

"Exactly."

John stared first at the egg and then at the scientist. "But, professor," he expostulated, "an instrument weighing fifty grains will be practically useless. Why, the blade of a small penknife weighs that much. A thin latchkey weighs more."

"But an instrument much less in weight will open that egg."

John looked dubious. "But supposing I use something which weighs more?"

"You wouldn't do it, John, if you agreed not to," responded the professor comfortably, "and I'd catch you at it if you did."

John was young, in love, and energetic. His three years' work in the various hobbies which the scientist affected had given him an unusual technical education, great confidence in himself, and a certain delicate manual dexterity which almost surpassed that of his employer, clever as the older man was. It was very natural that he should accept the challenge and bear away the egg.

He found Miss Donna in the parlor and explained the situation. It is hardly germane to mention that when the girl placed her elbows on the table and settled her chin in her pink palms to listen she looked distressingly pretty—so pretty, in fact, that John was compelled to interrupt his narrative while he kissed her.

When he had finished his account of the conditions, she rose. "You are to go right to your room, John," she commanded, "and open that egg. I'm dying to see what's in it. No; you can't stay here with me and work on it; I would disturb you." With the wariness of long experience she dodged around the table at this moment, anticipating by the fraction of a second a lunge on the part of John. From a place of safety behind a chair, she pointed to the door. "Avaunt! And tell me tomorrow morning what you found." John reluctantly gave up a chase which promised to be fruitless, and obeyed.

Settled in the easy chair in his own room, he paid the professor the compliment of examining the egg very carefully before beginning operations. He went over it with his fingers, but could feel no joints beneath the yellow paint which covered the metal. There was no depression on the surface. It was his theory that a hidden spring would open the sphere, and he spent the balance of the evening in searching for it. At midnight the secret was still undiscovered, and he gave it up for the time being.

Donna was inclined to poke fun at his failure the next morning. As the chuckling professor readily allowed her to try her hand, she spent an hour and broke two hairpins in an equally fruitless effort.

The egg was rather light than otherwise for its size, but John felt certain that machinery of some description, hidden within it, controlled the situation. By shaking it persistently he was finally rewarded by the sound of a very faint clicking. That evening he made a sort of cat's cradle of string and placed the egg therein. With the contrivance he was able to whirl the egg over and over, in this way hoping to start the machinery. Occasionally he reversed the motion, but he tired his arms with the monotonous labor to no purpose.

Next he essayed to saw his way through the metal. He secured a burglar's saw of the finest steel, but was compelled to dispense with the handle, as it brought the weight of the little instrument up to nearly 100 grains.

Intermittent labor for the next three evenings with the saw, a bit of cloth serving as a handle, resulted in some badly blistered fingers and the scratching of the paint in several places. That was all, if the fact that the egg was proved to be steel as fine and hard as the saw is excepted. In desperation Buckley attempted to crush the obstinate oval between his hands and failed again.

"I've made up my mind to get the paint off," he announced to Donna. "Then I can tell where we're at."

"We're at sea," she replied dolefully, tenderly kissing one of the blistered fingers.

Buckley secretly agreed with her, but his pride had been aroused by repeated failures and the whole souled chuckling of the professor, whose sides seemed to be shaking constantly with merriment over his assistant's predicament. He would open the egg now or die.

The young man took his penknife apart, sharpened the lightest blade to a razor edge and attacked the paint. Although it clung exasperatingly, in time he had cleared it from the surface. This revealed the presence of thousands of little holes in the metal, each closed by a minute fleck of the paint which the blade would not dislodge.

It was well into the fourth week when this was done. "Just look at those confounded needle holes!" he exclaimed in disgust.

Under the stress of a brilliant inspiration Donna jumped up and clapped her hands delightedly. "That's it, John—a needle!"

One was brought, and John set himself to the task of thrusting it carefully as far as it would go into each of the little holes. This removed the fleck of paint, and as the absence of paint showed that a hole had been tested no time was lost in subsequent explorations.

"Foxy old gentleman, your uncle," smiled John, "but he overlooked that point. If he'd thought about it, I know he'd fixed it to keep the paint out of these wretched holes."

It was the evening of the last day of the allotted month that the busy needle, penetrating farther than usual, produced the hoped for result. There was a whir of clockwork, and a heavy spring, the pressure upon it suddenly removed, thrust itself through the side of the egg.

John fished a metal cylinder from the broken shell, opened it and, with his arm around Donna's neck, read the paper which it contained. It was a check for $5,000 signed by Professor Kinfein and payable to "Mr. and Mrs. John Buckley."

The Coughing Stopped.

At a certain army post there was a sentry on duty near the hospital. The surgeon was preparing to go to bed inside when he was annoyed and alarmed at the sentry's coughing. His experienced ear told him that the man had a severe bronchial affliction, needing a strong remedy. He debated awhile with himself and then, going into the dispensing room, compounded a powerful mixture. This he took outside to the sentry, with instructions to swallow it immediately. The man refused. The surgeon insisted and finally commanded the soldier to take the medicine, which he did, with much grumbling. Then the worthy surgeon went to bed, pleased to hear no more coughing. Next morning to his surprise the commanding officer sent for him and said that the sentry had complained, declaring that the surgeon had forced him to swallow something he thought was poison. An investigation followed and revealed the fact that while the surgeon was mixing the medicine the coughing sentry had been relieved and consequently the remedy had been given to the wrong man.—London Tit-Bits.

Singular Foods.

In this country the large octopus, or squid, common on many a coast, offends the palate, but the Italian, Frenchman and Portuguese eats it with avidity and considers it a delicacy. The meat is clear and white, like chicken, and has the flavor of crab. We find the Chinaman selling eggs of unknown age, especially duck eggs containing ducklings ready to be hatched. Shark fins, a tough, disagreeable food, are in demand, while deer horns in the velvet and lizards of various kinds are eaten. The nest of the swallow, with its embedded secretion of the mouth glands of the bird, is nearly worth its weight in gold. Trepang, the tough, impossible holothrian, is eaten, and its collection is an important industry along the Malay coast, amounting to at least $100,000 per annum. In France the sea anemone is used as food; stuffed and boiled it calls to mind crab or crayfish. The sea urchins of various species are also used, cooked in their covering, like an egg, and eaten with a spoon.

Recognized by His Lung.

An eminent Scotch surgeon and professor in the University of Edinburgh was entirely devoted to his profession. A quaint incident in his practice will show this. The poet Tennyson had at one time consulted him about some affection of the lungs. Years afterward he returned on the same errand. On being announced he was nettled to observe that Mr. Syme had neither any recollection of his face nor, still more galling, acquaintance with his name. Tennyson thereupon mentioned the fact of his former visit. Still Syme failed to remember him. But when the professor put his ear to the poet's chest and heard the peculiar sound which the old ailment had made chronic he at once exclaimed: "Ah, I remember you now! I know you by your lung." Can you imagine a greater humiliation for a poet than to be known not by his lyre, but by his lung?

UNCLE ABRAHAM'S LEGACY

By A. A. Patrick

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

Although in past years Silas Bragg and his family had been the sole recipients of many benefactions from Uncle Abraham, as the burden of old age began to heap itself upon him and his earning powers became proportionately less and less the aforesaid family began to ponder over the problem of getting rid of the decrepit old gentleman against the time when his feebleness should make him absolutely dependent.

Uncle Abe, as he was called, had served as a Confederate soldier in the civil war. When Lee surrendered at Appomattox he, with thousands of other soldiers, trudged back to the places they had left four years previously, but time and war had wrought amazing changes everywhere. The few blood relations that Uncle Abe possessed were all gone. Some had died in battle, and those who remained had moved to other parts. After looking about the village he finally made arrangements for board and lodging at the Bragg homestead and, with a small square box, the only thing he carried, domiciled himself at that place.

During the first years Uncle Abe found his environments to be congenial, and his sojourn, as already stated, proved to be exceedingly profitable to Silas Bragg, who, having won the confidence and gratitude of the ex-soldier, came into possession of property of considerable value.

Consequently it was a great shock to Uncle Abe when he learned that it was the purpose of the Braggs to cast him out now that they held the title to all his property. It had been his desire to live out his days at this place. He had received intimations of their designs through the increasing irritableness of Mrs. Bragg and the unkindness of other members of the household. For days and weeks afterward he moped about the little village in a weary and dejected manner. The people would gaze after him when he passed and remark that Uncle Abe was going down mighty fast.

This state of affairs continued for nearly a month, then it was noticed that the veteran seemed to have taken a new hold on life. He moved about with an agility that belied his years; he laughed and joked with a zest that was surprising, and, above all, there lurked in his eyes a mischievous twinkle and glitter that the loungers at the village store had never taken note of before. However much the wonder was, no solution was ever reached by them.

The real cause of this gayety on the part of Uncle Abe lay in the fact that certain things had been happening at the Braggs'. Only a few evenings before, Mr. Silas Bragg, on arriving home in a rather tottery state, strongly admonished Mrs. Bragg because she apparently had not acted according to his instructions.

"Where's old gray coat?" he queried. "Is he gone yet? No? Didn't I say bounce him. What d'ye mean? Goin' to keep him here to eat a feller out o' house and home? Didn't I tell ye to make it hot for 'im? I'm a honest man, I am, an' I don't want to be hard on nobody, but he's done eat up the wuth of everything I got out o' him an' I ain't goin' to have 'im no longer. Now, ye get rid of 'im; pester the life out o' him; spill hot coffee on 'im. D'ye hear me? I say, get rid of 'im."

Having delivered himself of these weighty remarks, Mr. Bragg settled comfortably down in a chair and dozed off into a deep slumber.

On the following morning Uncle Abe did not appear at the breakfast table as he was usually wont to do. Mr. Bragg, having eaten his breakfast, again commanded Mrs. Bragg to "make it hot for 'im," and departed. An hour passed. Still Uncle Abe did not appear.

"I'll show 'im," piped the matron in a shrill voice. "I'll learn 'im to lie abed. Martha Ann, go get that syringe an' a pan o' cold water, an' give it to 'im through the keyhole." Before this order could be executed, however, a thought of such a pleasing nature entered the mind of Mrs. Bragg that it almost made her gasp for breath.

"Maybe the old codger's dead," she ejaculated. "Run, Nancy, an' see," she called out.

Nancy, as commanded, took up a position in front of Uncle Abe's room, peering cautiously through the keyhole. What she saw made her fall over backward and scramble by the hall toward the kitchen. At sight of such action on the part of Nancy, Mrs. Bragg could hardly restrain herself from shouting. She felt certain that Uncle Abe had left this earthly sphere for other parts. This opinion was soon dispelled, for when the girl had reached the kitchen and had sufficiently recovered to make explanations she told of what she had seen in something after the following manner:

"Oh, ma! Oh, ma! He had his box open on the bed, an' it's jest plum full o' greenbacker bills!"

In a little time after this occurrence Uncle Abe came out of his room. Mrs. Bragg, considering the new light on the situation, made haste to prepare a warm and tasteful meal for him. He seemed to be in excellent spirits. He ate heartily of the meal, and then pushed back his chair and made the following astounding remarks:

"Mrs. Bragg," he said, "I have just been doing a little thinking. I am getting old. At the best I can't live many years, and I don't want to be moving about. Now, I'll tell you what I am going to do. I'm going to stay with you and Silas what few days I have left. When I'm gone there's a little square box in my room which you can have. I'm not going to tell you what's in it, but I'll say this: I think that what's in the box ought to be worth a good many thousand."

"Uncle Abe," broke in Mrs. Bragg, "you are the kindest and best man in the world. Why, you have a home here as long as you live. Whatever we have you shall share it with us. You are near and dear to us, Uncle Abe, and we don't think nothin' about whether we'll get anything or not. Why, only this morning Silas was speaking to me, sayin' we must tell you this. Yes, indeed, Uncle Abe, you needn't worry about a home."

That evening when Mr. Bragg returned he looked at his wife sternly.

"Well, has old"— He didn't finish.

"Sh-h-h!" interrupted Mrs. Bragg, holding up a warning hand. Then she went over and whispered in his ear.

Mr. Bragg apparently comprehended, for in a few minutes he called out:

"Nancy, go an' see if Uncle Abe needs a fire in his room. D'ye hear me? I say, go an' see if Uncle Abe needs a fire, an' if he does build it. Martha Ann, go ask Uncle Abe what he'd like to have for supper."

After the second girl had been dispatched on an errand to Uncle Abe's room Mr. Bragg turned to his wife and said in a low tone:

"What ye want to do is to treat 'im right. Let 'im have his way 'bout anything. Give 'im everything that's good to eat—pie an' such truck as that. Don't want 'im goin' off from here waggin' that box. Whew! How much d'ye reckon's in it?"

Thus the old soldier entered upon an era of unbroken peace and quiet and good living. His every whim was humored. He was petted and waited on continually. There was no length to which the Braggs would not go to put Uncle Abe at ease. They even furnished him with small sums of money. He told them that he had some money, but did not wish to break a bill. Seeing that they would get all his bills in time to come they were not reluctant to humor him in this, as also they did in many other things. Indeed if anything were refused Uncle Abe he would begin to make preparations which, the startled Bragg family thought, were signs that he meant to remove himself and the square box to some other place. This would never do, of course, and after a sound rating from Silas they would again be whipped into the line of obedience and homage to the ex-soldier.

In the course of time, as was natural, Uncle Abe died, and Mr. Bragg, in a last splendid burst of generosity, gave him a fitting burial. When the sad rites were over Mr. Bragg hastened to return home.

Followed by Mrs. Bragg and Nancy Bragg and Martha Ann Bragg, he unlocked a certain room, unlocked a certain trunk and unlocked a certain box, and—a cry of joy died half uttered in his throat. He got upon his feet and kicked the cat and dog into the yard, then cursed till the very walls of the building trembled. Neighbors heard the shrill voice of Mrs. Bragg and the deep curses of Silas and wondered what the trouble could be.

The box was full of Confederate bills. On top of them lay a little note, which read:

"I think—I always did think—this money ought to be worth a good many thousand dollars, but it is not."

Letters From the Insane.

Among the many "crank" letters that drift from time to time into the offices of most large corporations, especially into publishing houses, are a number bearing a typewritten postscript as follows:

> The law obliges us to send the inclosed letter, but we add this to let you know that the writer is an inmate of the —— asylum and that any attention paid to it will be at your risk.

Sometimes the "crank" epistles are mere business formulas requesting a year's subscription to the magazine and promising to pay when the first copy arrives, but others contain urgent, voluble appeals for all sorts of destructibles, of which the mildest are revolvers and cartridges. The momentary whims represented by the letters are almost limitless in their variety. The chirography of such notes is interesting from a pathological standpoint, as usually, however regularly formed, it is shaky and disjointed or broken, betraying physical and mental breakdown.—New York Press.

A Hole In a Stone.

When primitive man pierced a hole through a stone for decorative purposes mainly the resultant was due to a great deal of trouble and expenditure of time. When he came across a stone with a hole in it he thought the perforation was due to some miraculous power, and accordingly he endowed the stone with supernatural attributes. Man's belief in the marvelous ought to diminish in exact proportion to his information. A stone may be formed of the same silex, only one portion is crystalline, the other amorphous. While the crystalline part resists abrasion and solution the amorphous does not. If the amorphous part lie in the center of a stone which is in the water it wastes away, and so a hole is the result.

Neighborly.

A merry party being gathered in a city flat made such a racket that the occupant of a neighboring house sent his servant over with a polite message asking if it would be possible for the party to make less noise, since, as the servant announced, "Mr. Smith says that he cannot read." "I am sorry for Mr. Smith," replied the host. "Please present my compliments to your master, say that I am sorry he cannot read and tell him I could when I was four years old."—London Judy.

Canada the Future Granary.

James J. Hill of the Great Northern Railroad, who is planning to construct a large railroad system in western Canada, predicts that by 1910 the population of the United States will have risen to one hundred million, at which time the home supply of wheat will be far from sufficient to supply the 6 1-2 bushels per inhabitant needed every year. At that time he thinks Canada will be the granary of the United States and he is planning to anticipate the great stream of traffic which must flow across the boundary line in coming years.

The Best Calf Food.

Separated milk as a food for calves, when fed direct from the machine, makes a model milk food. Careful experiments show that practically as good calves can be raised on separated milk direct from the machine, as can be raised on whole milk provided the butter fat lost in the removal of the cream is replaced by linseed meal, corn meal, or flour or molasses.

Thunder Storms and Sour Milk.

The primary cause of sour milk is the growth of certain bacteria that are always very numerous in the air and cannot be kept out of the milk. These are most abundant during damp heavy weather, which usually accompanies thunderstorms; as such weather is particularly favorable to their development. Hence, the popular notion that thunderstorms make milk sour.

HORTICULTURAL.

Success With Peaches.

The peach is one of our finest fruits when well cared for, but of late it is uncertain and does not seem so hardy. It is a native of Asia and China, where the climate is much less severe than ours. The favorite soil is a light, sandy loam. To insure a peach crop every year some method must be devised to protect the fruit buds from winter killing. Generally they are destroyed if the temperature falls lower than 10 or 15 degrees below zero.

A disease known as the yellows is a serious hindrance to peach culture. There is no permanent cure for it. At least the cure is not worth the pay; the best doctor is the axe; it is contagious, spreading to other trees. The first indication of the yellows is that the fruit is small and ripens prematurely, and instead of the color being shaded very evenly, we find it in spots, too highly colored. The leaves turn yellow very early in the season. Another pest is the borer. The borer is first a moth, which lays its eggs during June and July in the crevices of the bark near the ground. As soon as the eggs are hatched, the little grubs work in through the thin places of the bark and pass the winter in hibernation. Early in the spring they begin to feed on the tender inner bark. By the first week in June they are full grown, when they spin cocoons and go into the pupal state. The cocoon may be found clinging to the bark just below the surface, or in the ground near the trunk. In about six days it changes into an adult moth, which, in a short time, mates, and lays from two hundred to six hundred eggs. A sure preventive is the application of coal tar to the tree. The worming or digging-out method is the only successful way to exterminate the borer. Masses of gum and sawdust generally indicate where they are feeding. After the borers are removed the tree should be treated with the tar to prevent the new borers from laying their eggs on the trunk. The ground should be thrown up around the tree in a mound, and remain so until spring. While the tar is a preventive, and is perfectly harmless, other applications should be avoided. Experiments have proved that anything strong enough to be effective is detrimental to the trees. The borer must be dug out with a knife, care must be taken not to cut farther than is absolutely necessary. The borer will always be found just under the bark, as they never go deep into the wood. Many supposed attacks of yellows have been traced to this source.

Among the Orchardists

To get rid of the black knot take a sharp knife and cut off the knots.

Thorough cultivation is necessary that the trees may get moisture. Much moisture is drawn from the atmosphere by the trees. Apple trees, if properly cared for, will continue to bear for a hundred years.

The men who are making money out of their orchards are, as a rule, those who are growing single varieties, and growing them to perfection. The list that will perhaps give the best general satisfaction for market is as follows: Baldwin, Gravenstein, King of Tompkins, Ben Davis, Northern Spy, various russets and McIntosh Red.

THE HEN VERSUS THE COW.

By a comparison of the intrinsic value of an individual hen, and her cost of maintenance for a year, we find that in proportion to her value and cost she far exceeds the returns given by a cow. Fifty good laying pullets are worth no more than a good dairy cow — considering their utility only, and eliminating from the comparison their value for exhibition or fancy breeding purposes. Fifty good strong utility pullets, if given good common-sense management, will yield a profit for a year, over and above their feed, of $75—$1.50 per hen per year. If the same flock of hens is given scientific treatment the income may be greatly increased. It is safe to say that there are few cows which, when their feed is paid for, return a net profit of $75 a year to the owner.

Make this comparison not for the purpose of disparaging the dairy interests, but to emphasize the possibility of the hen as a staple farm product. More especially should it be emphasized in those cases of sterilized farms, where even the soil is too poor for even ordinary grazing. A large percentage of farms has one or more acres unfit for even pasture. Such land is ideal land for poultry, provided it is dry. A field of rocks growing up to sprouts and briars is an ideal situation for poultry and can be made to return a handsome profit to the owner.

Care Essential to Success.

It is not to be supposed, however, that poultry will thrive without care. The trouble with poultry in the past has been that it has been neglected. The average farmer belittles the hen and considers her beneath his dignity —of no value, and fit only for the attention of the women folks. If the average farmer would keep a flock of from one to three hundred laying hens, and give them half the care he gives his cows and hogs, he would find the balance sheet at the end of the year in favor of the hens. There is a saying that "a hen will eat anything a hog will and make a good deal better use of it." If farmers would raise less pork and more fowl and feed more clean, wholesome grain to their hens, and less brewery refuse to their cows, we would find fewer farm mortgages begging for takers.

Fresh Eggs in Summer.

Not only in the winter is there a demand for absolutely fresh eggs. In fact, experience is that it is more difficult to obtain a supply of really well-flavored eggs in the cities in July than in January. I have known cases where eggs have been purchased from grocers in midsummer, and half of the eggs were of objectionable flavor, while the other half were positively bad.

This is not all due to dishonesty on the part of farmers. It is not all owing to people knowingly sending stale eggs to market.

Summer is the natural breeding season of the fowl, and eggs, where males run with the hens, are then strongly fertile. There are also a lot of broody hens about at the same time. Now, what follows when, as usually is the case, eggs are gathered late in the evening, or, possibly, once in two days? One hen lays an egg early in the morning, another follows suit later, perhaps a third or fourth or fifth comes and lays in the same nest. By this time the first egg is getting pretty well warmed up. Then a broody hen comes and occupies the same nest until evening or next morning. What is the result?

Foster and Balfour tell us that some development takes place in the germ of the egg with eight hours covering. If an egg in that condition is taken to market, the cell will be ruptured in handling, and then decomposition sets in, and the flavor is ruined. Pick up the eggs three or more times a day.

THE HORSE.

Sidebone.

This is a disease that comes to a horse on the outside of the front foot just above the hoof. There is a cartilage there, probably used to give somewhat of a spring to the heel. In a healthy horse, you place your finger there and you can spring that cartilage, but sometimes that turns into sidebone. In young growing colts, if the feet turn on the outside, it causes inflammation, a bony growth is thrown out, and we have sidebone. Then, again, a horse may become bruised there by another horse stepping on him, or something in the field, and it causes a sidebone. The sidebone may not do any particular harm where it is soft, around on your farm, but when you get that horse on frozen ground or in the city, he gets lame. We cannot treat it any more than any other bone disease. All we can do is to put on some kind of irritating liniment and irritate it and bring the blood there.

Renovating a Horse.

Farm horses generally have a hard spring, as arrears of work have to be caught up hurriedly, and the soil is exceptionally heavy to work. The horses will, undoubtedly enjoy and benefit by a rest or less work, and being out at the grass is a great easement in many ways. The buggy or riding horse on the farm is not usually overworked, and unless on extra duty the grass alone should keep it in condition. Any partial cripples that have been made as much use of as possible—and an old horse or two are often very useful on the farm —should be given a complete rest on the grass to recoup against haying time. When there is a milk run, the milk cart horse is the one which has as much hard work to do as any one on the farm. He is at it daily Sunday included, which sooner or later generates weakness, mostly in the legs, and a rest on the grass is not only well merited, but highly advantageous, especially if given in time, and before the animal has become a chronic cripple.

When these horses are put out and rested a month or so—and this is none too long — they should have their shoes taken off and run barefooted. Hacks which have been much employed during the winter, but are now not so much used, should never be kept in the stable, as a run at grass is much the better way of either resting or improving them. If the winter work has been hard, and the horses are run down, the sooner the rest and grass cure is begun the better. To run them on till the fall will only increase their ailments, while a rest in time will often quite cure deficiencies, which, if let go, or aggravated by further cause, may end in serious loss or permanent flaws. A horse that really needs a rest should have nothing short of one month. Two would be better in many cases, while three months will rejuvenate most animals in a satisfactory manner.

If possessed of any ailments which no veterinarian can relieve or remove, this attention should be given when grazing begins, or grazing should follow the treatment closely, if it cannot be accomplished when on grass and out. The most favorable land for recruiting horses is that of a marshy character. Leg and foot ailments are the most common, and soft ground is desirable as a remedy, but it should always be associated with good grass. A good water supply should invariably be a condition of horse grazing fields, which should be absolutely free of barbed wire, broken rails, or sharp projections, which are likely to enter either foot or body. Shade in hot weather is also enjoyed, and if not sufficiently supplied by trees, an open shed should be erected. In that case rough, strong posts and any kind of cool roof answer the purpose perfectly.

BREEDERS' NOTES.

Keep the stables clean: standing in wet manure tends to make the feet of the horses tender.

Systematic training is of value in handling young colts: teach them one thing at a time and learn it thoroughly.

It certainly is a phenomenal increase in values from $3,200 to $45,000, that, too, in less than a year. The larger sum is that paid for the two-year-old running colt, De Mund, that was purchased by Paul J. Rainey, after the colt had "breezed" a half in the mud in forty-six seconds, a 1.32 gait. Eleven months ago the colt was knocked down at the dispersal of the Rancho del Paso Stud for $3,200. But one two-year-old (thoroughbred) ever sold for more money, that being Nasturtium, for which the late W. C. Whitney gave $50,000; the latter was also raised at the same farm as De Mund.

The horse commission men, dealers, buyers, feeders, shippers and liverymen are in a great measure responsible for the improvement of horse breeding. They put the price up on the good horses and set the pace for improvement. They pay a premium for the superior quality they find in a good trade or a high-class horse in the farmer's hands, and tell him to breed that kind, and to improve on his breeding with better mares and the best stallions. They are eager to buy more good horses to supply their trade, and go to the limit of the market price to get the best young horses as fast as they mature. These men are experts in the value of a horse; their experience in buying and selling so many horses has taught them the market value of a horse. They delight in fine horses, and cheerfully pay a good price for a good horse, according to his condition. If thin in flesh and not broken to work or to drive they must feed and handle him at great expense to fit him for market, and would gladly pay a higher price to the farmers if they would condition their horses ready to sell in the market to the city people who want the horses finished, ready to work and drive. They want them fat, well broken and in perfect condition.

NOTES.

The Ashley Stock Farm through its manager, has secured the highly-bred stallion, "Noble Lad," by Noble Wilkes, 2.13 1-4 over half-mile track. Noble Lad stands 15.3, a beautiful bay and pure gaited. The farm has also purchased a half-brother to Handy.

The great curative powers of this remarkable remedy is attracting much attention, and everywhere it has been introduced it is winning its way among the people. It is a powerful, penetrating oil, which we believe has a larger percentage of cures of rheumatism to its credit than any other remedy ever offered for this dread disease. It acts directly on the bone —the lodging place of rheumatism—dispels the poisonous acid from the joints to be carried out of the system in the natural way and by its splendid work has proved that the surest and quickest method of getting relief from the torturing pains of rheumatism, as well as the common sense way, is by a direct attack on the affected part. For the small ills of life it is invaluable.

TUCK'S BONE OIL.

Mrs. W. H. Thomas, of Lombardy, writes as follows: I was subject to stiff neck. Suffered for years and have been as long as two weeks at a time not able to turn my head without turning my whole body. I doctored and got relief, only to have the trouble return again. In August last I had a severe attack and I tried Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil, having been reading in the papers about how good it was for rheumatism, &c. Three applications completely cured me and I have had no return of the trouble since. I recommend Tuck's Bone Oil to everyone.

MRS. W. H. THOMAS,
Lombardy, Ont.

For rheumatism, lame back, neuralgia, sprains, coughs, colds, quinsy or bronchitis, in short for any and all kinds of inflammation there is nothing to equal Tuck's Bone Oil. A bottle should be on the shelf in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ont.

IN OLDEN TIMES.

People Were Content to Take Things Easier Than Now.

If our forefathers could behold modern locomotives, automobiles and electric cars, they would hold up their hands in astonishment.

The stage coach was fast enough then—people were more content to take things easy.

They used to be satisfied with any sort of a hair lotion that came along —if it did not prevent Baldness they thought it was because Baldness could not be prevented.

It's different now. People know that germs cause Baldness and that Newbro's Herpicide kills the germ, thus curing Dandruff and preventing Baldness.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Rice and Strawberries.

Boil half a cupful of well washed and dried rice in one quart of boiling water for twenty minutes. Drain it and put into a double boiler with a little salt; a tablespoonful of sugar and milk enough to cover it. Cook until the rice is thoroughly soft and the milk is all absorbed. Make a thick syrup of one cupful each of water and sugar and let it cool. In the centre of a glass dish heap strawberries, arrange the rice around them, and over the whole pour the syrup. Serve at once.

Deviled Lobster.

This is one of the things that can be made with canned lobster. Half of a can of lobster will be needed for this savory. Melt one ounce of butter in a pan, add one tablespoonful of chutney and one tablespoonful made mustard. Have a few rounds of bread fried in hot fat and keep them hot. Heat the mixture in the pan, add the lobster chopped finely and a few soft white breadcrumbs. Stir till boiling, then place on the hot bread and garnish with cut lemon and parsley. Canned salmon or the remains of canned tongue may be used in the same manner.

Luncheon Cake.

Five eggs, leaving out two of the whites, the yolks and whites to be beaten separately, the latter to a froth like snow, five-ounce lump sugar dissolved in a wineglass of water; put it into a saucepan to boil, pour the dissolved sugar boiling to the eggs, stirring it well at the time, beat it, and when nearly cold mix in a quarter pound flour by degrees; bake three-quarters of an hour.

Eggs and Tomato.

For an appetizing dish, cover the bottom of each individual egg shirrer with tomato sauce that has been highly seasoned with paprika and onion. Drop into each a pouched egg, place on it a small piece of butter and put for a few minutes in the oven.

Rhubarb Creams.

Clean and cut up two small bundles of rhubarb; put it into a baking dish which has been rinsed with cold water; cover it closely and let it cook in a moderately hot oven until it is quite soft. The rhubarb must be looked at occasionally from time to time to prevent it burning; on taking it from the oven sweeten it, add the grated rind of a lemon, and pass it through a sieve. Whip some cream, sweeten it and mix it by degrees with an equal quantity of the prepared rhubarb, and color it with carmine. Fill some little china cases with the cream and serve with a glace cherry on top of each.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Hot soda baths are recommended by some persons for rheumatism, and the way they are taken is this: Fill the tub half full of water as hot as can be borne, add half a pound of common baking soda, and immerse the body for at least twenty minutes, keeping up the temperature by the addition of hot water from time to time. Vaseline or cold cream should be rubbed into the skin after the latter has been dried, in order to replace the natural oils.

The fashion of small safes concealed in unlikely places is such a popular one that any piece of furniture may now be used to baffle burglars. The latest is a linen chest, a substantial thing of oak or cedar, which contrives to hide a safe. The safe is fire as well as burglar proof.

When gelatine dishes are put away to cool, be sure to cover the mould with a piece of window glass or a plate. Gelatine is the best germ catcher in the world, and is used in laboratories and hospitals to gather bacteria.

To change the sheets of an invalid's bed when the invalid is too ill to be moved is not always easy. Of course, the upper sheet can be taken off in the usual way. The chief difficulty lies with the lower one. Begin to roll the under sheet lengthwise over to where the patient lies. Then put on the near sheet, which should also be rolled or folded lengthwise. As you unroll the new sheet tuck it in securely at all sides. When the two rolls of sheeting are side by side—next to the patient—lift the patient over on to the clean side, if she cannot turn over without aid. The old sheet is then removed and the new one spread out evenly as it should be.

Don't pack clothes in a trunk which has not been used for some time without airing the latter; it may have been lying in a damp corner.

A stale angel cake may serve as a quickly made dessert by cutting it into even pieces, saturating each piece with whipped cream, properly sweetened and flavored. Decorate each service with bits of candied fruit.

There are many people who do not like a salad of dandelion leaves. The bitter flavor of this plant will not be so noticeable if equal quantities of dandelion and lettuce are used, or, better yet, one-third dandelion to two-thirds lettuce. Serve with French dressing.

A woman who loves animals gives the following advice in regard to the care of young kittens: Do not leave the bed of newborn kittens in the dark too long, else on coming into the light they will be afflicted with sore eyes. Dampness will also cause this trouble. The bed must not be a cold one. It is better to give only warm food to the kittens' mother for the first two days. Any water given her must have the chill removed. Also give her plenty of warm milk, and as the kittens increase in size the amount of food given her should be increased.

To keep moth and buffalo bugs from rugs and carpets sprinkle them well with salt, then wipe with a cloth dampened with warm water having spirits of turpentine added in the proportion of a spoonful to every quart of water.

STIR.

A stir on the brink of evening,
A tint in the warm gray sky,
The sound of loosened rivers,
And spring goes by.

A stir at the rim of water,
A wing on the crisp midnight,
A herald from dusk to gloaming
In northward flight.

A stir in the dawn rearousing
The wild, undeparted unrest,
To forth in the springtime and follow
The infinite quest.

A stir of the golden April
By Indian willow and stream,
The sap goes upward with morning,
And death is a dream.

FAMOUS FIGHT RECALLED.

Facts About the Heenan-Sayers Battle Forty-Six Years Ago.

The great fight for the championship of England and the world was fought at Farnborough on April 17, 1860, between Tom Sayers of London, and J. H. Heenan, the "Benicia Boy," an American. The contest, being generally regarded as an international trial of "pluck," excited the keenest interest in both hemispheres, and revived for a time the faded glories of the prize ring. The "noble" art of self-defence indeed, has been lauded time after time by Englishmen of all classes, and when considered in opposition to the use of the treacherous knife or the fatal firearm, is not without its merits.

The Times alluded to the affair in a leading article, and Punch celebrated its occurrence in a "Lay (after Macaulay) of Modern London" under the title of the "Fight of Sayerius and Heenanius." Dukes' sons, cooks' sons, peers and peers' sons were there; members of Parliament in plenty; army men, authors, poets, painters, even clergymen, "men about town," "members of the fancy," a vast variety of low life, many of them open to suspicion, some long past suspicion.

Sayers had met and defeated many of the best fighters of the time, and had only been beaten once — by Nat Langham, the most accomplished boxer of the day. Sayers was five feet eight inches in height and weighed ten stones ten pounds. Heenan stood six feet one and one-half inches and was a powerful heavyweight, with extraordinary long-reaching arms. Time after time Sayers was knocked down by blows, each of which seemed sufficient to settle the fight but he always came up in good, if grim humor, and planted blow after blow on the American's eyes, and even succeeded in knocking his opponent down. After fighting, amid many interruptions, thirty-seven rounds in about two hours and two minutes, Heenan getting Sayers into such a position on the ropes that strangulation seemed imminent, the ropes were cut by the crowd, the police entered the ring, and, amidst the wildest confusion, the combatants were hurried off the field by their respective friends, Heenan all but blind and Sayers with his right arm powerless.

The appropriation of the stakes and honors gave rise to the fiercest controversy. Subsequently, however, each received a belt, and Sayers retired from the championship on May 30, 1860. It has been said of "poor Tom" that "with his name was associated all that was bold, generous, manly and honest in pugilism." Three thousand pounds were raised for him by public subscription, the interest of which was paid to him on condition that he fought no more. The money was afterward divided among his children on their coming of age. He died Nov. 8, 1865, in the fortieth year of his age.—Spare Moments.

The Army of a Dream.

Some time ago Mr. Roger Pocock wrote a book called: A Frontiersman," which had a good many ideas in it, and was a vivid story of the adventurous life of a true son of the empire, a typical member of the "Legion that never was 'listed." From that book comes the title, from its author comes the idea, of the Legion of Frontiersmen in process of accompaniment. Just as "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," by Besant and Rice, was the origin of the People's Palace in the east end, just as from Charles Reade's "Never Too Late to Mend" dates a strong movement of prison reform, so from "A Frontiersman" dates the inception of the Legion of Frontiersmen. The Legion is the army of a dream, and the growth of that dream is traceable through the pages of an autobiography which already ranks as a classic in the annals of real adventure. "A Frontiersman," and seven other books by the same author, are now to be published in aid of the patriotic fund for the establishment of the new corps.

OF THE LAST CENTURY.

Lord Lamington Wonders Whether Pre-eminently Beautiful Women Are Rarer Than In Days of Walpole.

"I have often wondered whether the pre-eminently beautiful women are rarer than they were in the time of Horace Walpole, who tells us that when the Miss Gunnings passed through Doncaster the street was full of an admiring crowd at early dawn to see them start for the north; and you remember that George III. ordered an officer's guard to protect one of them, Lady Coventry, from being pressed upon by the people when she walked in the Mall.

"We see nothing of such excitement in these days," writes Alexander, Lord Lamington in The London Daily Mail.

Crowded to See Her.

"The costumes of that time may have had something to do with this. Each class had its own style of dress: the laced bodices, brocaded petticoats, bright stockings, and German hoops of the upper classes may have aided to attract attention. Now and then, in my time, some paragon of beauty, independent of rank and attractive dress, was occasionally to be seen.

"I remember a friend telling me Miss Maclean was so beautiful that whenever she appeared in Edinburgh, where she resided, a crowd collected; on one occasion when he accompanied her to a shop in Princes street, police had to be sent for to clear the way, and when that evening she entered the theatre the audience stood up in homage to her charms.

"I can recall one person who came up to this standard of perfection. I was with her in Paris, and walking in the Champs Elysees was one of the most unpleasant processes I ever went through. It was almost impossible to move, from the crowds of admirers rushing by, and then turning back to look at her.

"At last we took a fiacre, and escaped this unwelcome demonstration.

"Lord Ponsonby, I have heard his contemporaries say, was the handsomest man of his time.

Saved by His Looks.

"It is rarely, indeed, that a man's life is preserved by his beauty. He was not twenty when he passed through Paris in 1791. War had not been declared, but there was a strong feeling against England. At that time the lamps were hung across the streets—hence the cry, 'A la lanterne.'

"When any unhappy victim was taken, the process of hanging him was a very simple one. Lord Ponsonby, walking in the Rue St. Honore, was so unfortunate as to fall in with the mob, who seized him with the cry, 'Voila un agent de Pitt; un sacre Anglais! a la lanterne!'

"The lamp was taken down, the cords placed round his neck, and he was actually hanging in the air, when the women, who played such a prominent part throughout the revolution, rushed forward and cut the cords.

"'C'est un trop joli garçon pour etre pendu,' was the cry. He fell on the pavement, and was immediately carried off by his protectors and carefully tended.

"Among the foreigners I remember there was a very distinguished artist who afforded us much entertainment—M. Gudin, the great marine painter. Some of his sea-pieces were wonderful in their power and conception.

"Gudin was one of the liveliest of Frenchmen. A great Anglomanian, it was delightful to see him equipped for le sport. His shooting costume was a little better adapted for the Palais Royal arcades than for our moors I went out shooting with him one day, when he allowed all the birds to escape. At last he wounded a hare, which, however, was able to limp away.

"Gudin's excitement was intense; in vain he tried to get another shot. At last he threw down his gun, to the amusement of the whole party, ran after the hare, and at last fairly outran his poor victim, caught it within his arms, and returned triumphant.

A Famous Dandy.

"The extravagances of dandy life have been widely told; but these vanities were merely the ripple on the surface of superior merit.

"Count d'Orsay was a brilliant leader of the dandy class—strikingly handsome, of a splendid physique, a commanding appearance, an admirable horseman of the Haute Ecole school. When he appeared in the perfection of dress (for the tailors' art had not died out with George IV.), with that expression of self-confidence and self-complacency which the sense of superiority gives, he was the observed of all. Add to this his real accomplishments — a sculptor, an excellent artist, and the possessor of a happy faculty of seizing the expression and drawing an admirable likeness in a remarkably short time.

"Men took great pains with themselves in those days — they did not slouch and moon through life; and it was remarkable how highly they were appreciated by the crowd, not only of the upper but the lower classes. I have frequently ridden down to Richmond with Count d'Orsay. A striking figure he was in his blue coat with gilt buttons, thrown well back to show the wide expanse of snowy shirt-front and buff waistcoat; his tight leathers and polished boots; his well-curled whiskers and handsome countenance; a wide-brimmed, glossy hat, spotless white gloves. He was the very beau-ideal of a leader of fashion."

Tarring and Feathering.

The peculiar form of punishment adopted by the Scots Guards' subalterns in the recent ragging case, that of tarring and feathering, is popularly supposed to be American in its origin. This, however, is not the case: it is known to antiquarians to have been employed at least 700 years ago, and that in our country.

When Richard Coeur de Lion set out on the third crusade, he made sundry regulations for his army, and one of them was this: "A robber who shall be convicted of theft shall have his head cropped after the fashion of a champion, and boiling pitch shall be poured thereon, and the feathers of a cushion shall be shaken out on him, so that he may be known, and at the first land at which the ship shall touch he shall be set on shore." It is interesting to know what an ancient army custom this has been!

QUAINT PRESENTS.

Odd Wedding Gifts That Have Been Received by Celebrities.

Celebrities are often the recipients of quaint presents. For instance, on the marriage of Queen Victoria the farmers of East and West Pennard, Somersetshire, wishing to show their loyalty, manufactured from the milk of 750 cows an immense cheese nine feet in circumference. The gift was graciously accepted and was stored at Buckingham palace, where it would undoubtedly have found its way to the royal table had not its donors wished to exhibit it as an advertisement. Their request was granted, but after it had been exhibited and the makers would have returned it her majesty signified that owing to the altered conditions she could not accept it as a gift.

An equally homely gift was made to the late King Charles of Wurttemburg on the morning of his marriage to Princess Olga of Russia. A peasant woman sent him a pair of trousers of her own design, with a note expressing the hope that they might be found a better cut and fit than those which she had last had the honor of seeing his majesty wear.

The Italian singer, Signor Mario, inspired a hopeless passion in the hearts of so many women that at the time of his wedding some of this affection found expression in various strange gifts. One was in the shape of a cushion stuffed with tresses from the heads of many of his hopeless admirers. Another was from a lady in Munich who had had one of her teeth set in a scarfpin surrounded with pearls and emeralds. In an accompanying note she expressed the hope that by sometimes wearing the gift he might be reminded of his unknown worshiper.

THE FIRST SPECTACLES.

They Were Made In Italy In the Thirteenth Century.

Spectacles were invented late in the thirteenth century. The use of glass to aid the sight of defective eyes is, however, much older. Nero looked through a concave glass in watching the gladiatorial games, and many other historical men of his day were dependent on similar devices for lengthening their sight.

Till the latter part of the thirteenth century only the single glass was in use. In 1290 the double glass was invented, and in the fourteenth century spectacles were used quite frequently by the very wealthy and high born, although they were still so scarce that they were bequeathed in will with all the elaborate care that marked the disposition of a feudal estate. The first spectacles were made in Italy.

Somewhat later the manufacture of cheaper glasses sprang up in Holland, and it spread late in the fourteenth century to Germany, Nuremberg and Rathenow acquired fame for their glasses between 1490 and 1500.

For many years glasses were used only as a means of aiding bad eyes, until the fashion of wearing merely for the sake of wearing them sprang up in Spain. It spread rapidly to the rest of the continent and brought about the transformation of the old thirteenth century spectacles into eyeglasses and eventually into the monocle.

Quicksilver.

Quicksilver is found in veins of rocks, like gold, silver and other metals. Sometimes the tiny globules of the mercury appear in the interstices of the rock, but usually it is found in the form of cinnabar, a chemical compound containing 13.8 per cent of sulphur and 86.2 per cent mercury. When pure and reduced to a powder it is a bright red color.

The principal uses of quicksilver are for removing free gold and silver in placer and quartz mining, for manufacturing vermillion paints and dyes, for backing mirrors, for making thermometers and many other scientific instruments.

What Water Did.

A certain liquor dealer, a hard headed old Scot, grew rich in the trade. After he had grown rich the old man built himself a fine house, a limestone mansion on the hill, with a park around it, with conservatories, stables and outbuildings—in a word, a palace. One day the old Scot rode in the omnibus past his fine house. A temperance man pointed up at the grand edifice and said, with a sneer, "It was the whisky built that, wasn't it?" "Na, na, man; the water," the Scot answered.—London Mail.

The First Sapphire.

There is an Indian legend that Brahma, the creator, once committed a sin that he might know the torments of remorse and thus be able to sympathise with mortals. But the moment he had committed it he began repeating the mantras, or prayers of purification, and in his grief dropped on the earth a tear, the hottest that ever fell from an eye, and from it was formed the first sapphire.

Happy Thought.

Doctor—Your throat affection is one of the rarest in the world and is of the deepest interest to the medical profession. Patient—Then remember, doctor, when you make out your bill that I haven't charged anything for letting you look down my throat.

The Strong Point.

He—Really, I never loved anybody before. She—That isn't the point. Are you sure you'll never love anybody by and by?

In so far as you approach temptation to a man, you do him an injury, and if he is overcome you share his guilt.—Johnson.

Short Session of the City Council.

It looked for a while last night as though there would be no session of the City Council. There was no quorum at 8 o'clock, but finally the sixth man arrived. Ald. Knox and Gordon came in later. The absentees were Ald. Marsh, Cooper and McCrodan. Nothing of very much importance was transacted, and the session only lasted about three-quarters of an hour.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From H. Cameron & Co., re fire engines.—Referred to Fire committee.

From the Provincial Long Distance Telephone Company.—Referred to Executive committee.

From a street paving company, re block pavements. — Referred to Public Works committee.

From F. J. Allenhardt, of Michigan, re site for factory to manufacture patent washing machines. Belleville had been recommended as a desirable location. What inducements would be given the company to locate here? The City Clerk was instructed to write Mr. Allenhardt, telling of the many advantages of Belleville, and assuring him that the Council would make things as pleasant as possible for new industries.

From the Sidney Township Council, asking the City Council to expend $20 on a road connecting Belleville with Sidney, the Township Council agreeing to spend the same amount.—Referred to the Public Works committee.

From the Deacon Shirt Manufacturing Company, setting forth the bad drainage which existed on certain streets in West Belleville, the same being particularly injurious during the spring floods, and asking, in the name of taxpayers in that section, that the grievance be remedied. It was pointed out that this matter was now in the hands of a committee, and no further action was taken by the Council.

From Mr. Waterous, of the G.T.R., stating that Mr. W. H. Biggar had been too busy to attend to the Franck St. crossing and other matters in which the city was interested, and stating that the matter would be attended to very shortly.

The following accounts were passed:

Jas. Morris & Co.	$ 5.50
Belleville Portland Cement Co. on account	1,000
Schuster Co.	40.56
R. C. Hulme	3.00
Thos. Thomson	6.00
W. A. Lucas	42.50
Tickell Co.	6.00
Drummond, McColl & Co.	25.50

The reports of the various standing committees, as already published, were adopted without discussion or change.

Ald Paterson was chairman in committee of the whole.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Sinclair asked if anything had been done by the G.T.R. re the crossing at North Front St.

Mr. Mikel said the G.T.R. gang was now working in this vicinity again. Perhaps some work might shortly be done at the place in question.

Under the head of by-laws, the Mayor said there were two important measures to come before the Council, but they must have at least eight of the Council present. They would have to have a special meeting to pass the by-laws in question.

POLES ON MARKET SQUARE.

Under the head of unfinished business, Ald. Green said the manager of the Trenton Electric Company had approached him for permission to erect two poles on the market square. This was sought to be done as the wires at present were alleged to conflict with trees near Mrs. Greatrix's property. Ald. Green thought the poles, if permission were granted, would not do any harm or be in anybody's way. The Street Surveyor was of the same opinion.

A discussion ensued, Ald. Panter, Sinclair and the Mayor not being in favor of giving the permission till the matter had been further looked into.

It was finally, on motion of Ald. Sinclair, referred to a committee consisting of the Chairmen of Light and Market and the City Solicitor, the committee to report at the next meeting.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mayor Sulman announced that he was about to leave the city for a couple of weeks or so, and had appointed Ald. Panter acting mayor during his absence.

The aldermen and reporters gazed sympathizingly at His Worship, and the universal hope was expressed that unadulterated happiness would attend him on his trip.

Ald. Knox said he was, next Tuesday going to leave the city for some six or eight weeks. He would like permission to tear himself away from the Council.

The Chairman of Parks was granted two months' leave of absence, and the Council adjourned at 8.45.

Former Belleville Boy Married in Newark, O.

The Newark, Ohio, Daily Advocate of Thursday, June 7, contains the following account of the marriage of a former Belleville boy:

"A pretty wedding, solemnized at Corning, O., Wednesday noon, united the lives of two well-known young people of Newark, Mr. Reuben C. Luscombe and Miss Helen Genevieve Tait. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Thomas Tait, by Rev. Mr. Hughes, pastor of the First M. E. Church of that place. Only a few friends and relatives of the bride and groom were present to witness the ceremony, which was a simple ring service. After the congratulations were extended to the young couple, an elaborate wedding dinner was served to a small party of wedding guests. Twelve persons were seated at the tables. The decorations in the house were roses and carnations. During the ceremony Miss Tait was attended by Miss Beulah Alderman and Mr. Clyde Trumbel, of Corning, acted as best man to the groom.

"Mr. and Mrs. Luscombe came to Newark during the evening and have taken apartments at 183 North Fourth street for the present. Both friends in Newark, who extend to Mr. and Mrs. Luscombe have many them heartiest congratulations."

The Intelligencer business office will close at 5 p.m. on Saturdays—other days at 6 p.m.

Accident to G.T.R. Brakeman Yesterday

A G.T.R. brakesman named Fred Maynes, whose home is in York, at an early hour yesterday morning met with a painful accident in the yard here. It appears that he was running towards a switch to open the same, when he fell headlong and his head came in contact with some portion of the switch. The result was Maynes sustained a severe scalp wound, which required a number of stitches to be taken. The unfortunate man was taken to the hospital, where he is doing well.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

Matters of Moment to Military Men.

A, B and C companies and the Bugle Band of the Fifteenth Regiment were inspected last evening upon the hospital lot by Col. Young, the inspecting officer. The various companies were well filled up and all appeared to be well up in their drill. The Inspecting Officer commented favorably upon the Bugle Band's marching and playing, and also paid a high compliment to B Company, commanded by Capt. Hayes.

This evening D, E and F Companies will be inspected and to-morrow evening the Regiment will have general inspection.

There is much interest and speculation among the officers and men as to which company will capture the cup this year, and it is thought that the honor will go either to B Company, commanded by Capt. "Jack" Hayes, or D Company, commanded by Capt. Brown. Both Companies are said to show fine form.

Quiet But Pretty Wedding This Morning

A quiet but pretty wedding took place at Holloway St. parsonage this morning, when Miss Bertha Forge, of Sidney, was united in marriage to Mr. Edward Bush Spencer, of Grand Rapids, Michigan. The young couple were unattended. The bride wore a bridal veil of organdie, surmounted with a wreath of orange blossoms. After the impressive ceremony, which was performed by Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor of Holloway St. Church, the happy couple drove to the bride's home, the residence of Mr. James Forge, where with immediate friends, the happy couple partook of a dainty wedding breakfast. Amidst showers of congratulations and good wishes they left for their new home in Grand Rapids, by the International express, at 1.55.

B. of Q. Conference.

FINAL PUBLIC MEETING HELD YESTERDAY — SOME INTERESTING REPORTS.

Port Perry, June 11.—On Saturday evening, J. J. Saunders, M.D., D.D., lectured before the Theological Union on the relation of the religions of the east to Christianity.

The report of the Sabbath schools was presented by Mr. R. W. Clarke yesterday. It recommended that the whole adult part of the congregations be brought into this Bible studying service of the Church. Conversions increased over last year and there was also an increase in all the funds of and for the school. Rev. Dr. Henderson was warmly thanked for his sermon of yesterday. Rev. Dr. Briggs presented a report of the continued business success of the book room. Heartiest support was promised him in his able management. Rev. T. A. Moore addressed the Conference on behalf of the Lord's Day Alliance. Five hundred cases had been won on behalf of Sabbath observance. The bill called for no Sunday theatres, no Sunday papers printed in Canada or imported. Four thousand shops are open Sunday in the Dominion; 2,000 in Montreal and 500 in Winnipeg. The 60,000 laborers on the railroads will be reduced to 25,000, and these must have one day of rest a week if this bill passes. He deemed the so-called conscience clause as not practically what it is ostensibly. Though it be seemingly framed that Jews may work on the Sabbath, it will lead to the destruction of the Act as a whole.

The Rev. Dr. Hare reported the work of the Ontario Ladies' College. It has had a very successful year. On motion of Rev. G. W. Henderson and Dr. Shorey, continued confidence was expressed in the management of the institution.

The letter-writers were instructed to write to Rev. E. Roberts and other senior and afflicted members of Conference.

Rev John Bedford, transferred, briefly spoke as a new member of Conference.

A committee consisting of Rev. S. J. Shorey, D.D., J. A. McCamus, W. J. Crothers, D.D., Dr. Workman and Wm Ross, ex-M.P., was appointed to draft a memorial to the Dominion Parliament protesting against certain proposed amendments to the Sabbath observance act now before the House exempting certain parties from restrictions regarding Sabbath observance.

Dr. Burwash was heartily greeted as he presented a most satisfactory report of the year's work in Victoria University. It was felt that never was this institution so forceful and successful in the Church and in Ontario to-day.

The committee appointed to accord with the Canadian Methodist Historical Society was as follows; W. J. Crothers, D.D., R. Duke, D. O. Crossley, S. T. Bartlett, E. E. Howard

Mrs. W. W. Chown, of Belleville, addressed the Conference on behalf of the Women's Missionary Society on the occasion of its silver anniversary. Great progress has been made in the quarter of a century. About 40,000 members are enrolled in the auxiliaries and bands.

A memorial service was held at 4 o'clock to-day in connection with the deaths of O. R. Lambly, M.A., D. D., and T. J. Edmison, B.A., D.D. Words of respect were spoken by many members of Conference.

Thanks were tendered Port Perry banks for their courtesy in doing business for the Conference gratuitously.

STATISTICAL REPORT.

The statistical report was presented by Rev. W. P. Rogers. There are about 40,000 members and an increase of 225. 39,000 Sunday school scholars. $34,000 were raised for missions, an increase of nearly $3000. The total value of church property in the Conference is $1,800,000, an increase of $2,500,000 in the quadrennium.

To-night Rev. G. W. McColl, B. A., B.D., said that wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of the times. So Isaiah said, and it is an eternal principle.

Rev. Dr. Chown said the great purpose was the Christianizing of civilization.

This being the last public meeting of the Conference the friends of Port Perry were thanked for their kindness, the choir for its splendid services and the popular pastor, Rev. B. Greatrix, for his work in rendering the stay of the Conference so pleasant. He had already received a fine nomination for President.

WILL NATIONALIZE COAL AND OIL LANDS

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO WITHDRAW 40 MILLION ACRES OF PUBLIC DOMAIN AND KEEP FOR THE COUNTRY.

Washington, D. C., June 11.—Just as soon as he is through with the reorganization of the meat-packing industry of the country President Roosevelt will enter upon another task which may attract world-wide attention and lead to prolonged discussion in this country. He proposes the Government ownership of such coal and oil lands as have not already passed to private or corporate ownership. He will endeavor to prevent another acre of land having coal or petroleum deposits from passing out of the control of the Government so far as the fee is concerned.

With that end in view he designs to withdraw from entry about 40,000,000 acres of the public domain which has not been taken up.

Foreign Consuls Will Make Report.

AFTER INVESTIGATING CONDITIONS IN THE NOW NOTORIOUS PACKING HOUSES OF CHICAGO.

Chicago, June 12.—(Special)— Foreign Governments, through Chicago consuls, are to take a hand in the investigation of conditions of packing houses.

Alexander Zinn, British Consul in Chicago, has made a personal investigation of conditions in the packing plants, and will forward his report to London in a day or two.

This report is said to be generally favorable to the packers.

NO LOVE LOST SAYS A BISHOP

BRITISH PEOPLE IN GENERAL REGARD U. S. AS A NATION OF GRAFTERS.

New York, June 11. — The Times says: After a prolonged visit to England, the Continent and Egypt, Bishop Potter arrived home on the White Star liner Celtic yesterday. He appeared to be in excellent health, and talked freely on his stay abroad to the reporters who met him down the bay and at the pier. The Bishop explained what he meant when he told the pilgrims in London that the American eagle in Cairo "had his tail between his legs." He also said he feared there was not any too much affection between the United States and England.

"You can depend on it there is no love lost between the two countries," said the Bishop. "There is, I fear, a good deal of gush about it. The British idea of the United States is very vague. They have certain impressions that are unjust, and when I arrived over there on my way out I told them so. The more acute and serious do not think we are a lot of grafters, but that we are very easily tempted by gain. It's the general crowd that thinks of us otherwise."

Then the Bishop explained the "eagle with his tail between his legs" remark. "I think the idea in my mind on that occasion," he said, "was a condition in Cairo that irritated other Americans also, namely, the advertising of quack medicines and other things on the same order, with the use of the American flag. It was this, the use of our flag for advertising purposes, in contrast to the splendid achievements of the British Government in Egypt, that I meant."

Speaking of his trip the Bishop said:

"I spent my winter in Egypt, and was greatly impressed with the splendid achievements of the British administration of affairs there. It had been 30 years since I was in Egypt, and the change wrought in that time is indeed wonderful. No more brilliant jewel shines in the crown of Great Britain than her achievements in Egypt.

"On one occasion I was talking with Lord Cromer, and in the course of our talk it was mentioned how seldom it is that the mind of the Oriental changes, and to this observation Lord Cromer made this profound and astute reply: 'You can change the face of the land by canals and railroads, and you can improve the conditions of a people by introducing a better government, but you cannot change the mind of the Oriental in a quarter of a century. He will still think Orientally. This is the basic fact whcih we have got to remember in all our dealings with them.'"

What's the good of keeping from him
Any good things you may see,
That will lift his load of labor

Etiquette Among Forest Rangers.

While in the forest reserve in which we hunted I met several of the forest rangers, all of them intelligent men, some with college education, men who seemed peculiarly adapted to their calling, who knew the mountains thoroughly, handy with an ax and gun and full of resources. A degree of ethics obtained among the sportsmen, guides, trappers and forest rangers that was interesting. When any one goes to a deserted cabin, in most of which would be found food, bedding, a stove, etc., it is proper form for him to stay all night, eat all he can put away under his belt, if in dire need divide any supply of tobacco and matches he may find, but he must take away nothing else, since to carry off an article of little value, such as hammer, hatchet, pinchers, snow glasses, screw driver, fish hook, pipe or other similar article might inconvenience the owner greatly when he happened along and wanted them and was forty miles or more from a source of supply. If a belated wanderer fails to wash the dishes and leave a supply of dry wood sufficient to build a fire and cook a meal he is at once tabooed and his companionship is not sought after.

The Size of the Sun.

The sun, provided we measure only the disk seen with the smoked glass, is 866,000 miles in diameter—i. e., 108 earths could be comfortably ranged side by side across the disk. To cover the surface would require many thousands. To fill the interior we should need 1,300,000. On a smaller scale we might represent the sun by a ball two feet in diameter and the earth by a good sized grain of shot. Let the sun be hollowed out, then place the earth at its center and let the moon revolve about it at its real distance of 240,000 miles. There would yet remain nearly 200,000 miles of space between the moon's orbit and the inclosing shell of the sun. Indeed to journey from one side of the sun to the other, through the center, would take one of our swift express trains nearly two and a half years. So vast a globe must be heavy. Since its density is only one-quarter that of the earth it only weighs as much as 332,000 earths, or two octillions of tons. The attraction of gravity on its surface would cause a man whose weight was 150 pounds to weigh two tons.

Language In France.

There are several districts in France where the very ancient tongues still survive. Basque is spoken by about 100,000 persons, who are naturally proud of a language that is their exclusive possession, for it is unlike every other spoken tongue, and the assertion is commonly made that to understand it one must have learned it in the cradle. This peculiar property gives in the mind of the Basque people support to their belief that it was the language of Adam and Eve. The same claim is advanced, though, for Breton. The Romans when they conquered Gaul compared Breton to croaking of ravens. About a million people speak Breton. Then there are Flemish, still spoken by a comparatively small number in northeastern France, Catalan in the Pyrenees-Orientales and Languedoc and Provencal, whose gradual extinction has been delayed mainly by the efforts of a few literary enthusiasts.

THE MUTINOUS SPIRIT

Spreads in Russia and Eletzky Regiment Leads.

Leaves Barracks Over Failure of Military Authorities to Redeem Their Pledges Regarding Service Conditions—Revolt Threatens to Spread to the Rest of the Garrison—Police Chief Fired Upon, But Escaped.

Poltava, June 12.—An open mutiny has broken out in the Eletzky Regiment of Infantry over the failure of the military authorities to redeem their pledges regarding the amelioration of service conditions, made as a result of last fall's revolt.

The mutiny threatens to spread to the rest of the garrison. The police and a small force of loyal Cossacks here are utterly unable to cope with the mutineers, who are armed with rifles, and have a supply of ball cartridges. They left the barracks in a body Sunday afternoon and held a meeting in the public square, in which delegates from the Zesky Regiment of Infantry and the Artillery Brigade promised that these forces will join in the mutiny.

The chief of police, in advancing with the hope of dispersing the meeting, was fired at, but was not wounded. The horse of his Cossack orderly was killed. The Eletzky Regiment again left its barracks at midnight and marched with a band playing through the town to the non-commissioned officers' school, the members of which joined the mutineers. The latter, while returning to the barracks, disarmed and beat the policemen whom they met.

The public are greatly excited, anticipating that the revolutionists will seize the opportunity to inaugurate an armed revolt in support of the mutinous soldiers.

In Parliament.

St. Petersburg, June 12.—In order to forestall any attempt on the part of the Government to interrupt the work of Parliament before anything is accomplished, one member proposed at the opening of the Lower House session yesterday that the House adopt a resolution to continue its sittings until the agrarian, death penalty, and other importants questions are settled. President Mouromtzeff, however, declared the resolution out of order.

The debate on the agrarian question promises to continue throughout the week. There is little prospect that the bill will be ready for submission before July 1, at about which time it is the Government's intention to declare Parliament adjourned until September for summer vacation.

SELLS PART OF COBALT.

T. & N. O. Railway Gets $40,000 and Royalty on Minerals.

Toronto, June 12.—The Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway Commission has leased 27 acres of the southwest portion of the Town of Cobalt to the Townsite Mining Co.

The terms are $40,000 cash and a royalty on the ore mined of 25 per cent. up to $1,000 a ton, and 50 per cent. on ore exceeding that amount. The lease is for 999 years.

There are a few squatters on the land, and they will have to "skidoo." Another section of 40 acres in the northwest portion of the town will be disposed of in a few days.

Train Jumped the Track.

New York, June 12.—One man was killed and more than 20 other persons were injured yesterday when the locomotive and two cars of an Atlantic City express on the Connecticut Railway of New Jersey jumped the track at a switch at Eatontown, N. J. The dead man is George Vanduser, a vaudeville musician of New York.

Will Not Fight Extradition.

Montreal, June 12.—William Patterson, the Montreal lawyer who is acting for David Hobbs, the absconding C. P. R. customs agent, returned from New York yesterday, where Hobbs is under arrest, and states the reports about the intention of the prisoner to fight extradition are not correct. It is officially announced that the amount of restitution made by Mrs. Hobbs was $32,000. Since the announcement of Hobbs' troubles, his mother has died at her home in Montrose, Scotland, and Mrs. Hobbs is lying at the point of death in this city.

Writ Against Town of Kenora.

Toronto, June 12.—The Hudson Bay Co. has issued a write at Osgoode Hall, joining with the Keewatin Power Co., in a move to prevent the Town of Kenora using the east branch of the Winnipeg River for municipal power purposes. The power is said to be worth $200,000. The companies each claim to own half of the river bed, and they seek a declaration to this effect, and that a crown lease of the property to Kenora was invalid.

Smoot May Hold Seat Yet.

Washington, June 12.—The majority and minority reports of the committee on privileges and elections in the case of Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, were yesterday presented to the Senate, the former by Senator Burrows, declaring that Mr. Smoot is not entitled to his seat, and the latter by Senator Foraker, taking the opposite view. A vote of two-thirds will be necessary to vacate the seat of the Utah Senator.

SENATOR COX WAS BOSS

But Recouped Imperial Losses on Suggested Investments.

When Market Went Wrong He Made Up the Difference—Bank Overdraft Caused a Guarantee of Extra Two Per Cent. Interest—Senator Fulford's $100,000 Policy and Its Odd Provisions—To Stop Rebating.

Toronto, June 12.—Yesterday morning's evidence before the Insurance Commission was almost altogether an amplification of the testimony given on Friday. Mr. Bradshaw, of the Imperial Life Assurance Co., was again in the box, and he was questioned very closely by Mr. Tilley regarding the apparent domination of his company by Senator Cox.

Interesting Details.

Mr. Tilley, assistant examiner for the Dominion Government, brought out some interesting details, concerning the advances made by the Imperial Life to Mr. A. E. Ames through Senator Cox to relieve the broker of some of his financial difficulties. The other episode was the purchase of Toronto Savings & Loan debentures by the Imperial Life at the suggestion of Senator Cox, who controlled both companies. The company spent $71,000 on the four per cent. debentures at a time when it was paying the bank six per cent. upon an overdraft of $100,000. Senator Cox paid an extra two per cent. upon the debentures until the bank overdraft was wiped out.

Dropped $12,000 In a Year.

When court adjourned Mr. Bradshaw was telling of a policy for $25,000 issued on the life of Mr. A. E. Wallace, manager of the Atlas Loan Co., under an agreement by which the Imperial Life was to accept five Atlas Loan bonds for the first five premiums. Two of the bonds had been purchased when the company became insolvent and the policy on Mr. Wallace's life was cancelled. Including the Wallace transaction, witness admitted the Imperial had dropped $12,000 during the year.

In reference to his previous evidence, Mr. Bradshaw said that the loan made by the Imperial Life to Mr. J. W. Flavelle was after Mr. Flavelle had ceased to be vice-president of the company. The company had the right to buy the bonds and stock given as security for the loan, and this right was exercised.

Why the Senator Paid Loss.

Certain operation in Dominion Coal and Dominion Iron and Steel showed a loss of $11,000, which witness said was paid by Senator Cox on behalf of the company.

Senator Cox never was recompensed, said Mr. Bradshaw, because the company were under no obligation to him; he paid the loss over because he had suggested the investments.

Recouped by the Senator.

Mr. Bradshaw was closely examined by Mr. Tilley on the Imperial dealings in unauthorized securities at the afternoon session. Witness explained in detail the method by which certain stocks were handled in the books of the company. Senator Cox had several times recouped the company for certain losses on unauthorized stock.

Revaluative securities were gone into, and Mr. Bradshaw explained that since the department had objected, three or four years ago, the amounts of these securities were shown in the statement as non-ledger assets.

Mr. Tilley took up the case, whereby the Imperial Life became owners of Electrical Development bonds and stock. These bonds were bought at 90, with a bonus of stock. The stock was sold in 1904, and the bonds in 1906. These were treated as profit on investment.

Witness explained the agreement made in 1903 and told the commissioners that although the transaction did not appear in the statement the books containing the list of investments were inspected by the department. Mackenzie, Pellatt and Nicholl were the committee of managers, and the agreement called that all the stock be pooled in order to keep up the price. The Imperial Life afterwards dropped out.

Mr. Bradshaw did not believe that a company should tie up its money on an investment of this nature, and he had realized this shortly after the pool was floated.

Senator Fulford's Policy.

Certain transactions that were called to the attention of the commission by Mr. Blackadar were next submitted by Mr. Tilley. One was an item of reinsurance in connection with the Confederation Life.

"Has Senator Fulford's claim been paid yet?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No."

"What is the dispute?"

"I cannot say without prejudice to my case. It was a peculiar policy, and I don't think it should be enquired into at the present time."

Witness explained, however, that it was a contract involving the annual payment for twenty-five years of $3,750 after the Senator's death, the final payment in twenty-six years, also an annuity during life of the same amount. The company received a single payment of $100,000, which the Senator's estate was to get back at the end of twenty-five years.

"You reinsured it to the Confederation Life?"

"Yes."

"Will you show us the policy?"

"Yes."

"There was another contract similar to this for $35,000?"

Mr. Blackadar referred also to a loan of $250,000 to the Provident & Investment Mortgage Guarantee Co., in the Metropolitan Bank and International Trust Co. bonds. Mr. Bradshaw explained that there was a sinking fund in the hands of the National Trust Co. and $6,000 yearly was due on the contract.

Robert Hall, a loan agent at Winnipeg, was paid $3,000 a year. He had put $1,500,000 in loans through in seven and one-half years, and had only eight foreclosures.

A Good Risk.

After Mr. Tilley concluded, Mr. Langmuir asked the witness if the Telford policy was sound business.

"We had a guarantee back of that policy," said the witness. "From an actuarial standpoint it was not an investment, in my opinion, but a good risk."

Mr. Bradshaw said that from 1897 the company had turned over five millions of business. The actual cash loss was only $4,124. The assets were now $2,828,000.

The methods of rebating was gone into. The Imperial Life allowed 60 per cent. commission, and in some cases, when the whole of the commission on the first premium is rebated to the insurer, the agent got an extra 5 per cent. Some insurers carrying direct to the office were also given rebates by the officers of the company.

"We are opposed to rebates, but we are forced to give rebates because all companies do," said Mr. Bradshaw, "the evil can only be remedied by law."

Limit Cost of New Business.

The cost of new business in the Imperial Life took up 60 per cent. of the entire premium income for the year 1905. Premium income was $223,203, and it cost $139,609 to get the business. Renewal expense amounted to $70,068. Total expenses exceeded the loadings by over $100,000. This was incident especially to a new company and to many of the established companies.

Mr. Bradshaw said it was difficult to draw the line of first-year expenses. It had no limitations, but it would be desirable to limit the cost of new business.

"Why don't you increase the first-year's premium to cover the expenses?" asked Commissioner Kent.

"There is too much competition," answered the witness.

"That is just what I wanted you to say," said Mr. Kent.

ADVERSE TO CHURCH UNION.

Ridiculous Proposition Says Montreal Pastor—Presbyterianism Leads.

London, June 12.—"We are allowing ourselves to drift into a false position because we do not translate the words of Christ literally," shouted Rev. John McKay of Montreal in a red hot argument at the general assembly yesterday afternoon on church union. "When the Presbyterian Church stands first among the Christian churches, it is ridiculous to talk of church union," he asserted, and was loudly cheered.

Duncan Campbell of Armstrong ably seconded the efforts of Mr. McKay.

The subject was introduced by Rev. Principal Patrick, Winnipeg, who moved that the Presbyterians join hands with the Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists and Episcopalians. He talked strenuously for over an hour, and went into a detailed account of the length of charges for each pastor, and described the training of students and gave an exhaustive description of what would have to be done.

The church was packed, and Dr. Patrick was loudly cheered. The assembly seemed to cheer for and against with equal enthusiasm, according to the ability of the speakers.

About 6 o'clock the debate appeared to be going against the proposition for union of the churches. The debate will be resumed this morning.

Montreal was chosen for the next assembly, on the first Wednesday of June next, on the invitation presented by Mr. Walter Paul and Principal Scrimger. Erskine Church, of which Rev. Dr. Mowatt is the minister, will be the meeting place. Winnipeg also extended an invitation through Rev. Dr. Duval.

Great Sleuth Joins Majority

Inspector John Murray of Ontario Passes Away.

Veteran Sleuth's Life Was One of Adventure From the Beginning—Ran Away to Sea as a Boy—How He Began His Career as an Investigator of Criminals and How to Prevent Their Onslaughts on Society.

Toronto, June 13.—Inspector John Murray of the Ontario criminal investigation department died last evening at 7.30. The announcement was received with genuine regret. Detective Murray is survived by a married daughter, Mrs. William Boyd, of Cape Breton, C. B., and Miss Mary Murray, who lived at home.

Ran Away to Sea.

John Wilson Murray was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 25, 1840. He removed, with his family, to New York at the age of five years. Owing to his mother's poor health, he returned with her to Scotland when he was eleven, and attended school there. In 1653 he ran away from school, shipped on a coaster and landed at Liverpool. He ran across his father's ship and sailed with him for New York. He was again sent to school and again ran away. After sailing round the West Indies his father found him and brought him back to New York, and for the third time sent him to school. Young Murray languished through the winter months, and when spring came the spirit of unrest stirred him, and away he went back to the sea.

In the late spring he returned to the great lakes, and on June 5, 1857, he enlisted in the United States navy, where he stayed until the civil war broke out in 1861. He was 21, and the opportunity came for him to realize the ambition of his early years. There was a shortage of officers in the regular service, and Murray was picked as one of the likely young fellows to be sent on to the training school at Washington. He worked and studied faithfully, and when the examinations were held he received a commision. Murray served through the civil war and fought at Mobile. After the war was over he was ordered to the great lakes aboard the Michigan, and in 1866 he left the Michigan, and the service.

Beginning of a Career.

Detective Murray's first case, and the turning point of his whole career, was a wonderful story. The attempt of the Confederates in 1864 to capture the Michigan and take Johnson Island in Sandusky Bay, release 4,000 Confederates imprisoned there, set the island on fire, destroy Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo and strike terror into the heart of the north, was discovered by Murray, and it was he who unearthed the identity of the picturesque leader and was instrumental in frustrating the schemes so cunningly devised.

Then he decided to be a detective. He went to Washington as soon as the war was over and entered the United States secret service. He was then 26. In 1874 Murray received this telegram: "Come to Toronto. (Signed) O. Mowat."

He came to Toronto and was put on a counterfeiting case at Owen Sound. His work was eminently successful, and he returned to St. Thomas. Shortly after he received an appointment from the Provincial Government in 1875, and he has been in its employ ever since.

Murdered by Revolutionists.

Kutais, Trans-Caucasia, June 13.—M Shardpovsky, a marshal of nobility, was waylaid and murdered by revolutionists Monday.

TRIBUTE TO SIR HECTOR.

Leader of the Opposition and Sir Wilfrid Laurier Express Respect.

Ottawa, June 12.—At the opening of the House yesterday afternoon, R. L. Borden announced the death of Sir Hector Langevin and paid handsome tribute to his memory. Long before Confederation he had been a prominent figure in Quebec. He was a man of force and wielded a wide influence in public life. Although some irregularities had been discovered in his department nothing had ever been disclosed which reflected in any way upon his personal honor.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that he had sat in the House with Sir Hector for many years. In addition to the qualities mentioned by the leader of the Opposition, there was one other which the speaker well remembered, and that was his unfailing courtesy to the members of the House. He had tasted both the bitter and the sweet of life. He did good service to Canada. He may have been careless, but never dishonest.

"Although we fought him bitterly," said the Premier in conclusion, "we are glad to associate ourselves with any expression of respect for his memory and sympathy with his family and friends."

Before the orders of the day Hon. George Foster addressed the House respecting the Cinqmars case, and pleaded for a fair and impartial trial.

Mr. Fielding introduced his bill to change the fiscal year.

Grand Trunk Pacific.

In supply, the House discussed the estimates for the Grand Trunk Pacific. The surveys are completed from Edmundston, N. B., to Quebec. There has been no final decision as between the rival routes from Moncton to the sea. The line has been substantially determined between Moncton and Quebec, but the route has not yet been approved by the Governor-in-Council.

The Minister expressed his belief that the Government section of the G. T. P. would be completed within the time provided by law. The grade at no point exceeded four-tenths of one per cent., going east, and six tenths going west.

On motion to go into supply, Dr. Thompson (Yukon) pleaded for the statutes of the former Northwest Territory for the Yukon.

Mr. Fielding introduced his bill to amend the Currency Act. It permits the Government to redeem old and worn silver coin.

Western Cabinet at Ottawa.

Ottawa, June 13.—Nearly the whole of the Saskatchewan Cabinet is in the capital. Hon. Walter Scott, Premier, arrived here yesterday and met J. H. Lamont, Attorney-General, and Hon. Mr. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture and Provincial Secretary, who arrived previously. Premier Scott will be here several days and will confer with the Federal Government on matters which can better be determined by personal intercourse. Premier Rutherford of Alberta, who arrived east some time ago, will probably start for home today.

Dues From Mrs. Davies' Estate.

Toronto, June 13.—The Provincial Treasurer's Department has received a cheque for $10,000 on account of succession duties on the estate of the late Emma Davies, wife of Wm. Davies.

Troops at Niagara.

Camp Niagara, June 13.—Camp has opened and over 4,000 men have arrived. This is not up to the numerical strength of previous camps.

Grafting In Everything.

As time goes on it becomes more and more apparent that nearly everything connected with the government of Canada nowadays is permeated with graft. The latest instance comes to light in the matter of ice-breaking. Look at the Government tug the "Montcalm," employed in the Straits of Northumberland, for instance. Her outfit is on a scale even more luxurious than was that of the Arctic for the famous Hudson Bay cruise. The silverware on her table is the costliest to be procured, Teapots and sugar bowls at $40 each, and other lots in proportion. The ice-breaking crew "lived high," yet there were whole months in the season when no ice was broken, and no communication from shore to shore.

This was in the permanent service. For special hired work, as the London Free Press points out, $40 sugar bowls are not furnished to the men, but the pay is on a scale which would easily admit of such luxury. There is the little tug "Siskiwit," for example, of six horse-power register, the owners of which were commissioned to "cut ice" in Thunder Bay at $100 a day. Two other tugs, to wit, the "James Adams" and "Dudley," were employed in similar duty at the same price. The "Adams" is an old boat, and does not appear in the last Canadian register. She cannot be of much account as a sailing craft. Mr. Bennett, the member for East Simcoe, who brought these facts to the notice of the House of Commons, could not ascertain the horsepower of this vessel, but was advised that it was a standing joke at Port Arthur to see her running there. The third craft, the "Dudley," is not registered in Canada. Mr. Bennett was told that she was brought from the United States, and returned there.

The point of the matter is that these tugboats, of minimum horsepower, and requiring but two or three men to operate them, were paid for at the rate of $100 a day. Mr. Bennett enquired into the circumstances, found that the parties owning these boats are A. F. and C. A. Bowman and James Whalen, the latter being the son-in-law of Mr. James Conmee, the member from Port Arthur and Rainy River. What connection may exist between the nature of this proprietorship and the payment of $100 a day for the use of a tug boat of five or six horsepower is matter of conjecture only. But the magic of such names having demonstrated itself in provincial politics to the extent of a loan of two millions to the Soo industries, which included the Algoma Central Railway, in the unpaid contract for which these names were deeply involved, suggests more conjuring in regard to this ice breaking deal.

That Mr. James Conmee, M.P., was not directly a beneficiary is probable enough. But men of political influence with sons-in-law in active business are not unmindful of their interests when "casual advantages" are going in their line, and if such advantages are "all in the family" the result figures out much the same. There is a prevalent suspicion that Mr. Preston found it so, his son-in-law having been made chief adviser of the North Atlantic Trading Company, which gathered $300,000 of Dominion money in immigration bonuses, or more than the equivalent of $100 a day for a tug boat of five horse-power.

The Minister of Marine, Hon. Mr. Brodeur, tried to explain that the ice had to be cut in Thunder Bay to allow wheat to be sent out. But as the freight steamers run under full insurance until December 5, and this ice-breaking work ended on December 13, there could not have been call for much power to keep the channel open. A one horse-power tug might have done the business equally with a five horse-power.

No doubt the work might have been done at a cheaper rate had care been used in making the bargain. But it is found that no care was exercised at all. An official of the department journeyed 500 miles to engage the tugs, but did not see them. He only met some member of the grain exchange, and gave orders off-hand.
